The loss of the foreign market which Mr. FISH held up to the Omaha audience as a bogey man was the loss of a market in which farm products would be sold, without any offsetting compensation, at a price below the cost of production. The gentleman from New York features his Americanism. Does he favor the kind of Americanism under which American farmers would sell the products of their toil at a loss for the benefit of the inhabitants of European countries in order to keep a much-vaunted foreign market? Perhaps he does but Nebraska farmers do not.

In recent years progress has played havoc with what our fathers set down as basic truths. Science, invention, discovery have produced an entirely new basis of judgment. Our standards of living are founded upon amazing funds of new knowledge. We must develop a technique to bend our usages and customs to the betterment of us all. In such a society the multitude of separate processes must be controlled and organized into an industrial and agricultural system which is cooperative and mutually beneficial. It is a stupendous undertaking calling for an infinitude of adjustments which, when the separate parts are fitted together must make an orderly whole so comprehensive, so accurate, so detailed that the smallest as well as the greatest shall have his place in the American sun.

Mr. Fish speaks for the old order, which, through all history, has condemned the new. He speaks without the benefit of accredited statistical data, not on authority but on the basis of strict partisanship. As a member of that vast section of the heretofore ignored Middle West, I have risen to call your attention to the facts.

In closing I wish to comment upon the great meeting of farmers which has taken place in the city of Washington within the past 2 days. I direct attention to the sympathetic and wholesome reception given the farmers by the President of the United States at his home in the White House. That sympathy and that understanding is in direct contrast with the treatment received by the farmers of this country at the hands of the party which Mr. FISH would seek to re-establish in power in Washington.

My State is nearly 2,000 miles from the Capital of the Nation, and yet 64 farmers from that State, at their own expense or with the help of the contributions of a few neighbors, left their farms in their busiest season and came to Washington, not to enter any protest, but for the sole purpose of expressing to the President and to the Congress their appreciation of what has been done for them by the farm legislative program of the Roosevelt administration, and to petition for a continuance of that program.

I submit to the Congress and to the people of the United States that the answer to the charge of the distinguished gentleman from New York, that the interests of the agricultural Middle West and of agriculture generally are not being protected and safeguarded by the Roosevelt administration, is contained in the story of the pilgrimage of the 4,000 farmers who came to Washington this week at great personal sacrifice to voice directly to the President their approval of the administration farm program, and to ask for its continuance. That answer is final and conclusive. [Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, it is with a certain amount of trepidation that I take the floor today to discuss the appropriations that have been made by this Congress and those that were made by the last Congress. I am aware that it is the policy of the opposition party when they have no case and no legitimate argument to call names, and I expect that when I have told the truth about those appropriations that will be the answer.

I have in mind the address of that chief apologist for the administration who, day before yesterday, delivered a brain trust speech which he drew out of the table one section at a time. I have in mind the recent speech of the Chief Executive of this Nation who lost control of himself because he was not ready to take the facts as they were in accordance with the pledge he gave to the people of this country at the time of his inauguration. [Applause.] You and I will remember that he told us he was going to try experiments and when the experiments failed he was going to drop them and try something else; yet, when evidence of the failure of those experiments is called to his attention the answer is not in accordance with his promise, to drop those experiments, but the answer is to call names.

I think the people of this country should know what is being done to them from a financial standpoint. In what I have to say today I am going to pay particular attention to the figures that give the people a picture of just what is being done to them and just how those operations are standing in the way of recovery and actually preventing recovery. I shall try to call to your attention just exactly what the situation is and how in one way or another in a subtle fashion our friends, whether intentionally or not, actually have misrepresented that situation to the American people.

In order that this may appear more clearly in the RECORD than perhaps I shall be able to give it on the floor, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain tables and certain graphs and charts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. In the first place I want to take up the regular appropriations that were made last year and this year, and I am going to assume in this respect that the appropriation for the legislative establishment of the Government is going to be just as it was reported to the House by the committee.

Last year our appropriations in the independent offices bill were $666,490,969; this year they were $846,792,365, an increase of $179,000,000, or approximately 30 percent.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is it not a fact that the greater portion of this increase is due to the restoration of salaries?

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; not in that bill. It is due very largely to increased operations and additional employees, and to the restoration of pensions, and that sort of thing, almost all of which were made by the Executive himself by regulation.

Mr. ARNOLD. What particular bill does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. TABER. The particular bill to which I had reference was the independent offices bill.

Mr. ARNOLD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the next one is the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which has not as yet gone through conference, but I am going to make an estimate as to what I believe it will be, considering what has happened so far. Last year the total appropriations in this bill were $36,584,000; this year, $42,760,000, an increase of over $6,000,000.

The Treasury and Post Office Department appropriation bill last year carried a total of $2,237,089,000; this year, $2,434,926,000. In this connection may I say that I am including in the regular annual bill the estimates covering the permanent appropriations which accompanied the report of each subcommittee submitted to the House. This was an increase of $197,837,000. I should say that probably half of this increase was due to the restoration of salaries.

The next bill that I have is the War Department appropriation bill, which carried a total for 1935 of $328,054,000; for this year, $376,803,000, or an increase of $48,000,000.

The Interior Department appropriation bill carried last year a total of $63,119,000; this year, $78,122,000.

The Agricultural Department appropriation bill carried total appropriations of $63,662,000 last year and $125,150,000 this year, an increase of $62,000,000.

The Navy Department appropriation bill last year carried a total of $286,523,000; this year, $461,344,000, an increase of $174,000,000, or something like 60 percent.

The legislative bill last year carried total appropriations amounting to $18,233,000; this year $20,355,965, or an increase of $1,884,934.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield there for the purpose of clarification? I would like to explain this increase.

Mr. TABER. This year?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. TABER. In the legislative bill?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. TABER. I will be glad to have the gentleman explain it.

Mr. LUDLOW. I would like to restate here what I said to the House previously. The amount carried in the bill is $1,884,934 more than the total of the appropriations of the legislative establishment for 1935, but this increase is more apparent than real, as $1,000,000 of it, while appearing as an appropriation, is in fact a loan to the working capital of the Government Printing Office and is to be repaid in its entirety to the United States Treasury within 6 months after the close of the next fiscal year. Then, too, the amount required to restore salaries to the 100-percent level, as heretofore provided by act of Congress, adds approximately $1,380,000 to the 1935 appropriations, so that if we eliminate from consideration the loan to the working fund of the Government Printing Office and the increase of salaries to normal the total appropriations for the legislative establishment for 1936 show an actual net decrease of $495,066 below the total appropriations for 1935. In other words, barring statutory salary requirements and this loan to the Government Printing Office, we have actually accomplished a decrease of $495,066 compared with the legislative appropriations for the fiscal year 1935.

I thank the gentleman for allowing me to make the statement, which is in exact accordance with the facts.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is not only one of the able leaders of his party but he has been on the Appropriations Committee so many years that he exercises a tremendous influence there, and he usually has his way about things in that committee. If there are all of these increases appearing in those bills, with which he has had much to do in bringing them before the House for attention, is he assuming the responsibility?

Mr. TABER. Oh, no. The Republican membership on the Appropriations Committee has been put at 11 as against about 28 Democrats, if I remember correctly, and the minority has not very much of an influence in working out these appropriations. In a general way in the committee it is possible for an individual Member to cut down some items and to handle things in such a way as to reduce certain items as far as possible, but the way things are done now the responsibility for the set-up is entirely upon the Executive. If the Executive embarks upon a large and extravagant program, it is absolutely impossible for the ordinary Member of Congress on the minority side to have a major influence in cutting down these figures. You may be able to cut down small amounts. You may be able to cut down on a certain bill, say, three, four, five, or six million dollars; and in some cases, as was done by the committee in connection with the Navy bill, $24,000,000 or $25,000,000 out of the $480,000,000 estimated.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman knows that on numerous occasions, and recently, too, he has taken the bull by the horns and taken charge of things here on the floor. He has led not only his minority but we Democrats have followed him on several of his good fights. If these things are wrong, why has not the gentleman led us right?

Mr. TABER. I have done the best I could in the committee, and I think everyone who has served with me on any subcommittee will testify that I have tried to reduce appropriations as much as possible. Of course, when I can get what looks like quite a substantial reduction in the committee, and I go out on the floor and butt my head against a stone wall, I am not going to do that. I would like to see a lot of things done that have not been done. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], no more than I, always gets his way about how big appropriations ought to be. The gentleman has always stood for saving money, and I have too, but you cannot get everything you want on the floor of the House.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman tell us the number of these appropriation bills he has voted against at this session of Congress?

Mr. TABER. Oh, I do not remember that I have voted against any of these regular bills. I may have voted against one of them, but I would not be sure.

Mr. ARNOLD. I think the gentleman voted for all of them.

Mr. TABER. I would not say that I voted against any of them, but I will say that insofar as I have been able to exert my influence upon the other members of the subcommittees I have been on, I have always tried my very best to keep down appropriations, and the gentleman can testify to that with respect to the committees on which I have served with him.

Mr. ARNOLD. I want to testify to that now. The gentleman from New York has been a most valuable man on the subcommittees on which we have been together [applause], and I am sure that the gentleman from New York likewise knows that the chairman of the subcommittee on which he serves has gone along with him as far as possible in the interest of the Treasury.

Mr. TABER. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have served with him on the Appropriations Committee for a long time. I have served with him on the Treasury-Post Office Subcommittee and on the Deficiency Subcommittee for the last three sessions, and the gentleman from Illinois has done the very best he could to keep down the expenses of government. There is not any question but what the gentleman from Illinois is what we call a "cutter" on the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. ARNOLD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. And the gentleman from Indiana, who is now asking me to yield to him, is a good cutter.

Mr. LUDLOW. If the gentleman will indulge me a moment, since we are passing out tributes, I wish to add my personal tribute to what the gentleman from Illinois has said in regard to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. The gentleman from New York is one of the ablest and most useful Members of this Congress. In the Committee on Appropriations politics stands adjourned, and the gentleman from New York and the other members of the committee do their duty and under their conscience seek to serve their country and do not allow politics to enter. The gentleman is a very valuable, useful member, who performs his duties as a member of the Appropriations Committee in the light of what he believes is the public interest. He is one of the most sincere and effective champions of economy in this Congress, and to my way of thinking that is a high tribute. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. ENGEL. If there are so many good cutters on the committee, why did they not do some cutting—were the knives dull?

Mr. TABER. We have done a very considerable amount of cutting in the Appropriations Committee when you consider the size of the estimates that were submitted from the Bureau of the Budget. If the gentleman will look at the estimates as they came in, he will see that there has always been a very considerable amount of cutting. Even on this bill, which totals a modest sum as compared with the other measures, the Budget estimates for 1936 were $22,000,000.

Mr. LUDLOW. Nearly $23,000,000, as a matter of fact.

Mr. TABER. Yes; $22,946,000, and the committee recommended, according to the figures I have here—

Mr. LUDLOW. If the gentleman will pardon me, I have the figures, $20,355,965 appropriated, as against $22,946,105 in the Budget estimate.

I may add, if the gentleman will further permit, it is the smallest of all the appropriation bills, so that I think the cut we were able to make is quite impressive.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman from Michigan will see that the committee has cut the estimates and I think it is fair to say that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS], as well as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], and the other members of the subcommittee, did their best to bring about these results and even on this small bill they were able to make a cut of 12 percent and a little better.

So far as the Committee on Appropriations' record is concerned in the cutting of appropriations I do not think the Congress has very much to be ashamed of, but if you have a program laid out and sent down for you to follow, it is exceedingly difficult to go beyond what has been laid out, as we see it here.

There is one other bill I did not mention—the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor bill. The figure for that bill last year was approximately $67,000,000 and for this year $73,000,000, an increase of $6,714,000.

When I throw my figures together I am going to put them all in one place and put these interruptions all together in accordance with the consent which I have received.

The total for last year was $3,776,778,745. The total that we are appropriating in this Congress under the regular bills is $4,454,000,000, an increase of approximately $700,000,000.

The following table shows the work of this session and the last:

This year we had the large relief bill of $4,880,000,000. Eight hundred and eighty million dollars of this amount came from the R. F. C. and from some other old appropriations.

But as they could not be used for the particular purpose to which they are now being put, I feel that they should be added to what Congress actually did, because that is money that will be spent.

Now, the thing I cannot understand is this: According to the daily Treasury statement, the best figures I can get, the revenue of the Government will run up to approximately $3,100,000,000, exclusive of the processing tax, which I call extra revenue.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Does the gentleman know this: We are supposed to be economizing in Government expenses, and a Democratic Senator is authority for this statement, that last year $486,000,000 appropriated for a different purpose was used to carry on the Government?

Mr. TABER. That is correct. I have not the figures in my head, but that is approximately correct.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Four hundred and eighty-six million dollars was used, and that next year we will be told during the campaign by the Democratic spellbinders that the administration has reduced Government expenses by 25 or 30 percent.

Mr. TABER. Of course, the expenses for Government are very markedly increased.

The appropriations for last year's session of Congress run approximately to $7,500,000,000. The total of this session of Congress will run almost exactly to $10,430,836,785.64.

The regular revenue tax for the current year 1935 is going to run about $3,100,000,000, and the revenue from the processing tax will amount to $500,000,000, a total of $3,600,000,000.

You have got about $3,600,000,000 revenue to set against seven and a half billion dollars of appropriations.

Next year, with no increase in taxes in sight, we have ten billion and nearly a half appropriations, and we have in sight less than $4,000,000,000 of revenue.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. I know the gentleman wants to be fair. Out of these appropriations the Government has made large loans, and that money will be coming back. Can the gentleman give us the amount of money that has been loaned from these extraordinary expenditures, so that we can see what part of the increased appropriations will be coming back?

Mr. TABER. I do not think there is any money to come back out of the items that I have enumerated which were appropriated last year. I should say—of course, it is entirely a guess—I would say that perhaps somewhere between five and six hundred million dollars might be expected to come back out of the funds appropriated this year. I do not know of any other appropriations that we have made that would be apt to come back.

Mr. ARNOLD. Of course, out of the last Public Works bill it is impossible to say now how much has been loaned and how much will come back, but has not the gentleman taken into consideration twice the $880,000,000 which was appropriated last year and reappropriated this year? That appears twice, does it not?

Mr. TABER. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. TABER. I said when I made my statement that the $880,000,000 was a reappropriation or an opening up of the appropriation through some other channel than had previously been opened. Five hundred million dollars of it was out of the funds of the R. F. C., which had been authorized a couple of years ago, and $380,000,000 was out of other funds, a large portion of which was appropriated in the calendar year 1933, and a small portion of which was appropriated in the calendar year 1934.

Mr. ARNOLD. But at any rate it should not be included in appropriations of money for both those years.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; it should not. The amount that would come out of the 1934 figure would be small. I do not think any of the seven and a half billion dollars of the 1934 appropriations, except possibly the item of about $200,000,000 for farm loans and home-loan bank stock, ought to be considered as anything that would come back.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not for any controversial proposition, because I appreciate the gentleman's position, and if I were going to disagree with him in whole or in part I would do it in my own time; but is it not the gentleman's opinion, or has the gentleman an opinion as to something coming back for example, from our C. C. C., by way of improvements. Has the gentleman any views as to that?

Mr. TABER. No. I would say from observations that I have been able to make, that I doubt very much anything of that kind.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not mean in the sense of money coming back, but I mean in the improvements to the country, such as reforestation. Will not the country receive in the future some benefits rather than the immediate payment back in the way of money?

Mr. TABER. That is problematical.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Has the gentleman in his computation made any calculation as to how much will be reimbursable to the Public Treasury under the 30-70 rule of the Public Works Administration, whereby the Federal Government grants 30 percent but is supposed to have returnable 70 percent from the State or the municipality?

Mr. TABER. It will not be a terrifically large amount. Grants to municipalities have run a total of $692,000,000, of which $138,000,000 is still unexpended, and the maximum that could be returned under the practice that has been applied would be 70 percent, or about $400,000,000. This money was almost all appropriated in 1933.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman refers to $692,000,000 as grants?

Mr. TABER. Grants and loans. I am taking my information from the daily Treasury statement.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman referred to grants?

Mr. TABER. Grants and loans, it says. Assuming 30 percent of those were loans—

Mr. ARNOLD. But 30 percent are grants and 70 percent loans.

Mr. TABER. Oh, 70 percent are loans? That would be approximately $450,000,000 that might come back out of that, but how much out of that has already been spent no one could tell without definite figures, and I have not them.

During all this time the number of employees has been increasing by leaps and bounds. The following table shows the picture and the increases down to as late a date as possible. The 1935 figure is as of March 31:

Number of employees under Civil Service Commission

Inside District of Columbia	71,189	69,435	66,000	71,054	93,322	97,388
Outside District of Columbia	489,267	501,933	504,000	506,116	586,859	587,530
Total	560,456	571,368	570,000	577,170	680,181	684,918

NOTE.—The Post Office Department figure given in the civil-service report of number of employees is 257,172. The number actually employed, according to information received from Mr. Uttley's office and from Mr. Biedenweg's office by phone, is 278,616.

At the present time the grand total as of the 1st of May, according to my understanding, is 690,000. That is more or less of an estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. TABER. At the end of March, it was 684,918, but those figures I am somewhat inclined to believe are an underestimate, because I got from the Civil Service Commission the number of employees in the Post Office Department as 257,172, but over the telephone from the Post Office Department I got the number of employees there as 278,616, indicating 20,000 more than the Civil Service Commission reported.

Mr. ARNOLD. That is probably due to first-, second-, and third-class postmasters, and other positions not strictly civil service.

Mr. TABER. The third- and fourth-class postmasters are all listed with the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. ARNOLD. The first, second, and third are not.

Mr. TABER. The first, second, and third are all a part of the result of ratings given by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. ARNOLD. Only fourth-class postmasters are under strict civil service, and that is all the gentleman would get from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. TABER. But they would be governmental employees, just the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss a number of matters that have come before this body. Unfortunately, I find that a particular gentleman seems to take personal issue with me at every opportunity, and no matter how meritorious the immigration legislation proposed may be, he finds time to object to it. In addition to objecting to it, he makes a very fine speech the next day in which he brands me as one who believes in an open-door policy of immigration. He is a bugaboo in this House when we talk about immigration. He seems to get a number of people to applaud him. I venture to say if I asked any one of those people for what they were applauding, or what the gentleman said, they would not know, neither would they know fully the contents of the law or the import of the bill objected to.

I have been in this House for seven terms. I do not think I have crossed swords with any Members on this floor. I have tried to maintain myself as a gentleman and as an American, and in 13 years I do not think I have objected to any proper, honest consent for consideration by this body.

Since this Congress was organized, as Chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I have really and honestly tried to bring about better and more understandable law, not only from the standpoint of the immigrant but also to help assimilate the many thousands of aliens in the United States, so that we can make them citizens of our great country.

After a careful survey made by me and the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization we found a number of aliens who were stranded in the United States who were begging to go home and stay home; so this committee, after careful consideration, voted out certain bills which would relieve this situation.

I will take up those bills one at a time later, although I originally started to discuss the question from a different angle.

Last Friday afternoon I presented a resolution to this House and asked for its immediate consideration. That resolution purported to admit into the United States without payment of the usual fees a number of Boy Scouts of foreign countries, to participate in a great celebration that is going to take place in Washington.

I went to the majority leader, the minority leader, and to the Speaker. I thought I spoke to the entire leadership of the House. Apparently that is not all the leadership in this House; I did not speak to my good friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. So I offered this measure in honest good faith. Although this resolution was not going to bring in any aliens, the gentleman objected to its consideration. That was his right. I am not quarreling with him. He had a right to object, because I had asked unanimous consent. I have no quarrel with the gentleman or any other gentleman or lady who desires to make objection to a unanimous-consent request.

My objection goes further than that. My good friend—and that is not by way of criticism—Mr. Chairman, I want to present my viewpoint as I see it without any interruption at this time—my good friend objected and said he was afraid that more Emma Goldmans would come into the country, and more Communists might come in, and he threatened this Congress by claiming 100,000 aliens would be brought in if the resolution were passed in that particular form. Now, the gentleman from Texas had a right to object. If he thought that Emma Goldman had a little boy 12 years old, who as a Boy Scout was coming to this jamboree, and that his mother was coming with him; if that is the reason he objected, then I am glad he objected. Under that resolution not only the Boy Scout might come in, but his mother might accompany him to the United States. If the gentleman from Texas thought that Mr. Berkman, another anarchist, had a little boy 12 years of age, who as a Boy Scout might bring his father with him, then the gentleman had a right to object. But surely that was not the purpose of the objection in the mind of my good friend. He objected to it because I was the author of the resolution. He objected to it because he, for some reason or other, does not seem to agree with some of my policies on immigration. He objected to it because he has a bill before my committee. Under his bill he wants to suspend all immigration for 10 years.

Now, that would not be so bad, but under that bill he would almost prevent diplomats coming into this country. It would place a big fence around the United States. It would stop everybody going and coming. This country would violate treaties with other countries dealing with immigration. That bill is a blanket indictment to close the doors for 10 years, without even making an exception to allow the child of an American citizen or the wife of an American citizen to join the father or husband in the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I refuse to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that under the rules of the House no speaker has the right to question the purpose of any Member in the performance of his duty. The present speaker stated that I objected to the Boy Scout resolution simply because he was the author of it, which is absolutely false, as false as it can be. There is not a word of truth in it. When the gentleman questions my purpose he ought to be fair enough to yield. He has not any right to say I objected to it because he was the author, when I objected to it because it needed amendment. I went before his committee and his committee unanimously put in the amendments that I proposed. The committee unanimously did so. And since his committee properly amended his bill by properly safeguarding it, I am now supporting it, even though he is the author of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will proceed in order.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the particular bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], that I was referring to, had careful consideration by the committee, and after it had listened to representatives for the administration, and to a number of men and women who as restrictionists opposed that bill, the committee did not see fit to report it out.

The gentleman has a petition on the desk to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill. He has obtained 18 signatures. How many of these 18 men who have signed, actually know what the purpose of that bill is? Do these men know that they are putting a fence around the United States through which there can be neither entrance nor exit? Are these the same men who applaud the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] for every wisecrack he makes on the floor of the House?

I want to give respect to every man and woman, including the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]; but, Mr. Chairman, I am not here to judge his conduct; I am here to judge my own.

Now, Mr. Chairman, reverting to the Boy Scout resolution, the President of the United States is the honorary president of the Boy Scouts of America, and in a radio speech he made February 8, 1935, he invited the Boy Scouts of the world to participate in a jamboree which will take place in Washington very shortly, as follows:

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S INVITATION FEBRUARY 8, 1935

President Head and members of the Boy Scouts, the year 1935 marks the twenty-fifth birthday celebration of the Boy Scouts of America. During these years the value of our organization in building character and in training for citizenship has made itself a vital factor in the life of America. That is why not only the Boy Scouts of today, but the millions of men and boys who have graduated through scouting, will be joined by millions of other Americans in the proper marking and celebration of our anniversary.

* * * The outstanding event will be America's first national jamboree, to be held here in the city of Washington from August 21 to August 30. I hope to attend it in person. Since I extended the invitation a year ago, definite plans have crystallized. With the cooperation of various officials here in Washington a fine camp site has been made available and will be all ready to receive 30,000 boys when the meeting starts. I am glad to know that the selection of these boys is being made on the basis of merit and, furthermore, that in many cases these boys will come to Washington at the expense of the troop, and not merely because the boy's economic situation in life is such as to make it possible for his parents to send him.

Thirty thousand scouts brought together under such conditions will mean the most thoroughly representative group of American boys ever mobilized for a purpose of this character.

We hope, too, that other countries will send at least small delegations to meet with us on this occasion. Because scouting is now in active operation in almost every civilized nation of the world, this will give us a splendid opportunity to enlarge our basis of mutual respect, of understanding, and of friendship among the people of the world regardless of race or creed. * * *

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,

Honorary President, Boy Scouts of America.

May I say that the resolution which I offered last Friday was not drawn by me, nor am I the author. It was requested by the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America, and the State Department, the Labor Department, and Treasury Department had expressed approval of its purposes before it had been presented to me for introduction. I sought to have this resolution passed pursuant to the President's proclamation.

It is being a little inconsistent to uphold the President on one day and not uphold him on another day. I have heard gentlemen on this floor talk about upholding the President. This is just exactly what the President wants. He has invited the Boy Scouts of the world to participate in this celebration, the first of its kind ever held in the city of Washington, and which will take place during the coming summer.

In order to carry out the program, I offered this resolution. It was in the form of an invitation to the foreign Boy Scouts and their parents or guardians. The gentleman from Texas objected to its consideration. This action resulted in my being compelled to apply to the Rules Committee, and I am advised that a rule will be considered tomorrow by that committee. In the meantime the arrangements are being delayed.

Mr. Chairman, I do not see any objection to a young Boy Scout coming from France or any other country accompanied by his mother or guardian. The sole objection, so it was stated, was that it would allow a certain number of people to get into this country, hordes and hordes of aliens, as the gentleman said. I am for him. I do not think criminal aliens belong here. I think we ought to get rid of them.

May I say to the gentleman from Texas that if he wants to help I will show him how we can get rid of the aliens in the United States and find jobs for the Americans that he talks about, but he will not help me. All of the members of the Immigration Committee are honest-to-goodness, hard-working members. They are trying to do a good job, but up until the present time the immigration laws have been butchered because we have never gone into the details and essence of family life as it relates to the immigration policy of this country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not going to get into this exchange between the two gentlemen, and I do not want my remarks to be misunderstood. I am interested, however, in what the gentleman said about the department that drafted this resolution. Which department drafted the resolution?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The resolution was given to me as having the original approval of the department. Which department had the final word, I do not know.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman did not draft it himself?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. I just carried out a request made upon me as Chairman of the Immigration Committee, because it had to come before my committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand that. The gentleman did not draft it himself. I am not saying how I may vote on it, because that is an entirely different question, but it seems to me that answers any statement that may be made about the gentleman drafting the resolution himself.

Mr. Chairman, for whatever value my observation may have, may I say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], are two of the most valuable Members of the House. In saying that I believe I speak the mind of every Member here. If in the future, instead of these violent exchanges between them, there would be that impersonal exchange even in opposition, it would more completely reflect the true state of mind of both the distinguished gentlemen.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I just heard the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] were two of the most distinguished Members of Congress, or something to that effect. The gentleman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY] and I are sitting here, and we want to be in that class, too.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Both the gentleman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN] are in that class.

Mr. Chairman, may I say further along these lines that this is no reflection upon my good friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], because he sees the problem one way and I see it another way.

We have been working now for the past 2 months on a bill to clear up the Communist question, which was drafted as a result of the very important work done by the Committee on Un-American Activities. We are trying to rid this country of every alien who does not like this country. We want to send everyone home and make them stay home.

We propose to bring before the House some very constructive legislation. We propose also to add a number of sections to our deportation law which presently do not exist. For instance, under the present immigration law a dope peddler who has committed a crime in one of the various States cannot be deported. He is an alien dope peddler, yet he cannot be deported. An alien gunman who commits a violation and the worst sort of a crime cannot be deported. We are bringing in legislation, and with your cooperation we will get rid of the racketeer alien, the gunman, and the dope peddler, but at the same time would not you, even those of you who are restrictionists, like to see the little son or daughter of an American citizen reunited with their parents? Do you not think we ought to have some humanity in the law that will give some power to some Government official to take care of the alien who has committed no wrong whatever, who has been in this country almost 20 years, but, because some inspector of immigration finds he did not pay a head tax when he came in he is subject to deportation, whereas the racketeer, the gunman, and the dope peddler cannot be deported?

You cannot deport a habitual criminal alien who commits crime day in and day out, year in and year out; why? In order to deport him, under the present law, you have to prove that he has been guilty of two felonies involving moral turpitude, each with a conviction and a sentence of 1 year and a day.

We propose by this law, that irrespective of whether a man is guilty of two felonies involving moral turpitude if he has shown a tendency to be a habitual criminal, to send him back to his native land and keep him there. This is what I call constructive legislation.

Mr. Chairman, about a year ago, the Commissioner from the Philippine Islands, who is present here to bear me witness, came before my committee and stated that there are a number of Filipinos who are stranded in the United States who want to go back to the Philippine Islands and stay there. They are presently on the relief rolls; they are presently taking the jobs of American citizens, when they can find them. They want to go back home and stay there and my committee heard the gentlemen from the Philippine Islands and we heard from the departments, the Federation of Labor, and the patriotic organizations—every one of them supported this request of the Commissioners from the Philippine Islands. I introduced the bill because I was asked to introduce it. I had no alternative, one way or the other, and when I brought this bill on the floor of the House with a unanimous report from the committee it was objected to. Why? Because we would have taken out 30,000 Filipinos and once for all had them stay home. Am I right, Mr. Commissioner?

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then we have another situation. Under our present law an alien who has come to this country, and finds himself stranded within 3 years after entry, if he wants to return to his native land and stay there, may file an application with the Commissioner of Immigration.

I found hundreds of aliens who are on the relief rolls today, not only in my city but in your cities, who want to go back to their native lands. One month and a half of relief funds would take them back to their native lands. That would keep them there because they would have to sign a pauper's application and could not come back under any circumstances.

I was prepared to take from the relief rolls of your State and mine, including also the State of Texas, probably several hundred thousands of aliens of this kind and send them back to their native lands. Would it not be worth while to send them back, inasmuch as we would have to support them anyway? That bill would repatriate them and give jobs to the American people. That bill was not only supported by the Federation of Labor, by the American Legion, by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, but by every known organization that usually comes before my committee, and when I brought it out on the floor in an effort to repatriate these hundreds of thousands of aliens who, I agree with the gentleman from Texas, are holding down American jobs, my good friend from Texas and a few more leaders of the Third House objected to it. We have a Third House here.

Mr. MARCANTONIO and Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Whom are you referring to as the Third House?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not belong to any Third House—I am in the First House.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. What is the gentleman referring to as the Third House? Is the gentleman referring to a group of Members in this House who believe in voting independently?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I am referring to a certain bloc that will object to anything no matter how meritorious it is, unless you go to them in advance, quietly, secretly, and satisfy their scruples that everything is hunky-dory; otherwise, you are out of luck, irrespective of whether the minority leader is satisfied or the majority leader is satisfied or the Speaker is satisfied.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I do not belong in that class.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I do not put anybody in that class. I am simply trying to give you a picture.

The gentleman from Texas, Mr. BLANTON, during the present session of Congress on the floor of the House, has been consistent in his objection to the regular procedure for the consideration of bills before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The burden of his speeches has been a plea to deport aliens and keep out aliens and thereby make places for American workmen. Judging from the RECORD, let us see if he really has been consistent.

On February 4, 1935, this House had up for consideration H. R. 67, the primary purpose of which was to make places for American seamen on American ships. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. BLANTON, did not object to consideration of this bill, but on the other hand any effort on his part to support the bill or to make any speeches in favor of it is not in the RECORD. This bill was for American workmen, but Mr. BLANTON did not speak in favor of it. However, the bill passed the House.

On February 18, 1935, and again on March 4, 1935, an opportunity was given to this House to consider H. R. 3472 and House Joint Resolution 71. These two bills combined would have relieved American communities of the burden of public care of a great many aliens and Filipinos whom the Government cannot now deport. But in the case of both of these bills, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], objected, and as a result of his objection consideration of them on the Consent Calendar is barred for the balance of this session. These bills were for the American workman. The gentleman from Texas refused to let the House consider them.

On March 4, 1935, an effort was made to consider H. R. 5839, but the gentleman from Texas not only objected to its consideration but erroneously charged me with the authorship of a bill enacted during the previous Congress upon which he says Emma Goldman was permitted to come back here. I may say to Mr. BLANTON that the evidence submitted to our committee during public hearings clearly indicated that the basis for the permission granted Emma Goldman to reenter the United States for a temporary visit was a provision of the Immigration Act of 1917, long before I was in Congress and long before the present Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization was in office.

When I attempted to secure permission to speak on the floor to explain this situation to the gentleman from Texas, on March 4th, he objected to my having the time.

On or about the 25th of February last, Mr. BLANTON told this House that he placed a petition on the Speaker's table the purpose of which was to discharge the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization from further consideration of his bill, H. R. 2733. On the floor of the House last Monday, the gentleman from Texas made a speech regarding immigration subjects, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD account of that speech indicates that he told the House that 18 Members had signed that petition. As I have previously stated, I don't think that this needs any further comment.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I am a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs and I am very much interested in what the gentleman had to say about 20,000 Filipinos who are anxious to go back home.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. STEFAN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that these 30,000 Filipinos are now on relief and we would be relieved of this expense if we would send them back?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There are at least two or three hundred thousand such people on relief. I simply said there were 30,000 stranded Filipinos in the United States, in Chicago, San Francisco, Philadelphia, and New York, who had indicated a desire to go back to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman knows that the Filipinos are citizens of the United States, and why would they not be permitted to come back?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Under certain laws, rules, and regulations they would have to sign papers or affidavits that makes them indefinitely and distinctly a public charge. They could not under the law of 1917, section 3, come back, because they are classified as persons liable to become a public charge. Filipinos, generally, are not citizens of the United States.

Mr. STEFAN. Then if we send them back to the Philippines they cannot come back to the United States.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Positively not, and I will put in some kind of a safeguard if you want me to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. They could not come back under the quota restrictions.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; that is an answer to the question by the gentleman from Nebraska. The gentleman from Nebraska asked me if they could not come back, and my good friend from Tennessee, the fine ranking Republican member of the committee, states that we have now a quota for the Philippine Islands, which is 50, and they could not possibly return.

Mr. STEFAN. Many Members are interested in that limitation. Does not the gentleman believe that the objection was made because Members believed that this was only a trip back home, and that they would return again to the United States?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to say to the gentleman that we will make sure that they do not return.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with many of the things the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] has said. If these 30,000 Filipinos who are living in the United States on charity, at the expense of American taxpayers, want to go back to their native land, they should be sent back; provided, of course, that the gentleman is sure that they cannot come back. That they do not merely want American taxpayers to pay for their trip back home free of charge and then get an opportunity to come back whenever they wish. The Commissioner from the Philippines, Senor GUEVARA, has just informed me about the Philippine quota matter and assured me that these people can be stopped from coming back here so I am in agreement with the gentleman from New York.

I am more interested in keeping families united in our country than the gentleman can realize. I am glad that the Chairman of the Immigration Committee is joining us in trying to help these families. I am going to vote for the gentleman's bill which calls for the aid of foreign-born people who have lived here many years and through some technicality have had their naturalization papers taken away from them. I have one very sad case of this kind in my district—the Third District of Nebraska—which I plead for at this time. There undoubtedly are others. This is the case of Mr. Theodore Goeres of Osmond, Nebr. He has lived in this country many years. He has lived in my State many years. He has contributed much to the welfare of his community, State, and Nation. He has raised a fine family and commands the respect of his neighbors and friends. He is a good, honest, upright citizen. A man whom I am proud to call my friend and fellow citizen.

Yet in the older age of his life he suddenly is told that some technical error was made by him when his papers were taken out many years ago and these citizenship papers were taken away from him. I want him and other good people protected and their citizenship papers given back to them, and I am happy that the distinguished Chairman of the Immigration Committee will help champion the cause of these worthy people who know no other country than our country and yet find themselves people without a country. I shall do my utmost to help the gentleman from New York pass his bill to protect these people. I join with the gentleman from New York in the determination that alien racketeers, alien dope peddlers, alien gunmen, and the like should be eliminated from our midst, and protection and relief be given to fine people like my friend Mr. Goeres, of Nebraska, so that through some technicality their citizenship will not be lost to them.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. When a man is right, he is right. Sometimes I find that my friend from Texas, Mr. BLANTON, is right; but the most of the time, so far as I see it, he is wrong.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman is looking at it through his own eyes, from his viewpoint. When I look it over through my eyes, the gentleman from New York is wrong all of the time on immigration matters.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I cannot use the eyes of the gentleman from Texas—if I did I would probably see something different. We do not have cows in New York City; we do not have farms.

Mr. BOYLAN. Oh, I want to correct the gentleman. We have a farm on Manhattan Island. There is one farm left.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. One farm left. Now, what are these whispers around Capitol Hill that I am such a liberal that I am prepared to let all immigrants in? I want to say this, that in the 13 years I have been in the House I have advocated and preached to both parties, Republicans and Democrats, that they could not at election time put in their platform that they are in favor of uniting families of American citizens, and then, when they get into power, separate those families by miles and miles. I am for the union of families. I believe that if we went into Texas, in some districts we would have the church agree with us. I have said all these 13 years that we have no right to separate a man from his wife. [Applause.] You and I have no right to separate children, but you did it in 1924 when under the National Origins Act you cut the quota down to about 154,000, and gave three countries alone over 70 percent of this quota; you gave Germany, Great Britain, and the Irish Free State about 110,000 of this quota and thereby froze out people in almost 60 other countries from the right to be united with their families in America.

In the last census from the Department of Commerce I find that there has been sent to Europe almost $300,000,000 by citizens and aliens in the United States to support their immediate family relations abroad. Why should not these relatives be brought here? Why should not we unite these families? Why should not we stimulate the thought that they could have their wives and children with them just as you and I? If you do not want that kind of a program, then, for God's sake, do not let them come here at all, but when you let them come here and they comply with our laws, I say that it is our duty to unite them. I agree with you that we do not want any more immigration. I agree with you that we ought to be more selective in our immigration. I agree with you that we ought to assimilate the masses of our people, but do not think when I bring in an immigration bill that I have any ulterior motive in my mind.

I am trying to do the best I can for my country, the same country as Mr. BLANTON's and Mr. BOYLAN's and the rest of you. I see the things perhaps better than you do. I have seen books written by great authors; they write about an immigrant, and they never saw an immigrant, and that reminds me of a story, if I may be indulged for a couple of minutes. There was an immigrant who got rich. Originally he was a poor immigrant. When he got rich he wanted a painting of his father. He went to a great artist and said that he would like to have him paint his father's picture. The artist asked him if he had a painting of his father or a picture, and he said no, that he had never had a picture; and the artist then told the man to give him a photograph. But the man said that his father never had a photograph taken. Then the artist asked the man to describe him, and the man did. The artist then painted the picture, and he brought home to this rich immigrant a magnificent painting. The man looked at it and admired it, and finally said, "My, how father has changed." [Laughter.]

Some people talk about things they do not know anything about. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to ask my friend Mr. GUEVARA, the Commissioner from the Philippine Islands, if he will permit me, whether it is not a fact that there are now in the United States about 60,000 Filipinos who are here lawfully?

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes; that is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And being here lawfully, they would have a right to go and get a passport and go home and come back.

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes; they can come back.

Mr. BLANTON. And if they have money, it would be very easy to go down here and get a passport, and if the man is worth $50,000 he can get a passport and go home and then come back again.

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; and that is what I am getting at. Those who are here lawfully can get a passport and go home and come back. A few of us here have been studying this question for years. I have been studying it for 18 years. The best evidence we have on the question, which we get from all sources, is that for every Filipino who is here lawfully, who has come in lawfully, you will find at least two who have come here unlawfully and who are still here.

Mr. RABAUT rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I have not time to yield. Commissioner GUEVARA has just admitted there are 60,000 Filipinos here lawfully, and that means there are 120,000 Filipinos who are here unlawfully.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I cannot yield, as I have not the time. I want to use my own time. The bill which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] proposed to pass was a bill not to send all those 60,000 Filipinos back who are here lawfully. Oh, no. He was going to pick out 30,000 of them and send them back and pay their way, and leave the remaining 30,000 Filipinos who are here lawfully still here, many being well-to-do financially, and would leave also the other 120,000 Filipinos here who are here unlawfully. We got an estimate that it would cost to send those 30,000 Filipinos back about $900,000, or $30 apiece. And then they will not stay put. They will find a way of coming back.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, I cannot yield. If I refer to any colleague, I will gladly yield. My colleagues must use their own time. That bill meant that the huge sum of $900,000 would be spent to send homesick Filipinos home for a trip, with nothing worth while accomplished. You would find most of them coming back here, if not lawfully, then unlawfully. They are crossing from Mexico, across the Rio Grande River, into the United States. They get in easily that way. That river for several hundred miles in certain seasons of the year is so low one can get across it. You do not have to have an international bridge. Then they come to the west coast by an exchange from boats at sea. Just as many Japanese have gotten into the United States that way.

Now, let me tell you something about the Boy Scout bill that came up here the other day. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] said that I had a perfect right to object to that bill. I did have a right to object to it and I did object to it, but that evening he gave the newspapers a vicious attack upon me. That is what started all this business. I have enough Irish in me that when anyone attacks me they start something. If he had not given out that attack, there would have been nothing said by me about it. I pursued my rights as a Representative. I tried to get in touch with him Saturday. He was not here; he was in New York, they told me. I tried to get in touch with him Monday. His friends told me he was still in New York, but his committee met without him on schedule time. His committee sent me notice they would have a hearing on this bill.

Why did I object to the bill? Because he introduced it? Oh, no. I appeared before his committee at their hearings while he was in New York and presented my objections to the bill. The national officer of the American Boy Scout organization was present and, as I was leaving the hearing, he accosted me and told me that he agreed with my position in the matter and that he wanted the bill safeguarded with the amendments I had suggested to the committee.

Our distinguished colleague from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] acted for the committee in reporting the amended measure, and I quote from his Report No. 887, filed May 14, 1935, accompanying this House Joint Resolution 285, introduced by Chairman DICKSTEIN, the following:

The committee amendments are as follows:

1. On page 1, in line 3, after the word "alien", insert the words "Boy Scout."
2. On page 1, line 3, after the comma following the word "participants", strike out the words "officials, and other" and in lieu thereof insert the words "Boy Scout officials, and Boy Scout executives, who are."
3. On page 1, in lines 5 and 6, after the numerals "1935", strike out the comma and the words "and members of the immediate families of the foregoing."

After mentioning the fact that representatives for the Visa Division of the Department of State, for the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Labor, and for the Bureau of Customs of the Treasury Department all appeared before the committee, I quote from the said committee report the following:

The committee amendments meet with the approval of those same representatives and also with the representatives of the Boy Scouts of America.

Now that the bill has been properly amended by the committee, I am going to support it even though it has the name of Dickstein on it as its author, hence this is proof of the inaccuracy of the preceding speech. I wanted some language changed in that bill and I did get it changed. His entire committee, while he was in New York, while they were unhampered by him, unanimously voted for these amendments, and that bill right now is properly amended, and I will vote for it whenever he asks unanimous consent to bring it up, because it is properly safeguarded. He does not need a rule. So far as I am concerned, he can get it up now by unanimous consent.

Here is what I wanted changed. The bill, as introduced, reads: "That alien participants"—and, as amended, it reads: "Alien Boy Scout participants." That is a good amendment. It shows that they must be Boy Scouts.

Then I objected to the word "officials", because almost anybody can come in here under that name "official." I have found that out. I asked the committee to change that word "official", and the committee unanimously changed it. The bill now reads, as amended unanimously by the committee: "Boy Scout officials", to show that they must be Boy Scout officials and not some other kind of officials.

Then I wanted "Boy Scout executives" put in there, and they put this language in: "and Boy Scout executives who are accredited members of", and so forth. That was a wise amendment that was put in there unanimously by the committee of which our distinguished colleague from New York [Mrs. O'DAY] is an able member.

Now, here is another objection I had. I objected to the words in the bill as Chairman DICKSTEIN introduced it, which read, "and members of the immediate families of all of the foregoing", as ones also allowed to come here. Why, you could have brought a horde of immigrants here from Greece, from Italy, from Czechoslovakia, from the Philippines, from Japan, from Russia, from every part of the world.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. We cannot hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Perhaps the gentleman's constituents back in his district will hear me, because they read this RECORD. I am getting letters and telegrams every day from New York City saying, "BLANTON, keep up your fight to restrict immigration in this country. We are with you. We Americans who came from foreign countries and who are Americans now want aliens kept out." I am getting them from New York, from Philadelphia, if you please, from Chicago, from Cleveland, and from San Francisco, and from many other places in the United States.

Now, did they change this family business? Yes; they did. They struck out every bit of that language. The words "and members of the immediate families of the foregoing" are not now in the bill, for the committee took them out. The gentleman's committee unanimously did that. Now, it is a good bill and now I am supporting it, even though it is still the Dickstein bill. So what is all this hullabaloo about?

The gentleman has the greatest chance to do valuable service to the American people that was ever placed in the hands of any Member of Congress. He is Chairman of the great Committee on Immigration. He has a chance to stop this immigration. He has a chance to stop aliens from coming from foreign countries. He has a chance to pass a bill, if he wants to, to deport from this country millions of aliens who are here unlawfully and who ought to get out of here and who ought to give up jobs that American citizens need.

I wish you would read the last speech of my colleague from Texas [Mr. DIES]. Until recently he was a member of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague [Mr. DIES] is one of the best posted men on this subject in this House. He served on this committee several years. He has studied the question just as I have, and he will tell you that from investigations we have made there are in the United States at least 3,500,000 aliens who are here unlawfully. They ought not to be here. They got in here just like Bruno Hauptmann did. They have come unlawfully and they are staying unlawfully. They are taking jobs away from your American constituents and mine.

Then there are 6,500,000 additional aliens here who are here lawfully. Many have been here for years and do not want to be citizens. If you could get those 10,000,000 aliens out of the United States who are here lawfully and unlawfully, who either have American jobs or are on relief, you would have an American job for every unemployed American in the United States.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentleman yield right there for just a question?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I want my friend to take his own time.

I am sorry I have not the time. I cannot yield. I want the gentleman to settle his west coast question to the satisfaction of his own constituents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Why do you suppose the gentleman from New York does not stop immigration? Something is the matter. If he wanted to do it, he could do it. Why do you suppose he does not stop it? Why do you suppose this little bill I have got, which I am going to read into the RECORD, was not reported out? Why do you suppose the chairman, Mr.

DICKSTEIN, put it in his "dead house" last session? He said he put it "in his dead house." Why did he put it in his "dead house" this session? Why does he not bring it in here and pass it? It would stop immigration for 10 years. It is because he does not want to do it.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman. I did not mention the Irish. I left Ireland out of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas again declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. My bill is short, and I will read it.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the period of 10 years beginning 30 days after the enactment of this act, the immigration of all aliens into the United States is prohibited.

SEC. 2. The Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. The provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws, and shall be enforced as a part of such laws; and all the penal or other provisions of such laws, not inapplicable, shall apply to and be enforced in connection with the provisions of this act.

Is there anything wrong with that? Your people back home can understand it, my people can understand it. Just why is it that the committee does not want to pass it? Chairman DICKSTEIN does not want to pass it or to stop immigration. He wants to reunite families. Why, MARTIN DIES got the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] to admit here on this floor about a month or so ago that in his district in New York, which is populated largely by aliens, in his district in New York there is not a single family that has a relative abroad; he has been able, under the laws he has gotten passed here, to bring into the United States every member of the families of his constituents. I am not satisfied with it. I am tired of seeing Americans walk the streets hungry, without jobs. I am tired of seeing their wives and little children go underfed and underclothed and without shelter over their heads and without sufficient warmth in the wintertime. I want American jobs for Americans.

I have a great university in my home city, the Harding-Simmons University, at Abilene, Tex. They have the finest cowboy band in the world. Their band is known internationally. Their band has given concerts all over Europe and all over Mexico. They are going to take a trip abroad next month as soon as the university closes. I made application for them through the State Department for permission to land in England. I got a letter the other day from the State Department saying that Great Britain refused to let them land. Great Britain said there were too many musicians there without jobs; that they could not allow any musicians, even though American schoolboy musicians—they could not allow even a university cowboy band to land in Great Britain—they were musicians.

Mr. BLANTON. Now I will take that other 5 minutes promised me by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes, but can he not yield to some of these gentlemen who wish to interrogate him?

Mr. BLANTON. I will try to yield.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my good friend from the Pacific coast.

Mr. KRAMER. My dear friend from Texas knows that we have a bill pending to send back certain Filipinos.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish the gentleman would ask me his question.

Mr. KRAMER. I say the gentleman knows we have a bill pending to send back certain Filipinos.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. KRAMER. I want to know if the gentleman is going to support that bill.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am not going to support that bill until it is properly amended and safeguarded.

Mr. KRAMER. It sends people out of the country; it will result in giving American jobs to Americans, the thing the gentleman is urging today.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but these Filipinos will come back and the $900,000 will be wasted. I am not going to support that bill until it is amended properly to safeguard our American unemployed. Then I will support it.

Mr. KRAMER. Is not the gentleman interested in saving American jobs for Americans?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; but it will not do it. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further to my friend. I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman stated there were 3,500,000 aliens in this country illegally.

Mr. BLANTON. Those are figures we have arrived at by careful investigation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did the gentleman find them in the United States census report?

Mr. BLANTON. No; because the United States census does not know a thing in the world about unlawful aliens, because they deal only with lawful aliens who come here regularly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What superior authority can there be?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield to the gentleman to make an argument. I want to answer the gentleman's question. We should require all aliens to register, and then we could check them accurately. I called up Daniel MacCormack, our Immigration Commissioner, and asked him to tell me how many aliens there were here unlawfully. He said, "Mr. BLANTON, nobody knows." He said, "It is all a guess." He said, "We do not take a census of them; we do not have any way of checking them; we get the census of those who are here lawfully. You have got just as much right to make an accurate guess at it as I have."

That is the truth. We have been watching this question, have been making a careful check-up on it through the instrumentalities of different organizations interested in stopping immigration to our country, and the best evidence we have today is that there are at least 3,500,000 aliens here unlawfully, and I honestly believe there is double that amount.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am sorry; I have not the time.

I want to refer to a statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] which he made in his speech. He tried to reflect upon the men who have signed my petition on the Clerk's desk to discharge his committee so we can pass my bill to stop immigration for 10 years. He said, "Who are these men who signed?" And he said they did not know what was in my bill. They are not the kind of men who sign unless they know what they are signing. I will give him the names of three of them. One of them is the Chairman of this Subcommittee on Appropriations, who framed this legislative appropriation bill, and who now has charge of it on this floor, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] whom I consider one of the ablest, and most valuable men in the House. Another Member who signed the petition is the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who is the Chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and who is one of the strongest men in this House. Another is my distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], the author of the famous Patman bill, and who is known everywhere all over the United States. And the other signers are men like the ones I have named, loyal Americans who want American jobs saved for Americans.

The gentleman from New York said:

You cannot deport an habitual criminal alien who commits crime day in and day out, year in and year out.

Why cannot you do it? It is because he does not pass a bill to permit us to do it. We could do it, if he would pass a bill to do it.

The gentleman said that aliens sent $300,000,000 to Europe to take care of their relatives in the old country. That is what we want to stop them from doing. We want this $300,000,000 these aliens have made by holding jobs here to go into the pockets of Americans. We want the Americans to hold the jobs and to use this $300,000,000 to support American families.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] said something about Communists.

The first speech ever made on the floor of the House against communism since the war started in April 1917 was made by myself.

You will find where I got after the American Federation of Labor and our old friend, Sam Gompers, and told them they ought to get rid of William Z. Foster, one of the greatest anarchists in the United States, who at that time had written a book on Syndicalism. He said that during the war if there was a trainload of wheat destined, for instance, to New York, that the railroad men ought to send it to Portland, Oreg., and lose it; and if it caught fire out there so much the better. That was the kind of syndicalism he preached. I told them that they must get rid of him and every other anarchist and Communist in the country. He was worse than some foreign-born anarchist or Communist, for he was boring from within.

The American Federation of Labor finally did get rid of Foster and kicked him out. I want to ask my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], is he with me and the other gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] in getting the Communists out of the country?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. No.

Mr. BLANTON. No; because the gentleman sympathizes with them.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No. Because he did take up for what happened in New Mexico. I am in favor of getting the Communists out of the country, and I am in favor of keeping them out.

(Mr. BLANTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY].

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Texas has convinced everyone that he is against immigration and that aliens should be deported. However, I would like to inquire now why he objected to my bill to deport 40,000 Filipinos who are over here. They are not aliens. They are wards of our Nation, though not citizens. He referred to a number who are worth $50,000 and, of course, they may not want to go back to their own country; but the 20,000 or 30,000 who are on relief do want to go back. At a cost of 1½ months' relief we can pay their way back to their own country, and their own country wants them. Our committee has been told that the Legislature of the Philippine Islands has already taken steps to make an appropriation to repay us for the expenditure we are put to in sending these men and women back to their own country.

Mr. BLANTON. If they do that, I will vote for the gentlewoman's bill.

Mrs. O'DAY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. O'DAY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KRAMER. In California we have on the relief rolls Filipinos and it is costing us about $150,000 a month. We would save this amount by sending the men back. That is why I wanted to convince the gentleman from Texas that it is worth while sending these men back. If there is no one to take their place insofar as jobs are concerned, we would still save that amount of relief.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And that bill bears my name.

Mr. KRAMER. It is immaterial whether it bears the gentleman's name or somebody else's name. It is a step in the right direction and the gentleman from Texas was advocating the same thing.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And there is another bill reported out to repatriate several hundred thousand who are on the relief rolls and who want to go back to their native land. That bill was objected to on the floor by certain gentlemen.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentlewoman yield, since she mentioned my name?

Mrs. O'DAY. I should not because the gentleman would not yield to me awhile ago, but I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I would have yielded gladly, had I mentioned my colleague in debate. One unlawful alien now here is awfully anxious to go back to his native country. That is Bruno Hauptmann, and law and order are going to send him back to where he belongs by way of the electric chair.

Mrs. O'DAY. He is not a Filipino, and he is not a Boy Scout. I was speaking of the Filipinos.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentlewoman 2 additional minutes.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, the Boy Scout bill that the gentleman from Texas objects to would not bring over any aliens who intend to remain here. Each troop would be composed of 32 boys, and, so far as we know, only 27 countries are going to send troops over. The gentleman from Texas in the committee meetings said that he disapproved of the bill because at the last Olympic games some 50,000 aliens absconded from their own countries and remained over here. We asked the gentleman where he got the figures, and he stated, "Why, it is general knowledge." As a matter of fact, I have made inquiry of the Immigration Department, and I find there is no foundation whatsoever for the statement that the gentleman from Texas made.

Mr. BLANTON. The Immigration Bureau knows little of unlawful aliens here. That was information that we had through other watchful organizations that are trying to keep aliens out of this country. These aliens were not Olympic-game participants. They were aliens who got in here through the wide-open, all-embracing provisions of the Olympic-games legislation.

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. O'DAY. I yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Is it not true that the gentlewoman from New York is an authority on immigration because of her great work in the settlements of New York? I consider her so.

Mrs. O'DAY. I may say that I was vice chairman of a committee on immigration which made a survey of the law and of the practices under a former administration; consequently I do know something about the matter.

Mr. Chairman, my distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] having convinced the House of his opposition to aliens residing lawfully in the United States, his opposition to the admission of any aliens for 10 years to come, and having declared his hope that all aliens could be deported, so that their jobs might be given to native-born citizens, perhaps will answer this question: Why did he oppose the Dickstein bill, introduced by me, to repatriate 20,000 Filipinos now in this country and on its relief rolls?

These Filipinos are anxious to return to their own country, and the United States can transport them at the cost of what is now being paid out for less than 2 months' expenditure for their relief. The Naturalization and Immigration Committee is informed that the Philippine Legislature is already taking steps toward an appropriation that will reimburse the United States for moneys expended in transporting them. Consequently their repatriation will cost our Government nothing. On the contrary, it will effect a great economy. My colleague from Texas fears that when times are better these 20,000 will return to the United States. That will be quite impossible, for under our new quota law the entrance of Filipino immigrants is now limited to 50 a year.

Had he read the bill when he objected to it?

My colleague from Texas has just spoken of the proposed bill on the admission of the foreign Boy Scouts who have been invited by the American Boy Scouts to hold their annual international jamboree in Washington in August.

At a public hearing he stated his disapproval of such an international gathering on the grounds that the United States should extend no hospitality to nationals of any country that had not paid their war debts to us.

Surely he would not hold these boys, who are under 18 years of age, responsible for the fulfillment of treaties made by their governments before they were born. Surely the gentleman from Texas believes in the promotion of good will between the nations of the world. The Boy Scouts as an organization is one of the most effective instruments in bringing this about.

He fears that it affords an opportunity for the legal entry of aliens who might manage to evade our laws and remain illegally.

The high character of the organization of the Boy Scouts should be sufficient guaranty that his fears are groundless.

At present the number of aliens leaving the country, either voluntarily or by deportation, is far greater than the number coming in. The greatly reduced quotas are not filled, so we who are native born will have the opportunity as never before of helping the aliens who are here legally to understand our laws and our government, and to prepare them for intelligent citizenship.

Our immigration laws under the last administration were construed to permit most cruel and inhumane separation of families. Alien parents were deported to their native lands, which in many cases were under a new sovereignty, while their native-born children remained here to become public charges. Incredible hardships were imposed upon innocent people, and the members of the Immigration and Naturalization Committee in endeavoring to prevent the recurrence of such brutality are in no way changing the existing quotas nor adding to the number of aliens already here.

I do not share the fears of the gentleman from Texas that our Government can be undermined by the aliens who are now in the country, even if some of them are here illegally pending the efforts of the Labor Department to have bills passed under which they may be deported.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to ask my colleague the gentleman from Texas just when and under what circumstances he or anybody else is going to return Bruno Hauptman?

Mr. BLANTON. We, the citizens of the United States, are going to return him through the electric chair to the place he belongs.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman says, "We are going to do it." The State of New Jersey is going to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. The State of New Jersey is a part of the American system of government.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is a part of traditional Jersey justice.

Mr. BLANTON. I admit that, but it was Federal money largely that worked up the case that convicted him, and Federal agents who caught him.

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; the Legislature of New Jersey appropriated the money.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, a question was addressed to me by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] as to whether or not I would join him in a movement to deport Communists, and my answer was "no." My answer is still "no."

I do not believe in the deportation of any man or woman because of the political principles that they hold. Irrespective of what a person advocates, he or she should not be molested, because our Government has been based upon the principles of freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion, and freedom of thought.

I disagree with the Communists. I emphatically do not agree with them, but they have a perfect right to speak and to advocate communism. I maintain that the moment we deprive those with whom we extremely disagree of their right to freedom of speech, the next thing that will happen is that our own right of freedom of speech will be taken away from us. Freedom of speech, if it means anything, means freedom of speech for everyone and not for only those who agree with us or who are in the majority. The founders of our Nation intended freedom of speech to mean freedom of speech for all, especially for the smaller minorities. They keenly felt the necessity for this protection. They had been persecuted by Tories and reactionaries. Then they were called "rebels" and hounded by bigots and suppressionists of that day. Today the brothers of the Tories of 1776 would abolish what the rebels of 1776 have given us—freedom of speech.

American institutions are too sound for us to be afraid of any preachings from anyone. In London, in Hyde Park, they are permitted to talk all they want. At Union Square in New York on May 1 they had a demonstration with 100,000 Communists present. They were permitted to talk, and, because of the fact they were permitted to talk, there was not a single act of violence or a single arrest.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I decline to yield, as I have only a few seconds left.

I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that we in America should adhere to the fundamental principles laid down in the first 10 amendments of the Constitution of the United States. Our progress, our very civilization, is based on freedom of speech, freedom of thought, freedom of the press, and freedom of religion, and for this reason I am opposed to deporting anybody, irrespective of what they may preach. I further submit that, in taking this position, I am just as good an American as the gentleman from Texas, if not better. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL].

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to take issue with my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], when he voices opposition to the suggestion made to deport alien Communists, and I shall have to agree with my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], when he advocates the deportation of alien Communists from this country.

We cannot deport citizens of our own country, and when we deport Communists they are citizens of another country. They should go back to the country of their nativity if they do not believe in our principles of government or if they are not willing to live peaceably under our form of government or change it in the only legal manner possible through the use of the ballot rather than the use of the bullet, which they advocate. [Applause.]

I think it is high time we were strengthening our laws to provide for the wholesale deportation of alien Communists out of this country if they are deportable, because they constantly endeavor to undermine our Government and seek to make our country like Soviet Russia. It is high time for us to stop temporizing with this class, and to deal with them as dangerous enemies of our country, which they are. If we do not do so, we may be forging the chains of slavery for our children and our children's children.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, April 8, 1935, at 4 p. m., the President of the United States approved Joint Resolution 117, making appropriations for relief purposes. The resolution specifically states—

That in order to provide relief, work relief, and to increase employment by providing for useful projects, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President, to be immediately available and to remain available until June 30, 1937, the sum of $4,000,000,000.

The resolution further provides that for the Civilian Conservation Corps $600,000,000 of the $4,000,000,000 fund may be used.

March 31, 1933, the President signed the relief and reforestation bill. The program called for the transfer of some 250,000 young men from city streets and the homes of families on relief to outdoor camps in forests and parks. During the last 2 years the authorized strength of the corps gradually increased to 353,000 C. C. men, 14,861 Indians, approximately 4,000 residents of Alaska, Hawaii, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico. The President now proposes to increase the enrollment of the C. C. camps to 600,000 men, to be housed in approximately 2,916 camps located in forest, park, and field. Director Fechner, in his April 5, 1935, report to the President, says:

Approximately 1,070,000 men had been given employment through April 1, 1935. Of this number, about 940,000 have been young men between the ages of 18 and 25 years, war veterans, and locally enrolled experienced men. Approximately 32,000 Indians and 8,000 territorial enrollees have been on the Emergency Conservation Work pay roll at one time or another.

We are further informed this movement has solved the unemployment problem among foresters 100 percent, and that to date approximately 25,000 foresters, technicians, and technical foremen have been employed for from 6 months to more than a year. It is my understanding that up to April 1, 1935, cash allowances earned by enrolled men in Emergency Conservation Work amounted to approximately $214,000,000, and of this amount about $205,000,000 by men in barracks, of which they allotted home approximately $160,000,000 to needy dependents, and that since July 1933 about 300,000 families of enrolled men have received checks each month, and that more than 3,000,000 people have benefited directly from Civilian Conservation Corps monthly checks. More than 100 types of projects have been carried on. Among work projects completed by C. C. C. men through January 31, 1935, we are informed are the following:

New telephone lines.....	miles.....	29,787
Telephone lines maintained.....	do.....	43,234

Director Fechner also informs us that funds have been obligated through February 28, 1935, to—

Pay, members.....	$203,600,124.00
Pay, civilians.....	56,319,230.47
Shelter.....	35,489,608.67

Miscellaneous.....	34,707,073.40
Land.....	24,110,033.73
Total.....	651,087,085.29

A break-down of these figures would clearly indicate the great ramification of expenditures involved in this $651,000,000 and the total sum speaks for itself as measured by the work accomplished and services rendered. Quoting from Director Fechner's report we find—

A Nation-wide educational program was adopted a year ago with the Office of Education of the Interior Department acting in an advisory capacity.

Classes are conducted in all camps, and some 1,500 school teachers have had positions with the camp educational program.

Mr. Chairman, I have submitted these facts to inform the Members of the breadth and depth of this C. C. C. program. I call the attention of the Members to the fact that we have been discussing the program which started out with an enrollment of 250,000 men, while the new program calls for an enrollment of 600,000 men. We are mindful of the fact that the original act approved March 31, 1933, was an emergency act which was to continue for a period of only 2 years. However, it would appear that the growth and popular approval of the C. C. C. program has caused it to take on the complexion of a more or less permanent institution for the physical, spiritual, mental, and political training of the young men of the Nation, particularly those who, between the ages of 18 to 28, may be classified as the "unemployed."

Section 1, Public Act No. 5, of the Seventy-third Congress provides, among other things—

That, in employing citizens for the purposes of this act, no discrimination shall be made on account of race, color, or creed.

No reference is here made to political belief.

In the original concept of the C. C. C. movement it was recognized that during the period from 18 to 25 years of age, a man builds much of his philosophy of life. Whether he be engaged in constructive work, in the pursuit of his school studies, or spending his time in and about institutions of crime, it is recognized he generally does not rise above his environment. Thus, the idle youth of the Nation called attention to the fact that something must be done in order to prevent a great loss of human values, staggering costs for the future in the fighting of crime and the general damage which will surely follow a life of idleness. Now, we find our program calling for the concentration of the idle youth of our land in these C. C. C. camps. The young man is still subject to his environment. The spiritual, mental, physical, and political influences thrown about these young men will determine very largely the measure of the man which emanates from the C. C. C. camps. This responsibility cannot be denied, neither can it be avoided.

Thus the C. C. C. camps become missionary training schools. Hitler has his training schools. Mussolini has his training schools, and in the United States we have our C. C. C. camps. Charles Morrow Wilson in speaking of "Troopers of the Fog" said, "The company of 200 had three college graduates and about 20 high-school graduates. Eighteen of the crew signed their names with an X. Educational resources appeared to average somewhere near the sixth-grade common school. Somewhere near 40 percent of the crew had never held a job before." With raw timber of this class I need not remind the Members of this body of the fertile field these C. C. C. camps are for good and bad teaching, for partisan and nonpartisan doctrines, for the training of missionaries.

What of the leadership for these camps? Where and how does the administration, charged with the responsibility of spending through the C. C. C. program another $600,000,000, propose to select these camp leaders? Leaders for what—leaders for a C. C. C. army of more than 4,000,000 of young men between the ages of 18 to 28 years, with educational resources about the average of the sixth-grade common school? Four millions of young men to be recruited from unemployment, from the dens of vice and crime, from the highways, from the tramp camps, and placed under the leadership in charge of C. C. C. camps. Quoting again, section 1 of the act says in part "that in employing citizens for the purpose of this act no discrimination shall be made on account of race, color, or creed." What did Congress mean by this definition? Just how far was this definition to apply? In speaking of color, did the act mean that no young man should be refused a membership in a C. C. C. camp because he was white, or because he was black, or brown, or yellow? No doubt citizenship was to be the yardstick insofar as color was concerned. Was a young man to be denied the right of membership in a camp because he was Indian, German, Italian, French, Negro, Japanese, Chinese, or of some other race? No doubt citizenship was to be the yardstick for entry insofar as race was concerned. What did the act mean when it said "creed"? Is the word "creed", as set forth in this act, limited to that of religious belief? There is no doubt in my mind about this. I feel sure that when the act was drafted it was meant to only refer to religious creed. Of course, the meaning of the act could have been broadened so that the word "creed" might refer to political as well as religious beliefs.

However, it appears the political watchdogs on both sides desired to have the act wide open and to the end that employees in C. C. C. camps might be selected on basis of political beliefs and following. Let me take you back to a conference held at the White House, March 9, 1933, between 4 o'clock in the afternoon and 10 o'clock at night and ask you, was it the intent of the Chief Executive as he talked to his six listeners, Secretaries of War, Agriculture, and Interior, Budget Director, Judge Advocate General of the Army, and Solicitor, Department of Interior, and at which time he unfolded to them his program involving trees and men, that the leadership personnel of the C. C. C. camps was to be selected on basis of political belief? I remind you again that these young men are chosen at a time in life and under economic stress when lack of something around which to wrap their minds and hands might prove disastrous for them and the entire country as well. In the operation of the C. C. C. camps we have two problems—the conservation of human as well as that of natural resources. Not only human resources in the form of these young men, but resources measured by what the Nation saves in the years to come in having useful citizens, rather than an increased prison population and more inmates in our insane asylums. Human resources of course rank over and above that of natural resources, as important as natural resources are in the maintenance of human life.

The C. C. C. is a "becoming." It is like a little child—we do not know what it will be when it grows up. Some define it as an institution, "the vast possibilities of which have not been plumbed." We take millions of young men at an age when they are most responsive and susceptible to leadership and direction, concentrate them in camps not for military purposes, and sustain them with funds from the National Treasury. Is it not natural for them to absorb what they hear about the form of Government under which they happen to be living, the political leadership and system which makes their lot in life what it is and such other philosophies as may be presented to them from day to day, night by night? What lesson in government will the C. C. C. movement prove to be? Perhaps it will be our most effective university. With branches in every State, Territory, and insular possession, with an enrollment of more than five millions of young men, maintained by direct Federal grants and with the young men supervised and led by politically hand-picked leaders. When the Congress opened this great university, it set in motion tremendous forces and it is something more than just a summer camp for boys.

Mr. Chairman, when we were debating the public works $4,000,000,000 bill I made an observation as to the power of dollar bullets in carrying on a political war, when those dollars can be taken from the Federal Treasury through the relief rolls of the country. However, I did not at that particular time expect to find the first concrete evidence of these political bullets clearing through the underbrush of the C. C. C. camps. Evidence at hand leads me to believe that the sachment of Tammany is placing his wigwag in every C. C. C. camp (2,916) throughout the breadth of this great land.

In recent weeks scores of letters and telegrams have come to my office from highly trained and experienced men back in the district applying for jobs as supervisors and leaders in the C. C. C. camps of the Nation. These applicants have been informed by the officers in charge of the Michigan emergency conservation work that "it will be necessary for you to succeed in having your name placed on the accredited Friant list. To accomplish this, you should take action through one of the presently eligible United States Congressmen from Michigan." It was quite natural for an inquiring mind to wonder just what "presently eligible United States Congressmen from Michigan" meant. Naturally, being a first term, I had assumed that I was in that class, but lo and behold, I have found that from Michigan we have two classes of Congressmen insofar as the expenditure of the $600,000,000 of Public Works C. C. C. funds are concerned. We have the eligible and we have the ineligible, and I find myself in that class known as the "ineligible." Being in the ineligible class I am beginning to see just how deeply into the $4,000,000,000 relief fund the Tammany Tiger is beginning to gnaw. Of course, the viewpoint of the eligible is entirely different to that of the ineligible, but I remind you that the relief fund of $4,000,000,000 was provided for our people and should go to them without reference to political belief or following. I now ask the question, Is $600,000,000 set aside for the C. C. C. work to be used in carrying on a political exploitation of 4,000,000 more youths located in 2,916 camps throughout the Nation? Under date of May 8, 1935, I am officially informed as follows:

MICHIGAN EMERGENCY CONSERVATION WORK,
Lansing, Mich., May 8, 1935.

MR. HENRY HACKETT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your letter of recent date, we herewith enclose one of our revised application blanks, which we ask you to fill out completely and return to this office at once.

In order that your application receives full consideration, it will be necessary for you to succeed in having your name placed on the accredited Friant list, which is constantly undergoing preparation in Washington, D. C. To accomplish this, you should take action through one of the presently eligible United States Congressmen from Michigan. When favorable action has been taken as a result of your efforts, this office will be so notified by Mr. Friant.

Uncertainty as to when the proposed expansion of the C. C. C. will actually materialize, and as to the number of camps that will finally be authorized under the new program, makes it impossible at this time to say whether or not we will be in a position to offer you employment.

Very truly yours,

G. A. YOUNG,
In Charge, Michigan E. C. W.

Enclosure.

P. S.: For your information the eligible United States Congressmen from Michigan are: JOHN DINGELL, JOHN LESINSKI, GEORGE SADOWSKI, LOUIS RABAUT, all from Wayne County, and FRANK E. HOOK, Ironwood, Mich., and PRENTISS M. BROWN, St. Ignace, Mich. The above-listed United States Congressmen are, of course, at this time in session in Washington, D. C.

CHAS. H. BURTON,
Acting in Charge, E. C. W.

Mr. Chairman, I now wish to inquire, Are these politically hand-picked leaders and teachers for the C. C. C. camps being selected for the specific purpose of injecting into the lives of these 4,000,000 young men the political philosophies of the new deal? Shall we assume from these letters of information received from the field and the official statements made to us by the administration officials here in Washington that those highly skilled and experienced men in the building of roads, in forestry, and other lines of work of the nature engaged in by the enrollees in C. C. C. camps are to be excluded from participating in this work simply because their political philosophy runs contrary to that of the new deal? If this be true and if we are to thus assume, is it not in order for us to further assume that all of the relief benefits that may flow from the expenditure of the $4,000,000,000 are to first go to those who have a political belief in harmony with that of the new deal and the balance left over, if any, to the other ineligibles of our Nation? Does the $4,000,000,000 come only from the new deal and its followers, or must it eventually be paid by all of our citizens regardless of political following?

The people of my district have reason to believe the relief funds will be used for the benefit of our people without regard to political beliefs or following. Our people have not been schooled in a political philosophy which says "six Congressmen from a State are eligible in matters of this kind, and 11 are ineligible." We shall have to create a new political terminology. Perhaps before the $4,000,000,000 are consumed in a public-works program by the President and his advisers our people will have learned the political meaning of such terms. Redtape terms of this nature and the appropriation of relief funds for such rank, vile, and uncalled-for political use is not only maddening to the people but it is totally unfair and no political party can defend such an administration of public-relief funds.

Mr. Chairman, I am here and now referring to the administration of the fund created by the Public Works Act. In no way do I wish to speak against the good work accomplished through the operation of the C. C. C. camps. We are mindful of the fact that some good can be found in the vilest places and in the most hopeless characters, and that some good might be found accomplished even if every dollar of the fund was spent in a corrupt political manner. Under no circumstances can the purchase of public favor by a public servant with public funds be justified.

At the beginning, the Army officers were called in as supervisors at these camps and they did a good job. Of course, the officers were aided by civilian assistants. In speaking of the beginning, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, Chief of Staff, says "it constituted the greatest peace-time demand ever made on the Army." Three thousand Regular Army officers, 1,700 Reserve officers, and approximately 6,000 enlisted men of the Army have carried on this job of planning 16 hours of the 24 of the life of each entraineé each day he is in camp. Are these Army men and officers to be now displaced in whole or in part by leaders of a certain political belief pledged to certain eligible Congressmen? I think the question is fundamental because it has to do with relief funds on a vast scale. This is a plain case of playing politics with funds set aside for the relief of human misery. These funds will have to be repaid by members of all political parties. The boldness in which this information is being passed about from the administrative officers in charge is nothing short of startling. You cannot keep your mind from going back to $4,000,000,000; 4,000,000 of young men; thousands of leaders pledged to a given political party; public funds, human misery; taxation; unlimited authority of the Chief Executive and his advisers. It appears the field is now cleared, through the passage of House Joint Resolution 117 wherein more than four billions of dollars ($4,880,000,000) were appropriated to be spent for public works and relief, without question, without a check and balance, and with but little reservation [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, Members of Congress have been treated to a novelty this week in the form of the so-called "spontaneous march" of the farmers to Washington to give thanks for benefits received. It was the display of more gratitude than is usually in evidence and, consequently, was the occasion for much comment. A good many people could not believe the distressed farmers, the men in such pitiable plight as to excite the sympathy of the Nation, would be able to buy railroad tickets from long-distance points and come to the capital in Pullman cars. They wondered where the cash was secured to banquet in the luxurious $5,000,000 Mayflower Hotel; the hostelry for millionaires and nabobs. Many were suspicious that this so-called "spontaneous march" might have been inspired and the funds secured from other sources than the "dirt" farmer. I sincerely hope it is not from the money secured through processing taxes. I hope it will not react against the farmer.

I notice in the Washington Herald this morning Edward E. Kennedy, secretary of the Farmers' Union, makes the assertion the march was "planned, bought, and paid for by Federal employees."

He charges that the march was organized by county agents and county-allotment committees which administer the corn, wheat, cotton, and tobacco programs of the A. A. A. These men, he says, are paid direct Government salaries. Mr. Kennedy further says these agents contributed out of their own pockets to pay the expenses of some of the farmers who came here. Mr. Kennedy also says:

They were exploited by the A. A. A. and grossly misled by A. A. A. field officers concerning the purpose of their march on to Washington.

They were led to believe that their benefit payments would stop unless Congress adopts the new A. A. A. amendments sought by Secretary Wallace. These amendments would give Mr. Wallace complete power to license every dealer in foodstuffs in this country, and they have absolutely no connection with the benefits now paid to farmers.

Yesterday afternoon I received a telegram from Texas which appears to confirm the statement of Mr. Kennedy. The telegram reads as follows:

JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR.,
House Office Building:

We concur your views meeting county agents, extension directors, and farmers arranged by A. A. A. officials to vindicate their shortsighted policies in eyes of Nation. Majority of farmers and other groups are aware permanent injury to agriculture and national economy A. A. A. program is inflicting but financially unable or not invited on trip. This should be brought forcefully to attention of Congress. Example county agent at Galveston representing his section as Government employee. Please publicize this statement.

COTTON INDUSTRIES EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION,
F. P. LORDAN,
Chairman Houston-Galveston Division.

I do not know the author of this telegram, but unquestionably these charges should be inquired into and the facts revealed. The farmer, of course, has the right to appeal to Congress like anybody else, but if Government officials are back of the propaganda the people are entitled to know it.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REED of New York. I am somewhat amazed at the disclosures that the gentleman from Massachusetts has just made. The gentleman knows that I come from a farming district, that I have had the honor of representing a farming district for practically 17 years. Almost 10 percent of all the farms in New York State are to be found within the boundaries of my congressional district. The farmers in western New York are descendants from good old American stock—loyal and patriotic. Their sons have gone to war to defend our country. They are a class of honest, dependable, loyal citizens.

There was something that occurred in connection with this transaction as reported in the press that was startling to me. Three thousand farmers suddenly march on Washington, found a hall all prepared, a banquet arranged to wine and dine them. Then they assemble on the White House grounds to listen to what the Chief Executive had to say.

Not long ago the Chief Executive invited constructive criticism. The farmers of my district are engaged in various farming activities, and they have suffered from drought and from depression.

The A. A. A. was enacted ostensibly to aid all farmers, but not long ago Chester Davis, of the Agricultural Department, speaking to the farmers in Syracuse, N. Y., made the statement openly and aboveboard—that the farmers of New York State had received no direct benefit from the three A's.

Now, what happened under the Agricultural Adjustment Act? This law imposed a processing tax of $2.25 a hundred pounds on hogs. It has been the custom in New York State for the past century for farmers to raise a few hogs each year, kill them, take them to market, and sell the pork. Generations of farmers in my congressional district have been doing this without paying taxes to the Federal Government for the privilege of doing it. The money realized from the sale of their hogs has been used to pay local taxes, send the children to school, and for other necessary purposes. During the depression and the recent drought, when they needed every cent they could rake and scrape, they could not raise, kill, dress, and market their hogs without paying to the Federal Government a processing tax of $2.25 on every 100 pounds of meat sold in excess of the exemption. If he failed to pay the tax, he was subject to prosecution; and, if convicted, he could be imprisoned for 5 years or fined $10,000 or both.

Months ago the farmers in New York State and especially in my congressional district asked that the exemption be increased from 300 pounds to 900 pounds to relieve them from the burden of this tax. An amendment was offered on the floor of this House to accomplish this purpose. It was defeated. This proposal made by the farmers of my State and my district was fair and it was open, constructive criticism.

Now, the President of the United States, speaking to the 3,000 farmers who have been receiving cash benefits under the three A's, and who have come here on a joy ride and a junket, men who have been paid for not producing hogs, cotton, corn, and wheat, charges the farmers of my district with lying because they have criticized the operation of the three A's. The farmers in my district have had to work early and late to pay their local taxes, meet their other obligations, and in addition to these burdens they have been obliged to pay a processing tax to pay farmers in other States for not raising hogs and not growing crops.

And what does the President say? He says flippantly that the farmers who have made constructive criticism, farmers from my district and up-State districts in New York State, who have done this are liars. That is what he says.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I do not yield. I say that when the President charges the farmers in my district with lying they are not going to reply to such a charge. They are not descending to the level of the President's language, but I will tell you what they are going to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. They are going to speak very soon in language that the President of the United States and the "Crown Prince" Farley will understand, because it is the one language in which they are interested. The farmers who have been called "liars" are going quietly to the polls at the next election and register their protest against this type of procedure. The gentleman from Massachusetts has made a striking disclosure, and I say now that I resent, and every farmer in my district, regardless of his political affiliation, resents being charged with lying for making a constructive suggestion or for criticizing the three A's.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I challenge the gentleman from New York to point to any place in the President's address where he said that the farmers of his district are liars. I ask the gentleman to point where in his address he says that.

Mr. REED of New York. I leave that to the gentleman. It was in the press report.

Mr. ARNOLD. The President's speech is in the RECORD and the gentleman will not find the language he refers to in the President's speech.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to point out, if I may, some new facts as to the effect of the program on cotton. These figures which I am going to quote were issued yesterday and come from the Census Bureau of the Department of Commerce. I find in April we exported 323,155 bales of cotton, while last year in April we shipped abroad 386,594 bales. The number of spindles which were in operation in this country in April of this year was 23,852,816. This compares with 26,435,114 spindles during April of last year. The domestic consumption of cotton here in April was 481,135 bales. Last year the consumption in April was 512,594 bales. In other words, there is a reduction of more than 49,000 bales of the consumption by domestic mills in this country. This is another side of the picture which I would call to the attention of those in authority. Policies which appear to affect adversely an industry should be carefully considered. The man who grows cotton finds no consolation for the future from these figures.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Not now. Continuing further the consideration of these "spontaneous marches", it has come to my attention we are going to have another one next week. I understand a letter has been sent out extending an invitation for people to come here and appeal for the continuance of the N. R. A. These folks are invited to come, have a meeting in the morning, luncheon at noon, and then all afternoon can be devoted to friendly visits to their Congressmen.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman imagine that possibly the expenses of that junket might be paid for out of the sales tax that is being levied against those who are under the N. R. A.?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You could imagine anything.

Mr. ARNOLD. Sure!

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I believe the American people ought to know who is paying the bills for demonstrations. I believe everyone has the right to come here and petition Congress. Everyone has a right to present his views, but I think the whole picture ought to be unfolded before the Congress. We should know the origin of the marches.

Barnum said the American people like to be humbugged. I do not believe that is always true. They may like to be bluffed a bit occasionally, but in the long run they do not want it spread on too thick.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BOLAND. To ask the gentleman if he is going to vote to discontinue the N. R. A.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have not said what I am going to do.

Mr. BOLAND. Does the gentleman expect to?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why anticipate? Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States has the right to know who pays for organized marches, from whatever source they come.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There are 710 Texas farmers here. A lot of them are from my district. Every single one of them paid his own way or had it donated by farmers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did the county agents help them any?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think they contributed anything.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did they give them a little help in the way of inspiration?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not believe any county agents in my district did.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include two tables prepared by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for time this afternoon for the purpose of emphasizing to the House and to the country the gravity of the situation confronting an industry which is of importance in my district, in the State of Massachusetts and in the Nation. I refer to the situation confronting the granite industry which in the past has contributed so greatly to buildings and other construction throughout the Nation.

The granite industry is confronted at this time by a situation which is really a desperate one. The industry as a whole is nearly prostrate. It feels that a helping hand from the Federal Government is absolutely vital if it is to survive. It feels, moreover, that it has not been obtaining the helping hand to which it is entitled under the policy heretofore pursued in connection with the Federal building program. Without going into detail, it feels, among other things, that the price per cubic foot fixed in respect to Federal buildings is such as to preclude, in large measure, the use not only of granite, but of other similar building materials in the construction of Federal buildings. It seeks such modification in the present policy as will assure to granite its fair share of work under the Federal building program.

Granite is produced in no less than 25 States in the Union. In 10 of those the industry is considered a leading one. In addition, I am assured that there are granite cutting plants in every State of the Union and also in the District of Columbia.

I will insert in my remarks at this point a list of the States in which granite is produced:

California, Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Washington, and Wisconsin.

In normal times this industry affords employment for about 50,000 Americans. Most of them are skilled workers, and under a handicap in finding an adequate means of livelihood in other industries. At the present time about 90 percent of the workers in the industry are said to be without employment. If we take into consideration the families of these workers, it means that there are some 200,000 Americans in this field of work who are deprived of their normal means of livelihood at this time.

The gravity of the situation is emphasized in figures recently compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The Bureau prepared index numbers to show the relative level of employment at this time in 107 different groups of industries, taking the level during the period 1923-25 as 100 percent. On that list of 107 groups, the group including granite, marble, slate, and certain other stone products, appears as no. 107. It is last on the list, with an index number of 29.7 percent, as compared with an index number of 78.7 for all of the 107 industries considered.

Moreover, the figures show that the level of employment is about 24.4 percent less at the present time than at the same time during the previous year.

In spite of this fact, Mr. Chairman, the share of the Federal program which has been allotted to granite is surprisingly small. I will insert at this point two tables compiled by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department.

² Granite has been included on this job for the cornerstone, but contractor has the option of buying either limestone, sandstone, or cast stone, which, of course, automatically eliminates the possibility of using granite.

One table shows a list of projects in respect to which no granite is contemplated. The other shows a list of projects in respect to which the use of granite is contemplated. Of 234 projects in 36 States of the Union, 216 are apparently to be built without the use of any granite whatsoever. In the other 18 projects, in respect to which it is contemplated that granite shall be used, the total value of the granite contemplated amounts to something over $27,000, or less than two-tenths of 1 percent of the total sum set aside to those projects amounting to almost $20,000,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I shall be glad to yield briefly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am sympathetic with what the gentleman is saying. I have been trying for years to help the granite and marble industry. They never have got a square deal. In New York City we have 2,500 marble cutters out of work, and they have been out of work for years. The Treasury Department has preferred limestone. The Indiana Limestone Co. is still in the saddle. I do not say it to start a political discussion, but it was one of the chief contributors to the Republican Party. It contributed $100,000 in the last campaign. These public buildings in the city of Washington, it is apparent to anyone who has taken an interest in art, not I, are not fit for a capital city, because they are built of Indiana limestone. As the gentleman recalls, we from New York helped to have the Boston Post Office built of granite.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I recall the gentleman's assistance well.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We tried recently to have the new post office in New York built of granite. The difference in cost which would go to labor is infinitesimal, but there is a determined effort, and has been since last August, to prevent any marble or granite being used, to the preference of Indiana limestone. That is the fact. We complained about it. Marble States, like Georgia and some of these other Southern States, are in the same position as you people in New England. Another thing some of the competitors of granite and marble are doing, they are fabricating the material at the plants, where there is no union laborer working. It is done to a great extent by scab labor. That monopolistic situation gets worse every day. I am glad the gentleman is calling attention to the situation. [Applause.]

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I am glad to yield.

Mrs. KAHN. I want to say that identically the same situation described by the gentleman from New York exists in California. We have even found difficulty in getting alternate bids for granite. Indiana limestone is in every single, solitary specification, and we come up and beg that the granite workers be given the privilege of an alternate bid, and it is almost impossible to get it. We are facing that situation in San Francisco in the specifications for the mint, which are now out for bids.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I appreciate the contribution of the gentleman from New York and the gentlewoman from California.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I will yield for a very brief one.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I just want to say that in many of these plants where nonunion men are said to be working, if union men try to get those men to form a union they are called Communists.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, some 4 months ago representatives of the entire granite industry came to Washington with a view to bringing home to the administration the situation by which the industry is confronted in the hope of obtaining effective action. Meetings were held at both ends of the Capitol attended by Senators and Representatives from the granite-producing States in the hope of furthering the best interests of the industry. So far as I know no assurance has yet been given to the industry.

I stress the matter at this time because it is evident that plans are being formulated for the allocation of work under the work-relief program.

A very large percentage of the cost of manufacturing granite goes directly to labor. Moreover it affords from three to five times the amount of employment afforded by other materials. The industry asks no special favors. It merely asks for action which will assure it a fair share in the construction program.

In view, Mr. Chairman, of the desperate situation by which the industry is confronted, in view of the vital need of a helping hand at this time, in view of the small percentage of Federal construction heretofore allotted to granite, I appeal, and appeal earnestly, for a policy which will carry into effect the fundamental purpose of the Federal building program, assuring to granite throughout the Nation its fair share of work relief. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the bill H. R. 151 reported out by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. It is a bill sponsored by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], chairman of the committee.

The bill and the minority report read as follows:

A bill authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for overpayments of wages on Civil Works Administration projects and waiving recovery of such overpayments

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for any overpayment of wages heretofore made to or on behalf of any person for services rendered in connection with any project under the Federal Civil Works Administration, nothing to suggest fraud appearing, and in such cases where credit is allowed in the accounts of the disbursing officer under this act no recovery shall be required from the person receiving the overpayment.

VIEWS OF MR. RICH

H. R. 151, a bill authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit in the account of disbursing officers and overpayment of wages on Civil Works Administration projects and waiving recovery of such overpayments, this bill in the judgment of the minority members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments establishes an unparalleled precedent in permitting the Comptroller General to "cover up" poor business on the part of the Government officials and is contrary to all good, sound principles of business. For that reason we oppose this bill.

Harry Hopkins, when he was given permission to spend money in civil-works projects, started out on a lavish scale of expenditures of the taxpayers' money for the purpose of relief. So much stress was placed on the desire and advisability of spending this money fast, to get it into the hands of the citizens of this country, that sound business principles were overlooked. The 4,100 disbursing officers who handled these funds over the United States and who were responsible that the money be placed in the hands of the individuals working under the Civil Works Administration simply credited up to each man who was given a job the money due him each week, without proper accounting. In the expenditure of some $750,000,000 there is about $750,000 to $1,000,000 that cannot be given credit for by the Comptroller's office.

Mr. Hopkins, through the chairman of our committee who introduced the bill, Mr. COCHRAN, is seeking relief for the disbursing officers who were bonded under the Veterans' Administration and would now like to have the bonding companies and the disbursing officers released of this responsibility of overpayment. When we do that it means that the taxpayers of this country must pay the bill for inefficient Government service. When we start this precedent in this particular instance—and we are now faced with expenditure of $4,880,000,000 more under the supervision of the President of the United States, how much money must be passed out from that bill in the same manner not legally authorized? Will we be requested in the future to exonerate disbursing officers whose salaries are paid out of the taxpayers' money and who make errors for which the taxpayers of the country are compelled to make up the deficit? No sound, sensible business organization would do what we are requested to do in this bill, especially since the disbursing officers have given bond for the faithful performance of their duty.

On the other hand, we do realize that this money was passed out under the guise of emergency. We today are doing many unheard of things in the guise of emergency. We are passing many laws under the guise of emergency and if we continue under this guise of emergency to spend lavishly and foolishly the money of the taxpayers of this country we are placing a mortgage on the future generations that will stagger and shackle them and will also endanger the welfare of our country if it does not wreck it. The point to be considered by the Membership of the House is, Are you, under the guise of emergency, going to absolve the disbursing officers of this responsibility; are you going to excuse the bonding companies of their responsibilities and saddle the burden on the taxpayers? That is for the membership of this House to decide. Having had business training that would not permit a blanket order of this kind as is represented by H. R. 151, proposing to exonerate the disbursing officers of this responsibility,

I cannot recommend it to the Members of the House that they adopt this legislation as it is written, for the reason that it will establish a precedent that will be detrimental to good government and to orderly procedure of the operation of affairs of this country.

ROBERT F. RICH.

The purpose of the bill is to exonerate Harry Hopkins, who was Federal Civil Works Administrator, for the improper expenditure of money varying in amount from $700,000 upward. No one knows exactly what the amount is.

It seems that during the administration of these funds, which was supposed to be under the guise of emergency, that many of the paymasters or disbursing officers, in number amounting to 4,100, have paid out illegally funds, the amount of which is some figure above $700,000, to people to whom they had no right to pay it.

Had Mr. Hopkins, having charge of the Federal Civil Works Administration, administered these funds properly, had taken time to give proper attention to the set-up of the organization so that the funds would be expended according to law, there would be no opportunity for anyone to suggest that we should pass a bill such as is proposed in H. R. 151 in order that he may get his books properly straightened up. Ten thousand timekeepers all over this country, under the Civil Works Administrator, Mr. Hopkins, were negligent in passing accounts for payments that were not in accordance with the law.

After the suggestion was made by the Comptroller General that possibly it would cost the Government more money to secure a proper return of these funds, and that possibly part of it never could be returned, I wrote the Comptroller General, asking him where these errors were made and the amounts. It seems to be quite a uniform amount over the country. In a letter the Comptroller wrote me on May 14 he calls specific attention to the States of Alabama, California, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, and West Virginia.

The letter in full reads as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, May 14, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. RICH: I have your letter of April 27, 1935, as follows:

"With reference to H. R. 151, authorizing the Comptroller General to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for overpayment of wages on Civil Works Administration projects, etc., I am wondering whether you can furnish me with a list of, say, 12 or 15 places throughout the United States where the bulk of the overpayment of wages occurred. I do not want the names of any individuals, but merely some indication of the places throughout the States where the major portion of these overpayments are shown by the records to have been made."

The activities under the Civil Works Administration program began on or about November 17, 1933, and continued to April 1934. Of the accounts rendered for this period, the audit has been completed only as to those covering November, December, and January. Accounts for the remainder of the period are now being examined, but work thereon has not been finished.

In answer to your inquiry, it may be stated that the bulk of the overpayments or irregular payments so far discovered occurred in the following States: Alabama, California, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, and West Virginia, and that such overpayments or irregular payments are reflected rather evenly throughout the counties of the respective States mentioned, with the exception of Vanderburgh County, Ind., where there appear to have been duplicate payments, possibly aggregating $35,000.

It is regretted that the status of the audit of the accounts in question is such that a more complete record of the matter inquired about cannot be furnished at this time, but the nature and apparent purpose of the activities did not require making special the post audit involved, in view also of our limited facilities.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

When I read the name of the State of Pennsylvania and I recalled the fact that last fall much money was being expended ruthlessly for purposes unknown to the people of Pennsylvania, the thought went through my mind whether that was the reason why the State of Pennsylvania went Democratic. Was it to solicit votes?

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I prefer not to yield now. Before my time expires I hope to have the opportunity to yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

If you pass this bill, H. R. 151, you will be establishing a precedent. The bill is liable to be brought up for consideration very unexpectedly at the close of this session. No one should vote for a bill like this without knowing more definitely what the Comptroller General of the United States has to say about the amount of money involved. The Comptroller General should give us more definite figures before we act on this bill. If we pass this bill and set this precedent of exonerating officials of their errors then we as representatives of the American people, have not the right spirit of trying to do things in an honest and conscientious manner. Our taxpayers must pay for inefficient Government administration. We should never pass a bill like this without knowing all the facts, and nobody has given the definite facts.

Mr. Hopkins has been designated by the President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, to continue to spend these fabulous sums which you have granted the President of the United States without any strings attached to them. If Hopkins overruns his accounts by $1,000,000 in spending less than $1,000,000,000, what will he do in spending $4,880,000,000?

I say to you that if this is the result of his method of operation of a year ago then he is not fit to administer the funds you have granted the President of the United States, and you ought to notify the President of the United States that a man who is going to set up an organization of that kind ought to be watched.

May I say further that House Joint Resolution 170 was brought into the House of Representatives to be passed and there was contained in it section 6. I have here the original bill which was sent in. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], speaking for the administration, said that the President of the United States requested that this resolution be passed. I read section 6:

The President is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this joint resolution. The violation of any such rule or regulation shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for not to exceed 2 years, or both.

Think of a resolution coming here from the President of the United States with such un-American language in it and with the request that we pass it! Comparing a proposition of this kind with Hitler, of Germany, the only difference is that Hitler, in Germany, in the event anyone disobeys a mandate of his puts them up against the wall and shoots them, while the President of the United States wants to put any violators of his orders in prison.

Mr. Chairman, this is a pretty bad state of affairs. I cannot interpret it any other way. It is going pretty far when a man representing the American people gets up on the floor of the House and makes such a statement. But it is a fact. It is hard to believe. I thank the Members of the House for taking that section out of the bill. Think of it! We are today, under the guise of an emergency, putting into the hands of the President of the United States power to administer funds without the knowledge of any Member of the Congress, and the people of the country will eventually have to pay the bill. Four thousand eight hundred and eighty millions for what? No Member of Congress knows what for, and no Member of Congress has as yet arranged to get the money.

Mr. Chairman, may I say that if we have not the strength and the courage to stand up here and assume our constitutional duties, if we are not going to do those things which the people of the country elected us to do, then we are not fit citizens to sit here and represent the American people. I do not want to say anything against the President of the United States. As an individual I have not anything in the world against him. However, I do criticize many of the things that he sends to us to pass and enact into law, especially those unconstitutional laws. I think it is the wrong thing for us to do, and you will see the day—and it is not far away—when we as citizens of this country will rue some of the laws that we have passed and are about to pass. You and I are responsible, but I do not intend to support legislation that is unconstitutional, and I do not intend to support anything that I believe is not for the best interest of the American people, regardless of who wants it.

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman made a statement about the way relief money was being spent in Pennsylvania and wanted to know if this was the reason Pennsylvania went Democratic. Is it not a fact all relief money that has been spent in the State of Pennsylvania has been spent through the Pinchot organization and Mr. Biddle, appointed by the Republican Governor of Pennsylvania, and is it not a fact that hardly a Democrat could get an appointment or any kind of a key position in Pennsylvania during that period?

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for whom I have a great deal of respect, that the administration of these Federal funds was in the hands of an organization set up and approved by Mr. Hopkins, the Federal Administrator.

Mr. BOLAND. I disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Hopkins looked after the appointments and approved all of the appointments that were made in Pennsylvania, and we have the same representatives in Pennsylvania handling the funds at the present time.

Mr. BOLAND. No; we have not.

Mr. RICH. These funds are handled in Pennsylvania under Mr. Hopkins, and he is allocating the funds in that State. If that is the way they are going to continue to do it, and Pennsylvania does not receive her proper share when the State is paying a great part of the amount through our own State legislature for the benefit and help of those who are not privileged to have bread and butter, then I say that something should be done to change the way the matter is being handled. We are doing our share in Pennsylvania. We have in Pennsylvania a Democratic Governor who is trying to raise money. He has come to Washington and asked for Federal funds but has been turned down. He is doing all he can to get his share of the Federal funds. But, Mr. Chairman, I condemn this action of every State in the Union coming to the Federal Government and expecting the Federal Government to do the things that the States ought to do. I do not care whether it is Pennsylvania, Texas, New York, or any other State. I think the people back home should shoulder their responsibility. You cannot shove all of these responsibilities on to the Federal Government. It eventually will wreck it, as we are doing at present.

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. RICH. I am answering the gentleman's question. Those relief agencies were administered and handled by the overseer of the Federal Government, Mr. Hopkins. He is the fellow who improperly administered these funds in connection with the Civil Works Administration. He is the fellow that ought to know and should have known that these funds were not being distributed according to law, and he should not have permitted this money to have been illegally spent. Now he wants us to give him a free sheet. He wants Congress to exonerate his bonded paymasters from paying out funds illegally.

Will we exonerate the bonding companies and make the taxpayers foot the bill for Government political inefficiency? The Administrator for Pennsylvania was approved by Harry Hopkins, and he was the man who had charge of the disposition of the funds.

Mr. BOLAND. And appointed by Pinchot?

Mr. RICH. No; by Harry Hopkins. He would not give any money to the State of Pennsylvania unless it was administered according to his wishes. It will be recalled that the man who is now Governor, Mr. Earle—also Mr. Pinchot—was asked to come to New York to discuss this question of relief, by Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Pinchot went to New York to discuss the question, but Mr. Earle refused to go to New York. Mr. Earle, now, as Governor, is having a hard time to secure funds to do the work of relief. Had he gone to New York and discussed the question of relief at that time his job would be easier today.

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman has stated it just the opposite to what is the fact. Governor Pinchot invited Governor Earle.

Mr. RICH. Now, Governor Earle is getting into hot water because he has to raise this money and because he thought he was playing good politics he is now in trouble through not taking care of the needy at this time.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. I rather assume from the tenor of the gentleman's speech that he does not want any Federal funds going into his State. The gentleman wants the State of Pennsylvania to take care of its own distressed people?

Mr. RICH. No; I think the State of Pennsylvania, the Keystone State, one of the greatest States in the Union, has as much right as any other State to Federal funds, but I want to impress upon the mind of my colleague from Illinois, who always asks very sensible questions, the fact that whether you come from Illinois or whether you come from Pennsylvania or whether you come from the State of my friend Mr. BLANTON, the gentleman from Texas, these States should all do their part and not depend wholly on the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to make a few remarks about one of the greatest Presidents that our country has ever had.

In 1932, when I campaigned for the office of Congress, I was nominated by the Democratic and Independent Parties. In the primary election of that year, in the Thirty-fourth Congressional District of Pennsylvania, there were about 750 Democratic votes cast which were divided among six candidates, and I happened to be the one who was successful in securing that nomination. In the general election my predecessor received about 36,000 Republican votes, and I received about 34,000 Democratic votes. In addition to 34,000 Democratic votes, I received approximately 6,500 Independent votes, which, combined, made me a Congressman—and a damned good one at that. [Applause.] In 1932, when I campaigned for the office of Congress, I informed the people that if I were elected as their representative, I would support legislation which, in my opinion, was progressive and humane, regardless of whether it was presented by a Democrat, Republican, Progressive, Farmer-Laborite, Socialist, or Communist.

I have been called by some Members of Congress a Communist and a Socialist. My feelings are not hurt when such statements are made. I have heard certain Members of Congress accuse President Roosevelt of being communistic and socialistic. It is a fact that any man or woman who advocates progressive and humane legislation is frequently called a Socialist or Communist.

When I came to Congress in 1933, I supported practically every measure that the President presented to Congress.

Why did I support President Roosevelt's legislation? Was it because he was a Democrat? No, but because he presented to this House legislation which, in my opinion, was progressive, constructive, and humane.

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MORITZ. What is the gentleman's opinion about President Franklin D. Roosevelt as a President in comparison with past Presidents?

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. In reply to your question I wish to state that I do not desire to offer any unjust criticism. Just criticism is always in order and does a great deal of good. Criticism actuated by selfish motives is destructive. Comparing President Roosevelt with former Presidents, I would say that he is one of the best that we have ever had, and when 1940 rolls by he will go down in history as one of the greatest men for the common people that the country has ever produced. [Applause.]

Ladies and gentlemen, we must not forget that under President Roosevelt's administration more than 800,000 homes have been saved from sheriff sales. Many other constructive measures which have benefited our citizens have come to pass during the 2 years he has been President.

When I was elected to Congress I was not chosen to represent the Democratic, Republican, or any other political party. I was elected to represent the citizens of our country, and they expect me to do my utmost to bring them out of the unnecessary depression which has caused untold human misery. We Members of Congress can alleviate the suffering of the people if we have the courage to sponsor and support progressive and humanitarian legislation; in fact, we could end the depression in 30 days. There have been bills introduced this session of Congress by Republicans, Democrats, Farmer-Laborites, and Progressives which, if enacted into law, would be beneficial to the people of our country.

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, there have been a number of bills introduced in this session of Congress which if enacted into law would be a benefit to the various trade-unions, Brotherhood of Trainmen, and all others who labor for a livelihood. The bills have been reported from committees, but the Rules Committee pickled them. We should abolish the Rules Committee. [Applause.]

I do not want my good friend, Congressman O'CONNOR, Chairman of the Rules Committee, to think that I am criticizing him. He is a good scout—in fact, every Member of Congress is a good scout.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. If the Rules Committee should be abolished, I think that the gentleman from Pennsylvania could get Mr. O'CONNOR a bigger job than he has now.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I am willing to give a helping hand to everybody who needs it whether he be a Congressman, porch climber, or a horse thief.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, there is not any necessity for 11,000,000 people in our country to be out of employment. There is plenty of work for every man and woman who is able to work; and those who are unable to work, such as the aged and others who are physically incapacitated, could be provided with an adequate pension. Let us appropriate money for the prevention of dust storms, flood control, reforestation, slum clearance, elimination of dangerous grade crossings, purification of rivers and streams, development and purchase of our natural resources and public utilities; construction of schools, hospitals, reservoirs, canals, highways; also for the development of music, art, literature; medical, surgical, biological, geological, and astronomical sciences; and for every other purpose which will promote the welfare of mankind. If we would undertake to accomplish these projects the millions who are now idle could obtain employment. Every man and woman who labors for a livelihood is entitled to adequate compensation for their services.

In conclusion, I wish to state that a great deal of the human misery which is existing—not only in our country but in every other country in the world—is because of unemployment, slave wages, ignorance, superstition, religious, national, and race hatred. All of these social evils could be and ought to be wiped from the face of the earth. If we would remove these unnecessary evils, our beautiful United States would be turned into a garden of paradise; in fact, every other country in the world could be made a garden of paradise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to deny some of the statements made by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. They are characteristic of him. Since I have been a Member of Congress I have had to listen to his ravings and rantings and faultfinding about the Democratic administration and also to the misstatements in which he indulges. A few moments ago he spoke about the relief work in Pennsylvania, and the work being handled by the Federal Relief Administrator, Mr. Hopkins, and what happened during the previous year in Pennsylvania. The facts are, as I tried to bring out from him, that the relief administrator appointed in Pennsylvania was appointed by Governor Pinchot, and the relief administrators in the other States of the Union were appointed by the Governors of those States. The Democrats in Pennsylvania were out of luck, because of a Republican Governor being in power. Mr. Biddle was appointed relief administrator to handle those funds in Pennsylvania and he handled them in a deplorable manner. I state today on the floor of Congress that if ever an investigation is started in the Federal Relief Administrator's office I hope Pennsylvania will be given a thorough investigation. It was utterly impossible for a Democrat to be appointed in a key position in that great State. Mr. Rich stated in his remarks that these same relief administrators are to handle these present funds of the $4,000,000,000 relief money. That is not the fact. We have now a Democratic administration in Pennsylvania, and a man named Johnson has been appointed by Governor Earle to take care of the relief work in Pennsylvania. If a Republican senate in Pennsylvania does its duty for that great Governor of Pennsylvania, the relief money that will be sent from Washington to Pennsylvania will be used in a legitimate manner for the people for whom it is intended. The Republican senate in Pennsylvania today is putting every obstruction possible in the path of Governor Earle, and it ill behooves Mr. Rich or any of his kind to criticize Relief Administrator Hopkins, who has done the most remarkable job of relief work the world has ever known.

When we boil down the facts, there were 751 charges and complaints of corruption of a serious nature to warrant an investigation, made to the C. W. A. in Washington headquarters. Of these 751 charges, 639 investigations have been completed, and charges were found in only 240 that could be verified. The work of the thousands of people who handle C. W. A. affairs stands out as a grand job of public service. It shows that public officials can perform as efficiently and as free from graft and corruption as any other group of humans.

Most of the important charges and complaints were referred to Washington. The charges made to and handled by State and local authorities in the main involved only minor and petty matters included in the 240 charges that were founded, were 163 cases of irregularities, that did not involve criminal violation. These were cleared up by dismissals or restitutions.

Seventy-seven cases involving possible criminal violations were turned over to the United States attorneys for possible criminal prosecution, and 17 of these resulted in conviction of a total of 22 persons. One hundred and twelve of the 751 cases referred to Washington headquarters are still under investigation or pending in courts.

These figures tell the facts to date on alleged graft and corruption under the C. W. A. When it is considered that the sum of $939,000,000 was spent throughout the country under the C. W. A. program and that there were more than 70,000 persons engaged in administering the millions of transactions in expending the funds, the number of complaints and charges was surprisingly small. In view of the immensity of the program, I feel the figures bespeak a high degree of honesty and efficiency. The figures contrast sharply with the rumors.

No citizen of this country during this generation has given a more earnest and honest effort to relieve suffering than Harry Hopkins. This country owes him a debt of gratitude and in my opinion history will record him as a great humanitarian. He has allocated relief funds in an honest and efficient manner. This attack upon his integrity and honor is unwarranted and unjust, and I am satisfied that the people of this Nation will recognize the source, and treat it in the manner it deserves, namely, the rantings of a partisan and cheap political statement.

What brought the C. W. A. into existence? During the Seventy-second Congress between the time of the election of President Roosevelt and his inauguration, what was the condition? Ten million people were jobless through no fault of their own. Industry was paralyzed. Agriculture was on the brink of chaos. Banks were failing by the thousands and millions of American citizens threatened with the loss of everything they had saved through a lifetime of toil and struggle. I can recall Congress in those days—in those sad days. There was no question of democracy or republicanism at that time. It was a question of some kind of a program to be originated and presented to the House of Representatives that would save this Nation from destruction. No brains in this House of Representatives or the Senate of the United States were big enough to present such a program. It was necessary to wait for this great humanitarian who is now in the White House to present a program that Congress could enact into law that would save America. That is what brought the C. W. A. into existence. Of course, it was a hurried proposition. It was an organization put together in a hurry to put people to work to save them from starvation. With a project of that kind, it is only likely that inconsistencies and probably some irregularities would exist, which has existed, as these figures prove.

Mr. MORITZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield.

Mr. MORITZ. I wonder how the Republicans would have handled 11,000,000 unemployed. They are always finding fault. I wonder what plan they would have used for handling 11,000,000 unemployed.

Mr. BOLAND. I have yet, during all this procedure of finding fault during all the dark days of the Seventy-second Congress, to hear where there was a Moses rising up to save this great country of ours; but when the country is on the way out of the depression, we hear the faultfinders and we hear of the great number of Moseses who are going to save America. But America is safe, gentlemen. As I stated before, it ill behooves characters like Congressman RICH, who belong to an organization in the State of Pennsylvania that has been overridden by Republicanism and Grundyism for over 50 years, to criticize now, because it is in the hands of the people, the people now own the State of Pennsylvania and also own this Nation; when we are on our way out of this depression, they find fault. I hope and pray that this great humanitarian in the White House will live so that he will be a great benefactor that the great people of the United States need in these particular times. I thank you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND] has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORITZ].

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a copy of my own bill, H. R. 7984.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE CHAIN-STORE EVIL

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we are on the threshold of a new economic era. Little wonder that conservatives are perplexed and annoyed. They are like fish out of water. The time of special privilege is passed. Rugged individualism cannot prosper in an era of centralization of power and wealth. No one can pursue his or her career if the opportunity does not exist. No one is aware of the present conditions better than the present Congress, which is, at least, trying to remedy the situation.

A few years ago I happened to be at the commencement exercises of a great college. My companion, a student of economics, said in a joking way as the procession of capped and gowned graduates proceeded up the aisle, "What a fine bunch of gasoline-station attendants they will make." He was not finding fault with education, but lamented there was no opportunity for them.

Mr. Chairman, in that one remark is summed up the conditions of the present time. College graduates, through no fault of theirs, all dressed up and no place to go. To whom can this condition be attributed? The spirit of the times. "Bigger and better" was the slogan until everything, even the necessities of life, were capitalized by the huge monopolistic chain stores.

CENTRALIZATION THE CAUSE OF DEPRESSION

We read and hear of our great centralization of wealth and industry; and how 4 percent of our people own 80 percent of the wealth, while 96 percent of the people own 20 percent. Is it not time to ask ourselves where are we going? How did it happen? They say centralization is the spirit of the age, that chain systems are the spirit of the age; you might as well say the chain of slavery is the spirit of the age. If our present policy to centralize persists with chain stores gradually putting out the independents, in a decade we will have only chains, and with the continued centralization we will eventually have only 1 chain grocery, 1 chain shoe store, 1 chain drug store, and so forth. They will gradually combine, and you will have all business done by one chain, and, finally, the capital stock of the chains will gradually be controlled by one man. Then all ambition of the average individual will cease, the necessity of education will be gone. Society will retrograde until sometime we will strike the bumpers. A crash at arms between the slaves and the chain masters will follow.

That is the story of the human race. It centralizes more and more, then blows up and civilization has gone. Then society starts over again.

MOSES FOR DECENTRALIZATION

The question before the American people is, Can we avert that disaster with its murders, its war, its starvation, its plague of disease and famine? The chains lead us to destruction. The chains are but the chains of slavery. We have the most wonderful illustration of decentralization in the Bible. Moses knew of the corrupt centralization schemes of the big nations and of Egypt. He wanted to decentralize. He led a successful strike of Hebrew workingmen out of Egypt. Out in the wilderness he taught them for 40 years the philosophy of decentralization, and gave them the laws "Thou shalt not take interest", and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"; and then for fear someone might slip in, accumulate, and concentrate the great lawgiver writes the plan for the year of jubilee, which provides all great fortunes are to be decentralized and returned to the original families every 50 years. We need a rule of justice in America as Moses wrote in the desert.

We can save ourselves by turning right about and decentralize legally. To this end I have introduced a decentralizing bill (H. R. 7894, 74th Cong.) that furnishes the way out.

The method of approach to decentralizing as provided in the bill is to give the small independent merchant and business man the fair equivalent purchasing price as the largest chain store.

GIVE THE INDEPENDENTS THE SAME PURCHASING PRICE AS THE CHAINS

When the average independent merchant can buy a can of tomatoes for exactly the same price as the chains do, the independent will undersell the chains and put them out of business, just as the chains are putting the independent out. Therefore, give the independents at least a fair equivalent purchasing price. The chains demand a larger percentage of gross profits than the independents. They cannot live without such profits.

How then do they sell a standard can of tomatoes for 1 or 2 cents a can below the independent? Simply because they buy them for less. That is all. That is the whole secret of the big chain and the big department stores' success. They buy for less.

HOW THE CHAINS WORK THEIR RACKET

A great chain that operates in my city, Pittsburgh, controlled by the Morgan interests, purchased the surplus output of a string of tomato canneries in Kentucky at 6 cents per no. 2½ can and furnished their own labels. That chain sold those tomatoes at 15 cents per can retail. Tomatoes were higher at that time than now, but it furnishes a concrete illustration. The chain made 150-percent gross profit.

The independent bought the same tomatoes from his jobber and paid 14 cents a can and sold them from 16 to 18 cents a can. Of course, you could buy cheaper at the chain, but had the independents purchased those tomatoes at 6 cents a can, what would have happened? Why, you would have been able to get them for 8 to 10 cents a can, possibly 2 for 15. Because of the chains, you pay nearly twice as much as you should, and yet you think you save a cent on a can of tomatoes.

The buyer of a great chain system gave an address to a group of cost accountants and told how chains are able to operate and undersell the independents. It shows chain strategy.

The buyer said he never bought the entire output of any factory. He generally bought 40 to 50 percent. Our representative calls at a factory and looks it over and asks, "What is your capacity to produce?" After having gained the inside information, surveying the plant and testing the products, the buyer offers to purchase an amount of their products equal to the difference between their output and their full capacity but in no case more than 50 percent of their possible production.

He then gave a concrete illustration of how their buyers are trained in classes like boys in school.

The buyer says, "Your corn sells to the larger retailers for $1 per dozen. The actual production costs you 67 cents which leaves a gross profit of 33 cents. Out of the 33 cents you pay your incidentals and management, leaving a net profit of 10 cents. Our company will pay you 76 cents per dozen. Your overhead is already taken care of by your present customers.

"You will not need to add a single cent's worth to handle our business. There will be just 9 cents clean velvet on every extra dozen you produce. You run no chances. You need no extra salesmen. You only have to bill the goods and buy an extra postage stamp. If the seller is reluctant, the buyer offers an additional incentive of "I will furnish the labels and save you that expense too." If the seller is not yet convinced, the buyer says, "Your present net profit above all expenses is not over 10 cents per dozen anyway; here at one slap we offer to double your production and your net profits by assisting you to produce more."

The canner sees visions of double profit but he confides to the buyer, "It would take a lot of extra cash to double the output." The buyer knows he has him now. He stalls for a while and finally says, "Our company will allow you to bill for the goods as fast as they are ready for shipment. We would prefer to leave them here, as other buyers do, until wanted, but you can bill us as soon as ready for shipment and you know what happens every Wednesday, don't you? Our main office pays every O. K. bill. You don't have to wait. You don't have to wonder or guess; you know there has been delivered to Uncle Sam on Wednesday one letter with a check enclosed and you know when the letter will arrive. That's the way we do business." The deal is closed. The chain store has a can of corn that costs 6½ cents, and the independent, who carries all of the overhead expenses of the cannery, has another that cost him 8½ cents. But how is the extra burden of transportation carried? A carload of corn is shipped to the chain warehouse, and only 10 boxes are shipped to the independent merchant by local freight; the independent pays twice the transportation cost that the chains incur.

The result is the price sign in the chain store reads, "Corn, 11 cents per can." Across the street the independent has to sell it for 12 cents per can. Had the independent the same buying power as the chain, you would be able to buy the same can at the independent for 10 cents that you now buy at the chain for 11 cents. However, the buyer for chains cannot always get these results, and then he shifts his tactics. He suggests the canners put 10 percent less corn in the cans. If that does not get results, he suggests that they add more water and less solid contents, and so forth.

CHAIN STORES BEAT OUR PUBLIC

I will not argue that the chain store cheats you at every turn by weights; that few people can long hold down a job at a chain unless he can produce. I shall not stress the fact that a Government investigation shows short weights of 53 percent of the stores, poorer quality of merchandise, lower wages paid, or the fact that the chain sells the 8-ounce-size container marked "6 ounces" in fine print, while the independent sells the 8-ounce container marked plainly "8 ounces" of the same brand and quality and sells at 1 cent above the chains.

I am interested in the fact that chains can and do buy for less and sell for larger profits than the independent. I am interested in getting the independents the same buying power as the chains and let free competition be the people's safety valve to lower the price.

CHAINS BOOST PRICES

Every article the chain gets exclusive control of goes up in price and the chains which control 75 percent of the factories' output sell to their own stores for less than they do to the independents. The fact is that the consumer, who thinks he saved a cent on a can of sardines by buying them at the chains, actually loses 2 cents by buying from the chain store. Much study and research has been made on H. R. 7984 to make it foolproof and to place the independent on the same footing as the chains. It takes away from the chains the right to manufacture, wholesale, and retail at the same time.

You cannot go to a store and buy an average dollars' worth of merchandise today unless the big four, Morgan, Mellon, du Pont, or Rockefeller, draw a profit. We need to decentralize and to decentralize quickly. Eighty percent of our shoe stores are chain and we pay more than double price for our shoes. Ten percent of our drug stores are chain and the prices continue to rise and the independents are making less. Thirty percent of our grocery stores are chain and the prices are rising fast. The chains in many towns do not deposit their money in the local banks but ship it instead by express to some central town, robbing the local community of that ready cash.

Prices of labor must go up, the price of merchandise must come down. The price of farm raw products must go up, the price of fabricated merchandise must come down. Interest and special-privilege, chain-store profits must be eliminated—decentralization bill H. R. 7984 will do this.

Yes, the chain stores do some good; they rent buildings, hire clerks, and a few other things of that character, but if they were eliminated the independents would rent more stores and hire more clerks.

SAME PRICE TO ALL

Some will say, "Why would you not sell lower to a big buyer?" The post office sells a 3-cent stamp to all customers alike, for 3 cents. Congress made the railroads charge every man the same price for transportation. Congress has the power to protect the small man. To protect the weak is fundamental. The only excuse for government is to protect the weak against the encroachments of the strong. We have the power, we must use it.

We propose the independent will buy at the prices that chains buy, not the chains buy at the prices of the independent.

TAXING CHAIN STORES A FAILURE

Some would tax the chain stores out of existence. That can only act as a boomerang against the independents, for the chains will make the independents pay their tax. It will put the independents out of business and not the chains. Here is how it will work. The chains now control at least 75 percent of the manufacturers. Let Morgan tell his Fleischmann's yeast or his Sanborn coffee or his Royal Baking Powder Co. to raise the price to the independents and lower the prices to the chains and that alone will settle it. The independent will pay the chain tax. Suppose Fleischmann's yeast should raise the price one-eighth of a cent per cake to the independent and lower it one-eighth of a cent to the chains. Do you not see how it would work? There are 100 staple articles the chains have a monopoly on that could be worked against the independents. Taxing will not work to the advantage of the independents. There is only one solution and that is equal buying power of all business houses. H. R. 7984 gives that.

[H. R. 7984, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

A bill to regulate traffic and trade, protect small business houses and industry, promote orderly marketings, encourage individual initiative, decentralize business, and give the consumers the benefit of free competition denied them by chain ownership and operation, holding companies, and interlocking directorates
Be it enacted, etc.,

TITLE I—ISSUANCE OF LICENSES

SECTION 1. That any person, partnership, firm, corporation, association, society, common-law trust, holding company, or other organization, foreign or domestic, hereafter called "business house", now in any mercantile pursuit doing interstate traffic or trade or that may hereafter wish to enter into any mercantile pursuit hereafter doing interstate traffic or trade shall apply to the Secretary of the Interior, hereafter termed the "Government", for a license to operate. The cost of the license shall be $1, and the receipt thereof shall be displayed in a conspicuous place in every office in which business is transacted with the public.

SEC. 2. (a) Licenses shall be granted only to those business houses that apply therefor and state the line of business in which they wish to engage, whether as a retailer, wholesaler, jobber, or manufacturer.

(b) The license shall be for the term of 1 year, except in special cases as hereinafter provided.

(c) A license to operate shall not be granted any business house which shows discrimination in its sales against any buyer in the class to which that business house caters.

SEC. 3. No business houses handling merchandise having an annual sale of over $100,000 may receive a license to manufacture, wholesale, and retail at the same time. No business houses doing an annual business of over $50,000 may secure a license as manufacturer and retailer, manufacturer and wholesaler, or wholesaler and retailer: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent a manufacturer from selling his merchandise on orders direct to consumers from his factory or warehouse, if such factory or warehouse is not used as a retail store.

SEC. 4. Business houses now in operation that would be ineligible to a license on account of being in violation of the provisions of this section may be granted a single-day license for each place of business; the Government to issue no more than five single daily licenses in advance at one time, though the Government may extend their day-to-day license until such time as the business house shall readjust its affairs to comply with the requirements of this section, but in no case shall such day-to-day licenses be issued unless the Government is assured that steps are being taken to arrange for reorganization or sale or disposition of such part of the business that is contrary to the provisions of this act, and in no event for more than 2 years after the passage of this act: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall prevent the issuance of licenses to manufacturers of a single line to sell direct to consumers or direct to retailers from factory or factories, where they allow no discrimination between customers in regard to present services.

SEC. 5. No manufacturer of gas, electric power, or other public or semipublic service commodity shall be given a license to retail merchandise such as lighting fixtures, motors, stoves, refrigerators, or other utensils used in connection with the public-service commodity, except on the day-to-day license plan as above mentioned.

SEC. 6. (a) No license shall be issued to the manufacturing part or to the wholesaling or warehouse part of a business house until the Government is satisfied that the new business houses organized as a result of the breaking up of the present combination of manufacturer, wholesaler, and retailer control will sell merchandise to any purchaser in the classes of trade they cater to without discrimination of any kind: Provided, however, That any business in apparent violation of this act wherein 90 percent of the full-time employees are stockholders and own between them 90 percent of the stock of the firm and control 90 percent of the business of the firm, and wherein the business is free from bonds bearing more than an annual 2-percent service charge, and bondholders have no written or implied control in the business, may nevertheless be considered as having fulfilled the intent of this act to decentralize business control and may be granted a license for each of its individual units, and, in addition, a blanket license for its general office, upon the payment of a fee of $1 and the payment of all costs of the Government agent in satisfying the Government that the provisions of this act are observed.

(b) The intent of subsection (a) of this section is to allow great organizations to exist as cooperatives or otherwise, wherein the business house is employee-owned and employee-controlled.

SEC. 7. (a) Nothing in this act shall prevent individual dirt or working farmers from organizing manufacturing plants or wholesale houses to care for and dispose of their own products if 90 percent of ownership therein shall be farmer-owned, with no farmer owning more than 640 acres of land and with such farmer-owned plant or warehouse receiving at least 50 percent of the products it handles from those who are the members of that organization, with no variation in price paid to its members for their products other than that paid to nonmember farmers for similar products.

(b) In selecting officers and managers of such farmer-owned business houses it shall not constitute a violation of the provisions of this act relative to stock ownership and control for a farmer or farmers to be selected as officers, but in no instance shall such officer receive a salary more than 100 percent greater than the income of the average farmer he represents. The cost of a special license to such farmer-owned or cooperative business shall be $1 and the payment of all expenses of the Government in satisfying itself that the provisions of this act are observed.

TITLE II—UNIFORM PRICE

SECTION 1. Every business house manufacturing or wholesaling merchandise shall file with the Government a schedule of prices based on unit container package of merchandise usually sold, hereafter called "unit of merchandise." Such prices shall be those offered to all customers alike, without discounts of any kind or nature except a discount for cash payments for merchandise sold at time-sales prices.

To sell at a price different from the price filed shall constitute a violation of this act.

SEC. 2. Any discount or lower price given to purchasers of more than one unit of merchandise at a time shall be deemed a violation of this act, whether such discount takes the form of a cash discount, price rebate, advertising allowance, window display material, free merchandise, or a combination of one or more of these prohibited methods or any manipulation of books or service. The intent being to place all buyers, large or small, on exactly the same basis, compelling the manufacturers and wholesalers to sell to all customers at uniform unit prices.

SEC. 3. A manufacturing business house may also have a manufacturer's price lower than the wholesale price for that part of its product destined to become a part of the materials entering into the assembling of another and more finished article. The prices of such semifinished articles shall be filed with the Government in a similar manner to other articles hereinbefore referred to.

SEC. 4. It is provided that the terms of section 2 shall apply to merchandise rented or used under contract, contingent sale, yearly, weekly, or daily service contract, block sales, or any method of compelling the wholesaler, retailer, operator, lessee, or agent to buy, lease, or contract for merchandise he does not want for the opportunity of buying, renting, or leasing that which he needs. The intent of this article is to give the purchaser the right to buy such individual unit packages as he desires.

SEC. 5. Any business house doing business or entering into mercantile pursuits as a wholesaler shall file with the Government a price schedule of all articles sold and of every change in prices contemplated, by placing the name of each article handled and its price on a uniform 3 by 5 filing card, and such unit price filed with the Government shall be the price per unit charged for all sales of that unit. Each change of price schedule shall be accompanied by a filing fee of 25 cents: Provided, however, That wholesalers or manufacturers may sell "seconds", or damaged goods, or goods liable to perish unless sold quickly, at lower rates than charged for other and regular goods, but in each such instance the manufacturer or wholesaler shall mark in large print on the bill given to each customer "Damaged" or "Seconds", as the case may be, and send to the Government daily an exact duplicate of the marked bill given to each customer. In the event that the Government shall become convinced that the business house is using the "Damaged" or "Seconds" billing as a means of discriminating between its customers, the license to do business shall be withdrawn until satisfactory changes and amends have been made.

SEC. 6. Any business house doing business as a retailer shall charge a unit price for all packages of merchandise, giving no advantage to large quantity buyers. Any retail business house charging different prices to different customers shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act.

SEC. 7. The right of any business house to name its own prices is conceded and granted, but no manufacturer's or wholesaler's contract shall bind a retail business house as to the price it shall charge its customers. Any contracts to the contrary already in existence or made after the passage of this act are hereby declared null and void.

SEC. 8. The right of any business house to practice "chiseling", to sell at "cutthroat prices", or enter into so-called "unfair competition", which benefits all of the customers alike is hereby acknowledged and granted and any laws, codes, rules, or regulations to the contrary are hereby repealed, the intent being to give free and unhampered opportunity to make competition the life of trade in order to benefit and protect the consuming public.

SEC. 9. Any manufacturing business house may elect to have one or more retailers in a locality handle its products exclusively or may give exclusive sales rights to a select number of retailers by securing a special "exclusive sale" license for its own place of business and a similar special license for each retailer so contracted with, if the Government agent is convinced that the retail business houses so designated are individually owned and not in any way connected with the manufacturer desirous of dealing exclusively with such retailer. Such exclusive sales license shall cost the procurer a fee of $1 and the payment of any and all expenses that the Government may incur to satisfy itself that the business houses in question are complying with the law.

SEC. 10. Nothing in this act shall prevent a manufacturer from establishing agents to sell its goods in trucks or otherwise from house to house providing such merchandise is limited to a few well-defined lines, and not a complete line of groceries, hardware, or other business.

SEC. 11. The intent of sections 9 and 10 is to protect manufacturers in the choice of their own merchandising methods and to protect the public from centralization or control of business under either complete or partial individual ownership or group ownership.

SEC. 12. A manufacturing business house wishing to obtain an exclusive sales license shall forward to the Government a written statement as to its present and proposed methods of sale, the kinds of merchandise handled, its forms of contract, and a list of its owners. If the Government is convinced that the applying business house is not seeking to monopolize and centralize all business into the hands of a few then such license shall be issued at a cost of $1 and any expense incurred in satisfying the Government that the business house is complying with the law.

SEC. 13. In the event of any manufacturing or wholesaling business house being unable to fill all its orders it shall apportion its deliveries in such a manner that all would-be buyers receive some merchandise, preference being given in the distribution to the smaller buyers, the intent of this being to prevent manufacturers or wholesalers from claiming that they are sold out in advance to some one or more of the large business houses and thus show discrimination against the small buyers.

SEC. 14. No manufacturer or wholesaler calling for orders or delivering merchandise to a retailer as a business policy shall discriminate against small retailers by not calling for orders or delivering merchandise to them as frequently or conveniently as they do to the large retail business houses, or by arranging their delivery routes so as to discriminate against small merchants.

SEC. 15. Nothing in this act shall be construed to limit a business house from determining its own policy in giving terms of payment, except that at any and all times proffers of cash payments must be accepted and the prices must be uniform in all cases, the intent of this section being to prevent discrimination against any retail business houses, small or large, if unable to give satisfactory evidence of ability to care for credit accounts.

SEC. 16. In the matter of merchandise distribution and sales where a wholesaler elects to sell to a select list of retailers it shall be construed as a violation of this section if the ownership of both the buying and selling business houses in any transaction are owned partly or entirely by the same individuals or group of individuals, the intent of this section being to prevent the centralization of ownership of manufacturing, wholesaling, and retailing, or any combination thereof, in any one individual or any group operating more than one unit either under the same or separate and distinct names yet uniformly or partially owned by the same individual or group of individuals.

TITLE III—UNIFORM PACKAGES

SECTION 1. To protect the consumer, any and all retail packages, cartons, containers, etc., in which unit retail merchandise is sold shall, at the discretion of the Government, be standardized as to size and quantity of contents and labeled in accordance with contents, with the quantity designated, using the legal standard of weights and measures.

SEC. 2. The unit package used at the time of the passage of this act shall continue in use until permission or order is given by the Government for a change, but in no instance shall permission to change be granted if the package or carton is enlarged or contracted so as to discriminate against small buyers.

SEC. 3. A period of 2 years from the passage of this act shall be allowed to manufacturers to readjust their packages and labels in accordance with the terms of this act.

SEC. 4. The Government shall compel the adoption of a line of standardized packages and cartons, etc., as to size and contents, it being the intent of this section to protect the purchasing public from possible deception or misunderstanding as to the amount and the quality of merchandise offered it for sale.

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SECTION 1. It shall be unlawful for a manufacturing business house to install a private transportation system of its own, either in the nature of a pipe line, a railroad, or a special fleet of auto trucks, whereby it is enabled to evade or overcome the obvious spirit and intent of this act, such special private transportation systems being permitted by the Government only if and when it is satisfied that the facilities open to other manufacturing business houses are on a par with the permitted private systems, and this prohibition shall apply to tank cars and to refrigerator cars on railroads or highways, and similar privileged means of transportation of merchandise at present not open to other than the largest of the manufacturing business houses.

SEC. 2. A manufacturer or wholesaler shall be allowed to sell only to bona fide dealers and the definition of wholesaler shall be a business house engaged exclusively in the distribution of goods to retail business houses and shall be so licensed, and no manufacturer or wholesaler shall sell goods to individual consumers if such consumers are not engaged in a retail or similar mercantile industry but merely wish to buy in quantity lots for an advantage to be gained thereby over other consumers who desire smaller quantities.

TITLE V—TERMS USED

SECTION 1. As used in this act—

(a) The term "manufacturer" means any business house that changes raw materials into completed or partly fabricated articles of trade, or any business house that takes partly fabricated materials and completes them or completes any operation or assembly between the raw materials and the completed article of commerce.

(b) The term "wholesaler" means any wholesaler, jobber, or broker who maintains a business place where merchandise is sold to retail merchants, or any business house that engages in the sale of goods or merchandise between the manufacturing producer and the retail merchant.

(c) The term "retail merchant" means a business house that sells to the ultimate customer.

(d) The term "interstate traffic" shall be deemed to cover any article of trade made up, in whole or in part, in packages, or merchandise shipped in bulk, and transported from one State into another for either manufacturing, wholesaling, or retailing purposes.

TITLE VI—SEPARABILITY AND SHORT TERMS

SECTION 1. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 2. This act may be known as the "Decentralization Act."

SEC. 3. The administration of this act shall be intrusted to the Department of the Interior, which is authorized to locate convenient offices, make rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act. An appropriation of $100,000 is authorized to furnish initial costs.

TITLE VII—PENALTY

SECTION 1. The license of any business house convicted of violating any provision of this act shall be revoked by the Government, and any business house operating without a license shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 for each day of such operation, but the maximum fine for any one period of operation without a license shall not exceed $365,000.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN].

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include certain statistics from educational authorities on education.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, the present situation in education is cause for grave national concern. Our American school system is confronted not merely with the necessity for retrenchment; it is fighting for its very existence. A crisis has been reached. The time is at hand when we as a Nation must decide whether we shall give more than lip service to our professed faith in the principle of free universal education, or whether we shall stand idly by and allow our schools to perish.

THE DEPRESSION HASTENED THE CRISIS

The utter break-down of the school system which has occurred in numerous localities during the past few years has been associated directly, in most cases, with the serious economic reverses we have experienced. But the difficulties of the school life lie beyond this depression, nor will those difficulties disappear merely with the return of economic prosperity. The depression only hastened a crisis which, sooner or later, would have come anyway in the absence of needed reforms. Even in times of prosperity, property taxes which always have formed and, in a majority of the States, still form the financial basis of the public-school system, in many localities cannot yield sufficient revenues to insure even a minimum standard of education. Moreover, the prevailing unit of taxation and administration has been, and is, the small school district, often lacking sufficient resources to support a satisfactory school system. Consequently, in this period of adversity, the schools were soon imperiled.

OUR SCHOOLS IMPERILED

Among the emergency influences immediately responsible for the present plight of the schools should be mentioned: Tax delinquency, reduced valuations due to the decline of property values, reduced valuations resulting from the acquisition of property by the Federal Government, suspension of activity or withdrawal of important business enterprises, the loss of school funds in closed banks, nonpayment of taxes by corporations holding cut-over lands or abandoned mines, the damage done by drought and storms, a heavy load of indebtedness on the part of school districts, and an unusual increase in school enrollments, as the depression forced children and young people out of industry to make way for adult workers.

INCREASING ENROLLMENT—DECREASING REVENUES

Increasing enrollments and decreasing revenues have made it impossible for the school program to be carried on effectively. Total enrollments have continued to grow year by year. High-school enrollment alone has increased from a little more than 4,000,000 pupils—4,155,350—in 1929 to more than six and a half million—estimated at 6,719,000—at the present time. On the other hand, school expenditures have dropped from two and a fourth billion dollars—$2,250,563,511—in 1929 to about a billion and three-fourths—estimated at 1,842,581,000—for this year. The result was inevitable; children have been denied some of the most important, and in many cases all, the educational opportunities which should have been theirs (National Education Association and Department of Superintendence, Joint Commission on the Emergency in Education. Major Trends in Public Education. Washington, D. C.: the Association, 1934, pp. 3-4).

THE SCHOOLS HAVE BEEN FORCED TO ADOPT DRASTIC MEASURES

As school revenues dwindled, teachers' salaries were reduced in an effort to make ends meet. Reductions in these salaries, already meager, commonly ranged from 10 to 40 percent. At the present time, about 250,000 teachers, nearly one-third of them all, are teaching for less than $750 per year, an amount roughly equal to the minimum earnings of "factory or mechanical workers or artisans" under the well-known "blanket code", put into operation by the administration July 15, 1929. One teacher in sixteen—about 50,000—will receive less than $450 for his services this year (National Education Association and Department of Superintendence, Joint Commission on the Emergency in Education. Major Trends in Public Education. Washington, D. C.: the Association, 1934, p. 10).

1,400,000 CHILDREN IN CONDEMNED SCHOOL BUILDINGS

School building operations were deferred, not only the construction of new buildings, but also needed repairs on buildings already in service. Capital outlay expenditures dropped from about $375,000,000 in 1929 to about $100,000,000 during each of the past 3 years. In view of the fact that school construction was not keeping pace with school-housing needs at the beginning of this period, recent increases in enrollment have resulted in a serious shortage of building facilities. It is estimated that 1,400,000 pupils are housed daily in buildings which have been condemned as unsafe or insanitary; a million more are housed in portable, rented, and other temporary structures, including abandoned lodge halls, churches, stores, and theaters; 600,000 can attend school only part time because there is space for only part of the group at any one time (National Education Association and Department of Superintendence, Joint Commission on the Emergency in Education. Major Trends in Public Education. Washington, D. C.: the Association, 1934, p. 4; and National Education Association, Research Division. The Nation's School Building Needs. Research Bulletin 13, pp. 8-12, January 1935).

SCHOOL DISTRICTS BURDENED WITH THREE-BILLION-DOLLAR DEBT

Numerous other economies were effected in order to keep the schools functioning as effectively as possible.

Credit facilities were employed to obtain additional funds. The total indebtedness of school districts increased approximately $700,000,000 between 1930 and 1932 (from $2,425,796,439 to $3,121,538,276), more than twice the amount of increase in any of the three preceding 2-year periods (U. S. Department of the Interior, Office of Education; Biennial Survey of Education in the United States, 1928-30; same 1930-32; Washington, D. C.: Government Printing Office, 1931, 1933; 1931, vol. 2, p. 61; 1933, p. 73).

I cite these efforts to economize and this attempt to carry on by borrowing to show that the people of this country have not willingly abandoned the schools. They do not want their children deprived of educational opportunities. They are making every reasonable effort, and in some cases heroic sacrifices, on behalf of the schools. But in thousands of cases, the fullest possible use of local tax and credit resources combined with the strictest economy has not made it possible to keep schools open or to maintain them at a satisfactory level of efficiency.

IMPORTANT SUBJECTS ELIMINATED

Many schools have eliminated important subjects and services from their usual offerings. Health services, educational and vocational guidance, physical education, and courses in music, art, home economics, and industrial arts are among those which have been abandoned.

Teaching loads have been increased. This is especially true in the cities, where classes of 45 to 60 pupils are not uncommon. School enrollments between 1930 and 1934 increased by approximately 1,000,000 pupils, but there were 30,000 fewer teachers in 1934 than in 1930. Obviously, a teacher with 50 pupils cannot give them the individual attention which they should have. In such a situation discipline overshadows educational guidance (National Education Association and Department of Superintendence, Joint Commission on the Emergency in Education. Major Trends in Public Education, Washington, D. C.: the Association, 1934, p. 7).

Schools have gone without needed equipment and supplies. Expenditures last year for school books and supplies in 728 cities were nearly $4,000,000 less than in 1930-31, in spite of the fact that 150,000 pupils have been added to the schools of these cities since 1931. This represents a decrease of 33.6 percent in expenditures for school books and a decrease of 30.3 percent in the amount spent for school supplies. One superintendent reports that some of his rural schools do not have even one textbook. Another writes that the cost of instructional supplies in his State has been reduced from approximately $1 per pupil per year to 5 cents a pupil, which means, of course, that virtually no supplies are being provided.

2,400 SCHOOLS CLOSED IN 18 STATES

School terms have been shortened all the way from a few days' time to several months; especially last year, 1933-34, and this year. Figures recently collected by the United States Office of Education indicate that more than 30 thousand school districts (31,672) were unable this year to operate schools from State and local resources for the usual length of term. In these districts, having about 100,000 schools and more than 3 million school children, the average reduction in the school term was estimated to be 3 months. On April 25, 1935, more than 2,400 schools in at least 18 different States were reported closed for lack of funds. More than 14,000 additional schools in at least 21 States would have been closed if it had been necessary to pay teachers' salaries in cash (United States Department of the Interior, Office of Education. Financial Situation in Rural Schools and Small Independent School Districts, 1934-35. Circular No. 138. Washington, D. C.: Government Printing Office, 1935, p. 4; and National Education Association, Research Division. Current data on closed schools. 3 p. mimeographed).

TEACHERS' SALARIES UNPAID

Teachers' salaries often have remained unpaid, or have been paid with tax-anticipation warrants, certificates of indebtedness, or scrip which could be cashed, if at all, only at large discounts. School doors would have closed in hundreds of districts during the past 5 years except for the loyalty and devotion of teachers, who have placed the welfare and needs of children above every other consideration. When schools opened in September 1934 there were 467 school districts in 8 States with no funds to begin the school term. The salaries of the 1745 teachers needed in these districts for 8 months, even at the low rate of $50 a month, would be about $700,000. In these districts, and hundreds of others, the teachers have faithfully carried on their work as long as possible (U. S. Department of the Interior, Office of Education. Financial Situation in Rural Schools and Small Independent School Districts, 1934-35. Circular No. 138. Washington, D. C.: Government Printing Office, 1935, p. 3).

On March 8, 1934, a former Member of this House serving on a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee collected information on the amount of teachers' salaries actually unpaid and the amount of teachers' salaries which had been paid in warrants or scrip which could be cashed, if at all, only at large discounts. He found that salaries amounting to more than $57,000,000 were in arrears and that outstanding salary warrants, noncashable or subject to heavy discounts, amounted to nearly $50,000,000. The situation has not changed materially except in Chicago, where an R. F. C. loan of $22,300,000 was used to pay salaries in arrears. In other words, school districts even yet owe teachers about $25,000,000 and still have outstanding salary warrants of doubtful value amounting to about $50,000,000 (Hon. James Simpson, Jr., Memorandum to the Members of the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives. March 19, 1934. 14 pp. mimeographed).

TUITION CHARGED IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Public schools have become tuition schools in several instances, admission fees being charged openly or through subterfuge. For example, in November 1934 tuition was being charged in 77 Arkansas public schools. These schools ordinarily serve some 12,800 pupils; but about 3,800, or nearly 30 percent, were kept out of school by these tuition charges. (Mort, Paul R., The Present Difficulties of the School, an article reproduced at the request of the Honorable WALTER F. GEORGE in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 29, 1935).

A number of schools remained closed throughout the past school year, this year, or both, no provision being made for the education of children in those districts. The meaning of this situation to the boys and girls concerned is revealed in the following letter written by a 14-year-old girl in one of the States of the Middle West:

Last year we thought we were hard up because school closed April 1. This year I guess we aren't going to have school at all. Eighth graders from our school and from Turtle River are trying to keep up our work. Pastor T's wife has us at the parsonage Friday mornings to hear our lessons. But most of the time is taken up with her asking how we do things here and comparing with the ways in Norway. Well, I guess I'll have to give up my plan to take high school. With the school closed (I feel like crying every time I see it with the doors and windows boarded up) I'll be too old before I am ready to go to high school. Do you think you could get on without a school or even a set of books? Grace has the arithmetic VIII, and I have the grammar. Teacher let us borrow those when school closed. I guess she had a hunch how this year was going to be. For all of us that go to the parsonage there is one history book. It's the one the Swanson's eldest boy had the year he went to town. It stops before the war, but I guess there hasn't been much since then except trouble, and I don't need a book to learn about that (Amidon, Beulah, Schools in the Red. Survey Graphic 23: 266-70, 295-96, June 1934).

SHALL OUR CHILDREN PAY?

Shall children pay for this depression? Are we going to permit them either to be deprived entirely of the right to attend school or to be herded together in buildings unfit for habitation for a few weeks' instruction in the three R's at the hands of overworked, underpaid, and unpaid teachers, working without books or instructional supplies? We will not permit the continuance of this deplorable situation! The Federal Government must face squarely its educational responsibilities and see that no boy or girl is deprived of educational opportunities regardless of his place of residence.

THE EDUCATIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Education is a national problem of major importance. Self-government without an educated citizenry is an impossibility which has been recognized and forcefully argued by every great statesman since the founding of this Republic. Our first President wisely advised in his farewell address:

Promote then as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

Our present Chief Executive recently said:

Without the aid of a far-flung educational system in developing the capacities of individuals to produce material comforts and to react intelligently to public problems, the effort of government would be fruitless indeed. All the possibilities of a democracy rest squarely upon education.

So it is, that as Benjamin Franklin observed:

The good education of youth has been esteemed by wise men in all ages as the surest foundation * * * of the Commonwealth.

EDUCATION VITAL TO DEMOCRACY

A self-governing people must understand their national problems. They must be able to decide issues intelligently and to choose good leaders. In a democracy, national welfare can rise no higher than its source, and that source is the general enlightenment of the people as a whole. An educated citizenry is more important now than ever before, because of the grave social and economic problems with which we are confronted. We cannot afford to have sections of our population deprived of the right to learn. We are already burdened with 4,500,000 illiterates—people who cannot read or write in any language. Then there is an estimated 8,000,000 more who are functionally illiterate, that is, unable to read and write well enough to make any practical use of these skills.

EDUCATION A NATIONAL PROBLEM

The Nation is now a single economic and social unit. Barriers of time and space no longer separate us from one another. Telephone, telegraph, radio, and Nation-wide press services enable us to keep in touch with the most remote and isolated communities. Rapid transportation makes it possible to go from coast to coast in a few hours' time, thus encouraging travel and the exchange of products and commodities. All the States are acquiring common interests and purposes; all are becoming highly dependent one upon the others. The immediate and continued effects in all parts of the country of the recent drought in the Middle West illustrate the economic unity which already exists.

Another clear illustration of the decreasing importance of State boundaries can be cited in the field of law enforcement. Not long ago a notorious kidnaping case occurred in Oklahoma; the ransom was paid in Missouri; the kidnaped man was hidden in Texas; part of the ransom money was exchanged in Minnesota and part in Texas; one of the kidnapers was found in Colorado; another of the kidnapers and his wife were taken in Tennessee; one of the criminals was imprisoned in Kansas for a time, then taken to California.

In 1930 the average passenger-automobile mileage for every man, woman, and child in the United States was 2,697. And closely associated with the freedom of travel which this figure implies is the growing tendency toward frequent changes in family residence. According to the 1930 census, 1 person in 3 resides in a State different from the one in which he was born and usually educated (U. S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census. Fifteenth Census of the United States. Washington, D. C.: Government Printing Office, 1930, vol. 2, ch. 4).

Some important educational implications of this growing unity and interdependence among our people are suggested by a recent analysis of school enrollments in three small cities in Missouri. In 1934, among the 4,218 pupils in the schools of these cities, there were pupils who at some time had attended school in some one or more of 39 other States. About one-fifth of all the pupils who had ever been enrolled in any other school had entered from outside the State of Missouri (Capps, A. G., and Carpenter, W. W. The Fruit Basket Turns Over. Journal of the National Education Association 23: 54, February 1934).

It should be apparent, therefore, that education is no longer a local problem, or a State problem, exclusively. Just as the Federal Government has become interested in our great system of arterial highways and has assumed a share in their construction, so it must maintain interest in the education of the children in the States which these highways connect. The child whose education is neglected in Arkansas, Alabama, and Michigan, soon may be in a position to affect the welfare of society in New York, California, or Minnesota. In the words of President Roosevelt:

As the different parts of our territories come steadily nearer by reason of time-saving devices of modern communication and travel, each man and woman becomes more and more responsible for the human conditions surrounding all of his nearer and nearer neighbors.

EDUCATION JUSTIFIABLE USE FOR FEDERAL FUNDS

Federal aid for schools is a justifiable use of Government funds. It is sometimes argued that the Federal Government has no right to spend on the schools of one State money raised by Federal taxation in another State. If that is true, neither does the Government have the right to build a road in one State with money collected in another, nor to build post offices, purchase and maintain national parks, construct irrigation reservoirs, develop harbors, or do anything which benefits one State more than any other. To circumscribe Federal expenditures in any such fashion is neither possible nor desirable. They must be justified, not on the grounds that tax money is being returned to its source, but that the object accomplished is vital to the welfare of the Nation as a whole. Furthermore, it should be remembered that a tax collected in one State often originates from wealth located in other States. The levies against a large corporation in Chicago may be derived from Minnesota iron mines, Oklahoma oil wells, or Florida orange groves. It is a function of the Federal Government to draw upon all the Nation's resources, regardless of how much or how little they may be concentrated at a few points, in support of projects and agencies essential to the welfare of the whole people. We tax one man's property to educate the children of his neighbors. We tax the property of a whole State to educate the children of the whole State. Why should we not tax the Nation's wealth wherever it exists to educate the Nation's children wherever they may live? No right is more fundamental than the right of a child to a decent educational start in life; no Federal obligation more vital than that of self-preservation through the proper education of the citizens of tomorrow.

INEQUALITIES AMONG STATES

The States differ widely in their ability to support schools, which we may define roughly as the amount of money which is available for the education of each child of school age. One indication of these differences in ability is the range in wealth per child aged 6-17 years. In the poorest State there is barely $3,000, in the wealthiest State over $23,500—a ratio of approximately 1 to 8. When income per child is considered, the range is from less than $700 in 3 States to more than $2,800 in 2 States, a ratio of 1 to 4 (Carr, William G., Federal Assistance in Equalizing Educational Opportunity, Washington, D. C.: National Education Association, 1934, pp. 22-26).

A comprehensive study has just been completed of the amount of revenue which could have been raised in each of 48 States during the decade 1922 to 1932 if the model tax plan recommended by the committee of the National Tax Association had been in effect. These sums are then compared with the amounts needed for education, assuming an average expenditure per child equal to the national average. In one State the whole amount that could have been raised under the model tax plan, for all governmental enterprises, was less than the amount needed for schools, with a per pupil cost equal to the national average. In 11 of the poorest States more than 50 percent of the possible collections would have been required.

State	Percent of possible tax yield required for schools, assuming a per pupil cost equal to the national average	Percent of actual tax yield now devoted to education
Mississippi	105.60	27.89
Alabama	83.49	33.52
South Carolina	82.87	31.41
Arkansas	74.74	31.41
Georgia	74.11	26.52
North Carolina	74.11	34.92
Kentucky	64.10	29.02
Tennessee	58.79	29.61
Oklahoma	57.22	35.18
Louisiana	52.22	25.91
Texas	50.03	27.99

Quoted in an article inserted by U. S. Senator WALTER F. GEORGE into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 29, 1935.

DEPRESSION STRIKES HARDEST AT POOREST REGIONS

Depressions strike hardest at the poorest regions. The States which were spending the least for schools in 1930—whose school program was meager at best—are the States which have suffered the largest proportionate reductions in school costs. For example, the decrease in average expenditure between 1930 and 1932 in Minnesota was $8.40 per pupil or 7.5 percent. In Arkansas it was approximately the same, $8.38 per pupil, but in this case the decrease was 19.6 percent of the 1930 expenditure. The actual amount of reduction in the two States was nearly the same, but in one State the remaining expenditure was $104.46 per pupil, and in the other only $34.39. The effect of the depression has been to perpetuate and emphasize the differences in educational opportunities which already existed within and among the several States—to weaken the best features of the better school systems and virtually destroy those of the districts least able to support education.

State ¹	Expenditure per pupil		Amount of reduction	Percent of reduction	Rank of State ¹ according to—
	1930	1932			Percent of reduction	Income per pupil

Differences in economic ability such as I have described, augmented by the effects of a prolonged depression, account for the present crisis in education. They demand two kinds of remedial measures: (1) Emergency Federal aid to keep schools open in the immediate future, and (2) the development of a sound program of permanent Federal aid, insuring at least a minimum of educational opportunity to every boy and girl in the Nation.

TWO TYPES OF FEDERAL AID FOR SCHOOLS

Emergency aid for education is imperative in the light of the disastrous conditions of which I have spoken. A certain amount of relief has been given to the schools indirectly through the activities of such Federal agencies as the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, the Public Works Administration, and the Civil Works Administration. I am not unaware of the grants made early in 1934 to keep rural schools open in more than 30 States, nor of the grants to a few States during the current school year for a similar purpose. I have only praise for the conscientious efforts of the able Administrator of Federal Emergency Relief, Mr. Hopkins, to help the schools as much as possible insofar as was consistent with the task assigned to him. But allow me to point out that Mr. Hopkins must necessarily be concerned with other matters, namely, the relief of human suffering and distress. He himself has repeatedly said:

I believe relief funds should not be used to finance educational work in the United States. * * * The whole question of whether the Federal Government should give aid to schools is something which is entirely outside of my province, and one on which I do not wish to express any judgment. I simply feel that it should not be a relief enterprise. * * * I think one of the greatest mistakes we could make would be to confuse the identity of the school system in any way with the relief administration. * * * Education should be divorced from relief, and in my judgment, relief funds should not be transferred from the purpose for which they were given to any enterprise, no matter how worthy or how important.

DIRECT LEGISLATION FOR EDUCATION NEEDED

Most of the educational work now being done by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration is for adults and is carried on in connection with special fields of endeavor. Insofar as it touches the public-school system, which, after all, should be our first concern, the emergency educational program aids only the schools in the most desperate circumstances, and not all of these. Moreover, there is no assurance that the relief thus far available will continue, or that relief funds are adequate to supply the emergency Federal aid urgently needed by the schools.

Relief of teachers in destitute circumstances is necessary, but this does not assure school facilities for those who need them. Our first concern should be the proper education of boys and girls. Occasionally the two objectives—relief and education—may coincide, but certainly they do not always do so. The Relief Administration has undoubtedly prevented the most acute distress among unemployed teachers, but it has not prevented—nor should it be expected to prevent—gross abridgments in educational opportunity. Direct legislation is needed.

How far relief funds have fallen short of meeting the real educational need is apparent, not only from the deplorable conditions in the schools to which I have referred but also from the most cursory analysis of the relief funds used this year to keep schools open. Complete figures are not available with respect to the amount of money actually paid out for schools by the Relief Administration this year, but on the basis of definite reports from 13 of the 19 States said to be most eligible for Federal aid it is relatively certain that not more than $1,500,000 had been used to keep schools open through April 25, 1935. Yes; only a million and a half dollars, as compared with the $75,000,000 which the Education Committee of the Seventy-third Congress, after extended hearings, fixed as the amount of Federal emergency aid which should be used on behalf of the schools during the present school year, 1934-35. Likewise, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, on the basis of its activities during 1934, included in an itemized estimate of expenditures for July 1934 to February 1935, inclusive, the sum of $48,000,000 for schools—$8,000,000 per month, September through February.

RELIEF ADMINISTRATION FUNDS INADEQUATE

Incidentally, the deficiency appropriation requested by the Relief Administration, including the $48,000,000 for schools was enacted, whereupon the Education Committee withdrew support from its bill appropriating $75,000,000 for education. Then came the drought and other increased demands on the Relief Administration, with the result that only $1,500,000 has been found to keep schools open (National Education Association, research division. Current Data on Closed Schools; 3 p., mimeographed; and Committee on Education in the 73d Cong., Hon. John J. Douglas, chairman. Report No. 1562. Federal Emergency Aid to Education. Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on May 10, 1934. Statement of Harry L. Hopkins in the hearings conducted by the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, Wednesday, May 16, 1934).

The educational system has not been maintained. We have not done as Mr. Hopkins requested—we have not divorced education from relief. Let us without delay, appropriate sufficient funds to insure an adequate school program throughout the United States during the next few years and place these funds under the direction of the United States Office of Education where they can be devoted to the education of children, rather than to the relief of destitute teachers.

MINIMUM EDUCATION SHOULD BE GUARANTEED

A sound program of permanent Federal aid for schools should also be developed, because emergency aid is but a stop-gap, for reasons which I have given. We must be concerned not only with keeping schools open, but with guaranteeing to all children a certain minimum quality of education. Legislation to accomplish this important purpose will need to be drafted with care. We shall have to solve a number of difficult problems, as is always true when Congress enters upon a new and important legislative field. But we can solve them, if we face these issues candidly, and intelligently bring to bear on them the best information that is available. I know that we shall need to exercise care in drafting the legislation, so that it will extend financial aid without at the same time giving the Federal Government control over the program carried on in the various States and localities. We must see to it that Federal aid is distributed on a sound basis—that it goes to the localities which are least able to maintain their schools. These issues are important but not insuperable. We can, and shall, face them successfully, once we accept the fundamental proposition that the Federal Government must share the cost of a minimum program of education for every boy and girl in America.

THE LUNDEEN EDUCATION BILL, H. R. 6360

I am not now urging you to support a particular piece of legislation, although on March 4, 1935, I introduced a bill, H. R. 6360, which I regard as a step in the right direction. At least it would serve as the basis for deliberation and discussion, as would a number of other bills also introduced at this session. My bill may need amendment; I am perfectly willing that it should be amended. But I am not willing to have the whole question of Federal aid barred from our deliberations. Let us face this issue squarely, and attack vigorously and honestly the difficult problems which we know are before us. If the facts needed for the solution of these problems are not already available, a national survey of education should be authorized and carried out immediately. Let us proceed at once to develop a plan for the permanent cooperation of local, State, and Federal Governments in financing an educational program consistent with the welfare of our people and the safety of our democracy.

Read charts thus: The State with the highest income per child in 1932 also ranked first in wealth per child but forty-seventh in the ratio of adults to school children. This State ranked fifth in school expenditures per pupil in attendance.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD].

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, more than a century before our great War of Independence, a system was charted to provide a means of local government for the isolated settlements scattered throughout the early colonies.

In those days, each little community was a self-supporting entity. It had to be. Commerce was then in its infancy. Good roads existed only in dreams of the future. Communication facilities were slow and unreliable. Most of our modern necessities were then unheard-of luxuries.

Such living conditions no longer exist in our country. Growth of population and the increasing application of scientific discoveries and inventions in the improvement of living standards have caused and brought about a complete change.

The system which provided a complete set of public officials for every minute community worked admirably in the days before changing conditions knitted towns, villages, counties, and even States in bonds of close interdependence.

It worked so well, in fact, that as the country grew and as the population increased, the system doubled and redoubled itself. Unfortunately, as expansion and growth in Government took place, no effort was made to eliminate offices and functions as they became obsolete and unnecessary.

This failure throughout the years to keep the tree of Government carefully pruned of deadwood is causing the local branches of our Government tree to bend and crack beneath their excessive weight.

As a result of this process of continually adding but never discarding, the American people today are burdened with the cost of more than 182,000 units of local government, each possessing the self-perpetuating power of levying and collecting taxes.

A survey by the Bureau of the Census lists the following subsidiary units of our 48 State governments: 3,062 counties; 16,659 cities, towns, villages, and boroughs; 128,548 school districts; 19,769 townships; 14,573 minor civil divisions of government in the several States.

To maintain these taxing units and the vast horde of public officials on their pay rolls, the people are paying approximately ten thousand million dollars annually, or more than $300 for each family.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. These subdivisions were planned largely in the days of the horse and carriage. The automobile has changed conditions so that now we could save a great deal in expenditures with proper planning.

Mr. McLEOD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Does the gentleman's tabulation include drainage districts, municipal improvement districts, and other organizations of that character?

Mr. McLEOD. It does with the exception of drainage districts; I have not included them.

Accurate figures for comparative purposes are not available prior to the year 1880. In that year we find from statistics compiled by the Census Bureau that general property taxes of State governments and their local subsidiaries totaled $94,187,000. Such taxes have now jumped to more than $5,000,000,000.

During the period 1880 to 1932, the debts of local branches of our Government increased from $1,123,279,000 to $17,576,839,000. At the same time the population increased from 50,262,382 to approximately 124,000,000.

This means that during the time our population increased about two and a half times, local government debt increased more than 15 times, and taxes have been multiplied to the point where they are more than 53 times the amount paid in 1880.

Some of this astounding rise in the cost of government is, of course, due to the increase in population. The increase, however, is so entirely out of proportion to the growth in population that it is quite apparent that a major portion of the blame must be laid to failure to adjust the machinery of local government to efficiently and economically cope with the conditions of a new age.

We must remember that although in the younger days of our country 8 out of every 10 made their living by tilling the soil, today only 2 out of every 8 are engaged in agricultural pursuits. A steady and continuous trend toward centralization of population has completely eliminated, in many sections of the country, the need for countless offices which were once essential.

Distance, a formidable obstacle to commerce in colonial days, has become a factor of negligible consequence. Railroads, the automobile, the airplane, the telephone, the telegraph, and the radio have drawn communities close together. The development of transportation facilities has brought about the transformation of independent, self-supporting villages, towns, cities, and even States into closely connected interdependent units.

It has become a common and everyday practice to depend upon distant parts of the country for much of our daily supply of fruits, vegetables, and other commodities.

In spite of all this, the mechanism of local government has proved resistant to adjustment and is still trying to function as it did many decades ago. For instance, it has come to my attention that several dozen asylums have been maintained in a State to house inmates who could be far better and much more efficiently taken care of in one institution.

A case has been reported where the staff and employees of a local poorhouse outnumbered the inmates. Expensive road-repairing and road-building machinery has been owned by each of a number of adjacent counties in a State and used but a few days in the year, when one set of machinery for the combined counties could have been used to far better advantage and at a considerable saving to the taxpayers.

As a further example of how the various States are literally cluttered with cumbersome and expensive machinery of government, I will mention that in my own State of Michigan there are 95 townships with less than a hundred voters in each. In each individual township, however, there are 4 justices of the peace, 4 constables, a clerk, a treasurer, a road commissioner, and very frequently, a highway overseer.

There are 5 counties in the State of Michigan, maintaining a total of 286 public officials, which have 2,000 less inhabitants than just 1 township which is served by only 4 officials, aside from justices of the peace.

Conditions are no worse in this State than in many others, but since 1912, the gross debt of minor civil divisions of the State government has increased 1,264.1 percent. The debt of the State government for the same period increased 754.6 percent. In 1912, the combined gross debt of Michigan and all local subdivisions of the State, less sinking-fund assets set aside to meet such debt, averaged $20.43 per capita. In 1932 it had jumped to $157.66 per capita.

A half century ago 65 percent of the population in Michigan was rural. Today approximately three-fourths of the citizens of the State live in urban areas.

This change has not been accompanied by a corresponding adjustment and revision of the structure of local government. The result is that the taxpayers of this particular State I am citing as an example are forced to contribute unnecessarily at least $25,000,000 yearly for the upkeep of the 83 counties, 472 cities and villages, the 7,069 school districts, and the 1,268 townships, all of which possess the power to levy taxes or incur debts.

There is one government unit in the United States which does not have a horde of parasitic offices and useless officeholders to waste the taxpayers' money. That is the District of Columbia which has but one unit of government for a population of almost half a million citizens. It is one of the best governed areas in the United States. No taxes are levied for the support of the usual machinery of counties, towns, townships, school districts, or other units of local-taxing bodies. By contrast with its single unit of government, Michigan has 1 unit for every 544 citizens, Nevada 1 for every 230, and New York 1 for every 1,200.

Under our Constitution the Federal Government cannot intervene directly in the matter of abolishing and eliminating the useless and anachronistic offices and functions of local government which are dissipating and wasting the taxpayers' money. Any action to bring about this vital economy must be taken by the States themselves.

Some States have already made good progress toward the abolition of obsolete offices, and have pruned many of the dead twigs from their branches. It is self-evident, however, that the maximum efficiency and economy possible can only be obtained by a concerted, unified, and Nation-wide program.

The question is, Who could start such a program? It is equally beyond the jurisdiction of any single State government or the United States Congress. Every 4 years the people of every State join in electing a Chief Executive to jointly, and in a national sense, guard their interests and well-being. As such a representative, the President is the logical and only official who can properly take the initiative in calling on the various States to weed out and eliminate the useless impedimenta which are actually robbing the people of their money.

To pave the way for such a program, and to officially request the President to initiate such a program, I have introduced a resolution in the House of Representatives urging the President to hold a conference with the Governors of the 48 States for the purpose of—

Formulating and urging the adoption of a unified, Nation-wide program among the States to reduce excessive costs of State governments and their local subsidiaries by reorganization of local governmental systems and elimination of all obsolete and unnecessary offices and functions.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Has he examples in his State of Michigan of the consolidation of cities and counties?

Mr. McLEOD. No; I have not.

Mr. COLDEN. May I ask a further observation?

Mr. McLEOD. Certainly.

Mr. COLDEN. I think in the city of St. Louis, Mo., also the city of San Francisco, Calif., there has been a consolidation of city and county governments. Could not the Governor of a State very properly suggest the consolidation of city, county, and township governments in his own State?

Mr. McLEOD. I may say to the gentleman from California that steps have been taken, not to consolidate counties but certain police powers in the States of Arizona, Delaware, Michigan, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Texas, Illinois, Missouri, and Minnesota. Of course, the eventual step and the greatest step possible would be the consolidation of counties. This step has not been taken other than in the State of Missouri. I understand some such action was taken in the State of Missouri.

Mr. COLDEN. If the gentleman will permit, I would call attention to the fact that in southern California civic organizations are giving attention to the subject.

Mr. McLEOD. I am optimistic and hopeful that such action will meet with the enthusiastic and whole-hearted support of the President as he has repeatedly shown a thorough recognition of the great need for overhauling and revising the structure of the country's local taxing units.

During the last Presidential campaign, the President specifically pledged himself to work for this essential saving to the Nation's taxpayers. As an illustration of his thorough understanding of this problem, I quote the following from an address he made at Sioux City, Iowa, September 29, 1932:

In many States we must, through the legislature, and even through constitutional changes, reorganize our local government for the purpose of eliminating unnecessary machinery and unnecessary positions, and for the purpose of consolidating functions and concentrating responsibility in few hands. * * * The President has * * * the right, and even the duty, of taking a moral leadership in this national task. It is a national problem, because in its scope it covers every State, and any problem that is national in this broader sense creates a national moral responsibility in the President himself. * * * I shall use this position of high responsibility to discuss up and down the country, in all seasons, at all times, the duty of reducing taxes, of increasing the efficiency of government, of cutting out the underbrush around our governmental structure, of getting the most public service for every dollar paid by taxation. This I pledge you, and nothing I have said in the campaign transcends in importance this covenant with the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wish to thank the gentleman for his able statement. It is a contribution to the science of government, and I hope that when he reprints he will send copies to each Member's desk, for I believe it will help carry this information to the country.

Mr. McLEOD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. McLEOD. This "underbrush" mentioned by the President is exacting an unnecessary sum every year which amounts to fully $60 for each family in the United States. It is exhausting and depleting our tax sources and endangering vital civic activities and functions, such as public education, fire, health, and police protection.

In analyzing the problem, and it is a problem which we cannot sidestep or escape by endeavoring to ignore it, we find that the taxpayers are supporting a massive, cumbersome, and unwieldy framework of more than 182,000 separate and distinct governing and taxing entities.

We find that the cost of maintaining these units is almost $10,000,000,000 yearly. We find that the debt of local government units is now more than 53 times higher than in 1880, although the population has increased by two and a half times since that date. General property taxes have jumped from $94,187,000 in 1880, to more than $5,000,000,000 in 1932. Some of these local government bodies have increased their debts by more than a thousand percent since the census of 1912. Altogether, we find that obsolete offices, duplication of functions, overlapping, unnecessary, and useless services, and officials who officiate in name only, are exacting a toll of more than $2,000,000,000 yearly from the pockets of the taxpayers.

The sooner action is taken, the sooner the benefits of such a program will be felt. If the President will call a conference of Governors now, and I sincerely hope he will do so in the very near future, he will be taking a step which will do more than any other single action could possibly accomplish, for a White House conference of the Governors could do more in a few days to formulate a unified and comprehensive program for abolition of waste and extravagance than the people, without such leadership, could hope to attain in a full generation.

My resolution is now pending before the Ways and Means Committee of the House. I trust the committee will see fit to make a favorable report in time to assure action by the House before adjournment. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in March 1931, I was sworn in as a Member of the House, and soon thereafter introduced a bill to prevent the practice of nepotism. I was unable to get a hearing on the bill. I reintroduced it in the Seventy-third Congress. I was unable to get a hearing at that session. And again, in the Seventy-fourth Congress, I have reintroduced this same bill, being H. R. 3633, which bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any Member of Congress to appoint any person related to him, or to any other Member of Congress, by affinity or consanguinity within the third degree, to any office, position, or employment in the legislative branch of the United States Government, if the compensation of such person is to be paid out of any money appropriated for such legislative branch; and such person shall be ineligible for such appointment by such Member.

Section 2 of my bill provides: It shall be unlawful for any Member of Congress to draw, or authorize the drawing of, any warrant or authority for payment of the compensation of any such ineligible person out of any money appropriated for such legislative branch; and that it shall be unlawful for any Member of Congress to pay the compensation of any such ineligible person out of any money appropriated for such legislative branch and in his custody or control. Any Member of Congress who shall violate any provision of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor involving misconduct in office and official misconduct, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000 and shall forfeit his office.

I know of no reason why the Committee on Accounts should not favorably report this bill. The chairman has recently assured me that at the next meeting of his committee I will be given a hearing and the measure considered.

This is a time when public officials should be free from selfishness. It is a bad example in our country for public officials, who have been honored by the people, to practice nepotism.

It is fashioned after the old order of things when the world was ruled by czars, kings, and emperors.

Webster defines nepotism as favoritism shown to nephews and other relatives—the bestowal of patronage by reason of relationship rather than merit. It is further defined as excessive fondness for one's nephews.

Thomas Jefferson said:

The public will never be made to believe that an appointment of a relative is made on the ground of merit alone, uninfluenced by family views; nor can they ever see with approbation offices, the disposal of which they entrust to their President for public purposes, divided out as family property.

Congress has suffered greatly in public estimation in recent years, largely because of such practices as that of nepotism. We must renew the faith of the people in their public servants. It is no time or place to pad the family pay roll. It is no time to appoint the next of kin to office. Too many of our people are out of employment for this.

Clean men are demanded for public office. Honest and unselfish men anxious to serve should be elected. The future of our national life is at stake in emergencies like we have recently been going through. We must, therefore, have a high standard of public service.

I know that the expenses of government must be lightened and that the burden of taxation must be lessened on our people. Savings to the taxpayer must be accomplished.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

The sons-in-law, daughters-in-law, or wives, sons, or daughters should not be employed at the expense of the taxpayers when already one member of the family is being paid a fine salary for his services. Neither should the heads of the departments in the different bureaus here in Washington be permitted to select their next of kin to public office. This abuse is most flagrant at this time, and many of the near relatives are now serving in the departments here, not because of merit but because of favoritism of the chief in charge or the so-called "brain truster" who is temporarily dispensing patronage.

Many States of the Union, in their constitutions, prevent the practice of nepotism, such as the States of Oklahoma, Missouri, and others.

We will not deserve, nor will we enjoy, the confidence of the people, as long as Members in either end of the Capitol have their relatives on the pay roll. We will not have, or merit, public respect if this practice is continued.

When my bill was introduced 4 years ago, to prevent nepotism, approximately 100 Members of the House had their next of kin on the Government pay roll and in their offices here in the House and the opposite side of the Chamber. I am informed that perhaps less than half that number are guilty at this time of the nefarious practice.

I think that it is a crime to practice this species of selfishness. It is tantamount to obtaining money by means of false pretense. It is a fraud against the taxpayers. It is the same kind of selfishness and greed that was practiced by the rulers during the Dark Ages. It is modeled after the form of the so-called "divine right of kings." It is an indirect way of padding the pay roll.

Millions are still unemployed, hungry, and walking the streets and highways, while some of the Members here have their next of kin designated as clerks, and oftentimes these so-called "clerks" employ someone else to perform their duties at a reduced salary and they themselves either do not come to Washington, or if in Washington engage in other duties than those for which they are being paid.

This is surely getting money under false pretense and is a crime against the taxpayers. It is a practice that has been clothed in secrecy and kept in darkness until the introduction of my bill to prevent this practice in the Seventy-second session of Congress. I am glad that the press and the newspapers generally have given publicity to this practice and have done much to remedy the wrong. I congratulate them on the service they have rendered America in so doing. The records of the Clerk of the House are now public property, and since the pitiless light of publicity has been turned upon those guilty of the practice, many have ceased to continue this wrong.

We are all interested in clean government. Every Member should be anxious to keep down appropriations. If he has his next of kin employed or benefited by his legislative acts, he handicaps himself to properly serve the Nation. It is a moral loss to the Members to practice it. It costs him much in his own self-respect, to say nothing of the lack of confidence and esteem which he suffers by those who look to Washington for an example in good government. Let this wrong be righted.

I have also introduced a bill, H. R. 3640, to repeal the law authorizing the payment of mileage to Members of Congress or to Delegates in the House.

The passage of this bill would save the taxpayers $175,000 per year.

With good roads and automobiles the Members can now easily and cheaply come to Washington from all parts of the country. It is no longer expensive to travel. The present mileage rate was fixed in 1866, when it was expensive to travel and required many weeks to come to Washington from distant parts of the country, but now more than half the membership of the House are within a day's journey of the capital. Then, why should 15 cents per mile be allowed each Member, when the distressed taxpayers of America are called upon to pay this in addition to the Member's salary of $10,000 per year?

During this depression and great emergency, surely as a matter of economy and saving to the taxpayers, mileage should be discontinued. Many privileges are enjoyed by Members of the House that are not possible to those who send us here. Let us keep in mind that they pay the bills and that we are their servants, and that we owe them every consideration.

I have also introduced a bill to reduce the pay of the Members from $10,000 to $5,000 per year and, while I realize that this bill does not stand approved by the majority, I do not doubt that before we are free from this depression, it will be found necessary to return to the fundamental principles of government upon which this country was built, and to once again practice thrift and economy. I do not believe that we can spend money recklessly and extravagantly and ever get out of this depression. It is contrary to every principle of government which we have been taught from the beginning of our experience to the present.

I hope, on tomorrow, when my amendment is presented to the House, which will provide that no part of the appropriation made for clerk hire can be paid to the next of kin of Members here within the third degree, this will put a stop to the practice of nepotism and will operate as effectively as the passage of the bill heretofore referred to.

I sincerely hope that those who are anxious to help bring about economy in government and who believe in relieving the unemployed, and a proper distribution of patronage on the part of the Members here, will come to the defense of this proposed amendment and thus bring about a much-needed reform for the people of our common country.

Let us take Finland as an example in these troublous times. She has paid her debts contracted with the United States in full in accordance with the terms of the debt settlement. That speaks in the highest terms for the Finnish people. They are debt paying, loyal, honest, industrious, and dependable.

The members of their Congress are paid a salary of less than $1,000 per year, and the members of their cabinet receive approximately $2,500 per year, and the President about $14,000.

Let us practice more economy in Government. Let us reduce expenses and lighten the burdens of the taxpayers of America.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAMSAY].

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss H. R. 7997, which I have introduced at this session of Congress.

This bill provides that before the Supreme Court can set aside any act of Congress, that seven of the Judges of the Supreme Court must concur in the opinion.

Has the Congress of the United States the power to pass any law requiring a certain number of the Judges of the Supreme Court to concur before they can declare any act of Congress unconstitutional?

The Constitution of the United States provides:

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a state shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to fact and law, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

I believe that under the provision of the Constitution, Congress has the power to prescribe the number of judges which shall concur before a statute shall be declared unconstitutional. From the earliest days of the Republic, Congress has determined not only the number of justices, but also the number which shall constitute a quorum. The act of 1789 contained such a provision, and that provision is still in the law, providing that six justices shall constitute a quorum. Congress has further provided for the Court's adjournment in case of no quorum. It has given to less than a quorum the power to make necessary orders touching a pending case.

The judicial power of the United States is vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress may create. That judicial power, it will be readily conceded, cannot be invaded by the legislative branch of the Government, but there is a line which separates the appellate jurisdiction of the Court under proper regulations of Congress where legislation cannot be termed an unwarranted invasion of such judicial power.

Did Congress invade the judicial power when it declared the number of justices required to constitute a quorum? I think not. Is it invading the judicial power when it provides by law that less than a quorum shall be authorized to do certain things? I believe not.

Is the power to grant certain writs, as provided by statute, by one member of the Court alone an invasion of the judicial power? I cannot believe it is. And if these congressional acts were not invasions upon the power of the Court, surely regulations touching the appellate jurisdiction, before an act of Congress can be declared void, at least by seven judges, cannot by the widest stretch of the imagination, be declared an invasion of the judicial power.

I feel that Congress has the power, and if Congress has the power, it is perfectly clear that it should use it. For unless we do make some such provision, we shall probably have to meet the situation after it becomes vastly more serious.

To establish rules and regulations to govern the courts in determining how they shall act in deciding upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress, does not deny the Supreme Court the right to pass upon the validity of such acts. Those who claim this jurisdiction for the Supreme Court, base such claim upon article 3 of the Constitution that the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity, arising under the Constitution. To base jurisdiction on this article would require such advocate to admit that Congress is vested with the right to control such action of the Court in the manner and form of arriving at such decision, because the same section further reads: "with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

This proposed course is not a new proposition. It is a subject which has had consideration from almost the beginning of our Government by some of our greatest statesmen.

In 1823 a resolution was introduced in Congress proposing to require the concurrence of seven judges in any opinion concerning the validity of State or Federal legislation.

In 1824 there were several similar proposals. A bill was reported by Martin Van Buren, requiring the concurrence of 7 judges out of 10, and requiring each judge to make record of his separate opinion. In 1824 a Member from Kentucky introduced a resolution requiring that a certain number of judges should concur before the Court should hold a State statute unconstitutional. Henry Clay and Daniel Webster took part in the debate, but so far as I can learn from these debates, no question of the constitutionality of the proposal was raised. The debate seemed to indicate that both of these great statesmen acknowledge the subject to be within the power of Congress, and the debates deal with it solely as a question of policy.

The 5-to-4 decisions of our Supreme Court upon great constitutional questions are always a matter of deep regret, and I imagine that no one feels the responsibility more deeply than the members of our Supreme Court.

These decisions seem to breed and justify a disrespect for the decisions of this great tribunal. They give rise to more criticism of the Court than any one thing which I am able to recall.

When a measure has passed both Houses of Congress, and received the approval of the President, it seems unreasonable that such a measure should be rejected by a decision in which no more than 5 of the 9 judges concur.

In the final analysis, it comes to the proposition that one judge has not only the veto power over the acts of Congress, but the veto power over the President, when he assented to the measure in question.

When Chief Justice Marshall for the first time, after 14 years of government, disregarded the four negative votes in the Constitutional Convention, denying to his Court the right to decree acts of Congress void, declared the Supreme Court has the power to so act, and gave this warning:

We must never forget that it is a Constitution we are expanding; a Constitution intended to endure for ages to come, consequently to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs.

I am afraid this sound advice to those who act in the judiciary capacity has not always been remembered by the inferior courts when they declare an act of Congress unconstitutional.

Such actions of our inferior courts have grown to be ridiculous in the United States, and have not only brought the judiciary into disrepute but have placed the whole bar and legal profession in the country in the position of always acting as cat's-paws for those who seek to defeat the will of the people.

Such decisions are mere vetoes; vetoes exercised by one man. Such power, I submit, should not be exercised by one judge of the Supreme Court. The Constitution does not grant or authorize it. Then why should the people and its legislature permit this Court to exercise this veto power over laws passed by the Congress and signed by its President?

Such power, exercised at will by one man, not only destroys the will of the majority but makes our Government impotent to legislate and care for the general welfare of the people.

Surely if any court should have the right to decide questions that are so far-reaching to the general welfare of our country and the preservation of its liberties, it should only be the one great Court—the Supreme Court of the United States.

It was certainly never intended by the founders of our Government that every inferior court of the land, including even justices of the peace, should have the right to declare that an act of the highest legislative body in the land, the Congress of the United States, should be declared unconstitutional, and by injunction or otherwise set aside or hold up the operation of such laws in the community in which they live.

There is no more outstanding fact in the history of the Constitutional Convention than the fact that four times this Convention refused even to grant this power to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The 5-to-4 decisions of our highest Court in the land sound to the average citizen like the betting odds at a horse race, and, in fact, it leaves the American mind in doubt just what is or should be the law. Such decisions only shake the confidence of the people in the judgment of this great tribune.

The Court itself has said that in construing a law to determine whether or not it violates the Constitution every doubt must be construed in favor of such law, and yet the Court in its 5-to-4 decisions violates this rule of construction that was laid down by it, creating doubt in the minds of the general public that someone must be wrong when only 1 man out of 9 can sway such grave decisions that are so far-reaching in effect upon the life and the happiness of the American people.

The railway decision, like the Dred Scott case, is wrong. It must be reversed. Not by force, not by revolution or fear, but in an orderly and constitutional way by the Court itself.

The people in America will never be satisfied with the decisions of their courts until they, by their decisions and decrees, recognize that the Constitution was written by the founders of this Government to expand and extend the human rights of man, and that in any conflict between the welfare of mankind and man's right to own, possess, and control property the Constitution must be held by our courts to be the Bill of Rights of the American people that the fathers of this Government intended, and that it can and will protect the people, even to the release of vested interests in property rights, if need be.

But so long as man is mere man, and some of us believe that the rights of man should come first in the passage of laws, first in the balance of the scales of justice, and others of us believe that the right to own and possess property should be the first consideration, then we will continue to have these 5-to-4 decisions, depending wholly upon the thoughts, habits, environments, and conscience of the men who are so called upon to decide.

In declaring any act of Congress unconstitutional the Supreme Court should be required to render such decision in a manner that would clearly impress the American people, free from all reasonable doubt, bias, and caprice. The Court should be required to comport with its own rule, laid down for determination of constitutional questions, and resolve all doubts in favor of the acts of Congress. Such decisions by the Court should be unanimous or by such a preponderance of the Court, so that no reason for doubt of the correctness and fairness of the decision could be left in the minds of the average citizen.

For this reason I have introduced this bill. I believe that its passage will bring back and restore to this great Court the confidence and respect of the American people. It will instill in the people of our country love for its institutions and grant an assurance that the will of the people will be safeguarded against those who stand against progress and a new day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that several Members on this side have been waiting all day for an opportunity to speak, will not the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold his point of order for a little while?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I withhold my point of order.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD].

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, one class of men in this Nation have been either completely forgotten—or, perhaps, it would be better to say completely left out—by both Congress and the administration. The N. R. A. established the maximum day in all industry. To some the theory for the shorter day was to spread employment; to some it meant more time for leisure; to some it meant a means of safety in the industry, a means of permitting employees to save themselves from the injury that came as the result of physical and nervous exhaustion. But there is more than a million men in this Nation engaged in one of the most hazardous occupations to whom none of these theories were applied—the railroad employees. His hours were not shortened. He still, insofar as any restrictions of the law are concerned, can be employed 16 hours a day, 365 days a year. There is no 40- or even 50-hour-a-week limitation by law in the Transportation Code. His is one of the most hazardous occupations. The train-service man flirts with death and injury every minute and every mile of his employment, and he not only imperils his own safety but the safety of everyone that comes into contact with steam transportation systems of the Nation, either as a passenger or at grade crossings. With him Congress has not spread employment—thousands are unemployed. Congress has added to unemployment on some railroads. Congress has allowed terminals to be eliminated and mergers to be consummated.

In 1920 there were employed on railroads 2,033,832 men. In 1929 there were employed on railroads 1,660,850 men. Almost 400,000 men had been discharged in those years, and yet they were the years in which the railroads were claiming that they operated most efficiently and reduced their operating expenses $1,322,000,000. The burden of this reduction was not borne by the stockholders. It was borne by the railroad labor, the reduction in employees representing $785,000,000 of that saving. I have no exact figures since 1929 on the discharging of men and reduction of force. But it is estimated conservatively that at least 400,000 more men have been eliminated since 1929, and the process of elimination goes on, in a time when we suggest the increase of employment—at a time when we use all functions of government in an endeavor to put more men to work and spread employment. By a strange inconsistency, insofar as railroad men are concerned, we are using the powers of government to decrease employment among them. Through the P. W. A. and R. F. C. we have advanced millions of dollars to the transportation systems. We have advanced millions of dollars to them to purchase equipment from outside contractors, while they close their own shops in which they had formerly made this equipment, repaired and rebuilt it, throwing thousands of men who were employed in those shops on the relief rolls of the Nation. I submit that such a system is working at cross purposes. If we are to loan money to these transportation systems, let us by all means loan it on the same theory that it is loaned to other industries—that of promoting employment.

Allow me to cite you one instance of the Public Works Administration actually loaning money to the Erie Railroad in such a manner as to place men in my State on the relief rolls. Just as this occurs with the Erie Railroad in Indiana it is occurring in many States. The Erie is one branch of the lines that have been designated as the Van Sweringen "empire." For many years the Erie operated and owned a complete car shop at Huntington, Ind. In this shop it had built and repaired its cars. Hundreds of men were employed there. They had relied on this employment as permanent. They had purchased their homes or were purchasing them. Business men relied on this business and laid their plans accordingly. None thought it within business probability or good financing for the Erie to abandon a shop erected and equipped at great expense, a shop valued at a high price in their so-called "capital structure", on which freight rates are based. This shop was used for years for both the purpose of building and repairing cars and, at the same time, as a basis for requiring higher freight rates from the shipper. Freight rates that were passed on by the shipper to every consumer in the Nation. But these employees and citizens reckoned without considering the Public Works Administration and the proclivities of the Van Sweringens to avail themselves of every opportunity to obtain "free" money from the public chest. They had obtained many millions from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and been able to default on payment without evil results to themselves or their advising bankers. When the Public Works Administration began to allocate funds to the railroads the Erie was one of the first with an application for funds. It received an allocation of $14,953,000. Of this amount $538,000 was for repairs to old equipment, and the rest for new equipment. For the loan of this amount for repairs the Public Works Administration accepted collateral from the Erie Railroad. All the rest of this money obtained from the Public Works Administration was spent for new equipment, and only $3,133,000 of it was secured by collateral; $11,282,000 was spent for new equipment, and this amount was not covered by collateral. The Erie had been bled until it had no collateral worth putting up. But the theory of the Public Works Administration was that employment was to be increased, so the money was allocated anyway. But it was allocated with the specific provisions that it could not be used to maintain employment along the line of the Erie. All new equipment was required to be made in private shops, and not by Erie employees. As a result of this agreement, the shops at Huntington, Ind., fully equipped to do this work—with a force of trained employees in a position to build its cars—was closed. The Erie could have built its cars in the Huntington shops and kept these men employed. It did not. It threw these men out of employment and allowed costly buildings and equipment to stand idle and decay. Every one of these men has gone on the relief rolls by virtue of the very legislation that Congress passed for the purpose of decreasing the number on relief. With one hand the railroads, aided and abetted by the Public Works Administration, reach into the public chest on the theory of putting men to work, while with the other hand they discharge men and give them an admission card to the relief.

Let me give you another inconsistency. Men high in the Government council, men on the floor of this House, men in the distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol, oppose violently any hint of Government ownership. They forget that we are right now embarked on Government ownership. The Federal Government now owns $11,282,000 worth of this new equipment made for the Erie Railroad. It is mortgaged to the Public Works Administration. The Public Works Administration still retains the title to it and holds equipment trust notes for it. These notes run for 15 years. Payments are due every 6 months after the first year. If the Erie defaults in its payments, either we give the equipment to the Erie and the taxpayer loses or the Federal Government becomes the owner of this second-hand railroad equipment. Can anyone be so credulous as to believe that the Erie, with all its equipment mortgaged to private bankers so that it could raise only three million of unmortgaged collateral to protect its loans, will ever pay the Federal Government this loan from the Public Works Administration? Today we have over one hundred millions of new equipment on the railroad systems of the Nation to which the Federal Government holds title through the Public Works Administration, just like title is held on the Erie equipment. The Federal Government through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation holds the title to a few hundred million more of equipment. Mr. Speaker, we are up to our neck right now in Government ownership of railroads.

The Van Sweringen empire, according to the testimony before the Senate committee investigating railroad financing, has obtained millions of dollars from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Public Works Administration and other governmental agencies and have used this money for almost every purpose conceivable except for the purpose of increasing employment or in renewing and remedying the transportation facilities of the country. They have borrowed at least in one instance, that of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, to pay their bankers $6 per share for purchasing from their own subsidiary, the New Orleans, Texas & Mexico Railway, stock that its owners were anxious to sell and the purchasers anxious to buy, a stock that was not even listed on the market. We have advanced them money time after time to use for reorganization purposes and every time they have reorganized through bankruptcy or receivership there has been no scaling down in the capital structure of the railroads of the Nation but an actual increase in the capital structure. They have reorganized by creating additional debts on property that would not pay the old debts and adding the new additional debts to the old.

A few days ago the Supreme Court decided that the one thing that Congress had endeavored to do for railroad employees it could not do. The Supreme Court said in substance that while Congress could control hours of employment and Congress might control wage disputes and might control safety appliances, Congress could not control the care of the men who had given their lives to the railroads after they were thrown on the industrial scrap heap.

There is yet time for this Congress to pass some legislation for the benefit of these men whom we have neglected. There are bills now pending before the committees that will place these men on a par with the men we have tried to protect under the N. R. A. The Supreme Court may hold the N. R. A. invalid because of the intrastate features, but by virtue of their latest decision they cannot hold the car-limit legislation or shorter working day for railroad men invalid on that grounds. We should add to these pending bills legislation that prohibits these transportation systems from paying a bonus to the bankers with money obtained from governmental agencies, while they close their shops and allow them to deteriorate and become obsolete and throw men on the relief rolls.

The time to act is now. The system of making loans to these railroads from public agencies should be changed. It is not a principle of American government to force families of one locality on relief so that those of another locality may prosper. Huntington, Ind., and the Erie Railroad is a cause in point. In common justice we should correct the evil. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, for several weeks now we have been witnessing an intensive drive against this administration's farm program and the man most responsible for it, the Secretary of Agriculture. We have been told, on the one hand, that the program has failed to help the farmers; we have been told, on the other hand, by the same people that the program has helped farmers so much that it is now hurting consumers. There have also been intimations that the men responsible for the program—and it seems to me Congress has some responsibility—are blind to what there is going on and totally unqualified to judge or direct any farm program. I think it is about time to introduce some indisputable facts into the discussion.

Let me begin with a few facts about the Secretary of Agriculture. I ask those who depart so far from the truth as to call him an "ignoramus, unfit to hold a Cabinet position", and so on, to tell me when we have ever had a Secretary of Agriculture more clearly qualified for the position and more able in the performance of his duties than Henry A. Wallace. I ask his detractors—and he may well cherish certain of his more vociferous enemies—to recall that he comes from a State and from a family whose record of service to agriculture can hardly be excelled. Though I yield to none in proclaiming the greatness that belongs to my own State of Indiana, nevertheless I am always willing to admit the high rank of Iowa in all matters of agriculture.

The Wallace family has been identified with the achievements of Iowa agriculture for three generations. People who have known the present Secretary of Agriculture for many years say that you cannot begin to appraise him until you know something about his family. His grandfather, affectionately known as "Uncle Henry", served as a chaplain in the Civil War, gave up preaching in order to farm in Iowa when his health broke, and at the age of 57 established the farm paper which still carries his name and his teachings. The influence of "Uncle Henry" lives to this day and is cherished in thousands and thousands of farm homes. His public service was not restricted to Iowa but included such activities as membership on Theodore Roosevelt's Country Life Commission.

As everyone knows, his son, Henry C. Wallace, carried on the family traditions as an editor, a champion of farmers' rights, and single-handed fought the battle for agriculture in an administration which did its best to defeat his efforts. Some say that the job killed him. At any rate, he died in office several years before his allotted 3 score and 10.

The qualities which distinguished both "Uncle Henry" and Henry C. Wallace have come through in the present Secretary of Agriculture. From the day he was born he has been immersed in agriculture, reared by a distinguished farm family in a distinctively farm State. Very early in his career he distinguished himself in three fields associated with agriculture: In agricultural journalism, in economics, and in plant breeding. As early as 1919 he warned farmers that the high land prices then prevailing could not last and that it would be wise for them to get out of debt as rapidly as possible and prepare for the smash. He was one of the few editorial voices in the country to grasp the significance of the economic consequences of the war. He saw that during the war the United States had changed from a debtor to a creditor nation and that this change called for corresponding shifts in our attitude toward tariffs, foreign debts, and the internal relationships between agriculture and industry. He has rung the changes on that theme with commendable insistence for a dozen years or more, but only recently have others in the Nation begun to catch up with him.

As far back as 1919 you might have found Henry Wallace contending that agriculture must be given bargaining powers comparable with those already possessed by industry and labor, a point of view, of course, which underlay the long battle for adequate farm legislation, and a battle, incidentally, in which the first sizable victory came to agriculture with the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933. I can only mention in passing Henry Wallace's contributions to practical economics, such as the formulation of the corn-hog ratio now in universal use, his educational work in teaching the significance of price relationships rather than isolated flat prices, and his many other contributions in this field. His interest in the biological sciences—the sciences without which much of our present agricultural efficiency would be impossible—has borne particular fruit in his work on corn. Most of us, I presume, can claim hardly more than a speaking acquaintance with the highly abstruse and technical science of genetics. By his own research Henry Wallace has made this science yield a corn plant consistently more efficient than the varieties commonly grown, as recorded in constantly higher yields per acre. Let me observe at this point that there is not the slightest inconsistency between the effort to increase the efficiency of production while at the same time we endeavor to adjust the total production to the market requirements. You will never find an industrialist decreasing his efficiency of production just because the demand for his products has declined. On the contrary, you will find him responding to that declining demand by doing everything in his power to increase the efficiency of production and thereby reduce the costs of production. If the industrialist is to be commended for this procedure—and certainly he is—then so is the farmer.

It is quite true that Secretary Wallace never has been and is not now a politician. He did not seek office—the office sought him, because, in the judgment of the President-elect, he was the best qualified man in the country for the job. To the specific qualifications I have already listed I would add two more of, perhaps, greater importance. The first is that he is a deeply religious man with an unshakable faith in human nature. The second is that he will always fight for the rights of agriculture to a fair share in the national income and that he will always fight just as ardently against granting to agriculture or any other group in the Nation more than a fair share. He believes in even-handed justice, and it has been my observation that he practices what he preaches.

It is commonly said that the public memory is a short one. I doubt, however, whether most people have forgotten the chaotic condition of agriculture and of the whole Nation in 1932 and early 1933. The long battle for agriculture even before the depression cannot have been wholly forgotten. Certainly in 1932 and 1933 even those normally hostile to any farm legislation admitted that a dozen years of low farm purchasing power had had painful results on the whole Nation, not to mention what it had done to the farmer. The need for some legislation when Congress met in special session in March 1933 was universally admitted.

So the plight of agriculture, Congress said, was a national economic emergency. The thing to do, we agreed when we passed the agricultural adjustment bill, was to increase agricultural purchasing power principally by adjusting supply to demand.

Now, most of us, I suspect, and certainly most farmers, would have preferred that this necessary adjustment might have come naturally. We all look back on the relatively simple days before the war with a good deal of longing. And we are always reluctant to face the fact that our industrial, our financial, our agricultural, and our labor systems are integral parts of an increasingly complex economic and social system. Current facts never do rest comfortably in a mind filled with the memories of an earlier generation.

Indeed, Secretary Wallace himself has always said he approached the task of adjustment with a great deal of reluctance, partly because he, too, had fond memories of simpler days, partly because he visualized the difficulty of the task and the strength of agriculture's enemies.

But of what use are ancient memories, no matter how pleasant, of what use are outworn attitudes of mind, no matter how useful they once were, in the face of an emergency the like of which has never been known before? In a complex system, with industry and labor organized to demand and get its right, how could agriculture get even a fraction of its rights? And if it failed to get some relief, what would be the consequences to the rest of the Nation?

What do you do with surpluses two and three times the normal carry-over? What does a businessman do when part of his market disappears, as part of agriculture's market disappeared? He adjusts his production to what the market will take. In other words, he directly and continually controls his production. If he did not, he would soon be out of business.

Personally, I have had enough experience both in industry and in farming to recognize adjustment as logical, inevitable, sensible procedure. No one doubted that it would be more difficult to achieve in agriculture than in industry, because of the weather hazard and because it would be necessary to deal with millions of individual producers scattered over a vast continent. Granting all this, I have never heard proposed any other practical way to deal with the fact that huge surpluses of farm products mean low prices, low prices mean suffering, loss of farms, and a national crisis.

It is not necessary to go into any detailed discussion of how the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has proceeded; enough is known, in general, of the adjustment program for cotton and wheat, for corn and hogs, for tobacco and rice, and the marketing agreements for milk and other special crops; the important thing at this juncture is to have some notion of the results. Let me refer briefly to the situation in my own State of Indiana.

It does not take an unusual memory to recall 1932 and 1933. Many an Indiana farmer can remember 30-cent wheat and 25-cent corn, $3 hogs and beef cattle, 15-cent butter fat. That was the picture in 1932 and early 1933. Now, a man who has worked from sunup to sundown to produce 30-cent wheat, or $3 hogs, or 15-cent butter fat, is not likely to forget it. He will remember, and his memories will not be any too sweet.

Suppose you had said to such a man in March of 1933: "Look here, friend, I know a way to bring your prices at least double those." Your farmer friend might have been pretty skeptical, but he would have been interested, would he not? And then, if you had been able to deliver, his skepticism would have vanished and his interest would have deepened to pretty firm faith.

I am convinced that this is just what has happened among an overwhelming majority of farmers. In Indiana, as of April 15 this year, I note that the farm price of wheat was 90 cents a bushel; of corn, 81 cents; of hogs, $8.70 a hundred-weight; of beef cattle, $8.20; and of butter fat, 33 cents a pound.

Everyone, including the Secretary of Agriculture, will admit that the terrific drought of 1934 has been an important factor, particularly in wheat prices, just as the monetary policy has been a factor, but there is also no disputing the fact that by adjusting the supplies of the items I have named the adjustment programs have been the dominant factor in more than doubling farm prices since 1932.

Perhaps income, rather than price, is a better measure of progress. I notice that in Indiana the receipts from farm marketings in 1932 were about $136,000,000. The next year, 1933, they had climbed to nearly $149,000,000, of which nearly $3,000,000 was in the form of benefit payments to farmers for their sacrifices in adjusting production. Last year, 1934, receipts from farm marketings in Indiana, including benefit payments, were $189,000,000, or an increase in the short space of 2 years of 39 percent. And if receipts keep up the rest of the year as well as they have begun the year—and there is every reason to believe they will—Indiana farmers will see another gratifying increase in 1935.

For the country, as a whole, farm income in 1934 was a billion dollars above that of 1933 and nearly $2,000,000,000 above that of 1932. The 1935 farm income, from present indications, will do correspondingly well. And yet day after day I read in certain metropolitan newspapers that the farm program has failed. Just how do they get that way? What they mean, because they never did want to see farmers get a new deal, is that it has worked only too well.

It may be that neither prices nor income is a satisfactory criterion to many people; they will say that nonfarm prices have risen so much that the increase in farm prices has left the farmers no better off than before. That is not true, of course, but it may be useful to put down the hard facts to convince them, if possible.

The Adjustment Act, it will be recalled, declares that it is the policy of Congress to raise the purchasing power of American farmers to the level which it occupied in the base period, the years 1909-14, when agricultural and industrial production were more nearly in balance, and the national income more equitably distributed. The idea of price relationships, rather than isolated flat prices, is here, for it was perfectly obvious that an equal lift in all prices—steel rails as much as wheat, electric power rates as much as hogs—would merely freeze the existing disparity between farm and industrial prices.

This policy of Congress, this attack upon disparity, has been prosecuted with persistence and a high degree of success. The purchasing power of farm products in 1932 and early in 1933 had got down to 50 percent of pre-war. That was the measure of the disparity between agriculture and the rest of our economy. Complete parity—100-percent purchasing power—never had been reached, you will recall, even in the boom days of 1928 and 1929.

In the short period of 2 years the purchasing power of farm products has advanced from 50 percent of pre-war to 87 percent as of April 15 last. It has not been that high since 1930, when for that year as a whole the figure was 87 percent of pre-war.

Nevertheless, that figure of 87 percent of pre-war fails to include benefit payments. These payments ought really to be considered as part of the price the farmer receives for his products sold in the domestic market. They are the proceeds of the processing tax, which is in theory and in fact the farmer's tariff. If these benefit payments are included in computing the purchasing power of the seven basic commodities which they affect, their purchasing power would then come very close to equaling the desired pre-war purchasing power. At times within the past few months, in fact, price plus benefit payment for some of the basic commodities has actually been above pre-war parity.

It is natural, when so considerable an increase has occurred in the price of farm products in a relatively short time, that there will be complaints that food prices are too high. Consumers naturally remember the bargain prices of 1932—and forget what those bargain prices did to agriculture and to the economy of the entire Nation. If they stop to think about it, they do not want agriculture to go back to that situation.

It is true that food prices in March stood about 122 percent of pre-war, but it is also true that this figure was still 19 percent below the level of food prices in March 1930. In other words, food prices as a whole are still at bargain rates compared with predepression standards.

When the Agricultural Adjustment Act was framed it was evident that consumers were going to have to pay considerably higher prices for food than they had been paying during 1932 if the farmer was to be enabled to stay in the business of feeding them. But it was not the intention, nor is it now the intention, of creating an artificial shortage in order to force farm prices above their fair relationship with other prices and out of line with consumers' purchasing power. Let those who say that the farm program has been a scarcity program keep in mind these facts: That in 1934, despite the worst drought in history, agriculture was producing within 85 percent of the 1929 level, whereas the nonagricultural part of industry was still below 60 percent of 1929. In 1935 agriculture will do at least as well again. The question is, Will industry follow suit?

One of the arguments made in behalf of the farm program, before it was adopted, was that increased farm purchasing power would help national recovery. Farmers with power to buy would put men back into idle factories, boost city purchasing power, set in motion the spiral of recovery. Let me mention a report which just recently came to hand:

Rural retail sales for March, the Department of Commerce reports, were 22.5 percent higher than in March last year. For the first quarter of 1935 rural retail sales increased 15 percent over the corresponding period last year.

Let me cite a study especially made to determine the effect of the farm program—among other recovery programs—on industry. Economists in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration have studied shipments of manufactured goods from 16 northeastern industrial States to 10 southeastern farm States, using the waybills of four important railroad systems in the Southeast—the Southern, the L. & N., the Central of Georgia, and the Illinois Central Railroad.

According to the study, shipments of industrial commodities, exclusive of coal, from the Northeastern industrial States to the Southeastern agricultural States over these four railroads, totaled 2,104,585,201 pounds in the period from July 1, 1932, through June 30, 1933, before the agricultural adjustment program was inaugurated. In the next year, from July 1, 1933, through June 30, 1934, a period when the results of the Agricultural Adjustment Program and other recovery measures were beginning to be felt, shipments of northeastern industrial and manufactured goods to the Southeast over these same railroads totaled 2,920,887,439 pounds, an increase of 38.8 percent over shipments during the previous year. These goods were shipped in carload lots and represent more than 95 percent of the total shipments by weight.

The 16 States from which these industrial and manufactured commodities were shipped were Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

The 10 States in which the commodities were delivered were Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and Florida.

While shipments of industrial and manufactured goods increased 38.8 percent, the study shows that during the same periods cash farm income of farmers in the Southeastern States increased 59.9 percent. From July 1932 through June 1933, before the Agricultural-Adjustment Program became operative, the cash farm income from crops in the 10 southeastern States was $451,637,000. The year following, from July 1933 through June 1934, when the adjustment program and other recovery measures were launched, the cash farm income from crops plus benefit payments to farmers in those States totaled $722,017,000, an increase of 59.9 percent.

Facts like these suggest not only that the Adjustment Act has been helpful in meeting the national economic emergency, but that it has succeeded to a degree few of us thought possible. No amount of hostile propaganda against the processing tax can conceal from the farmer the fact that wheat that was 30 cents 2 or 3 years ago is now around 90 cents; that hogs which could hardly be sold for $2.50 now are going at close to $9. In the judgment of that farmer, adjusting supply to demand not only works but pays dividends. In the experience of the farmers in the drought area, the benefit payments made possible by the adjustment programs and the processing tax provided a life-saving form of crop insurance.

Of course, the mechanism of adjustment is crude. Of course, it needs improvement. That is one of the purposes of the amendments to the Adjustment Act, and it is a purpose which must have the sympathetic interest and support of everyone who is willing to admit into evidence the facts of agricultural improvement which the farm program of this administration has so clearly brought about.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, it has been said that the big job of the present administration is to spend approximately $5,000,000,000 under the recovery program. With this statement I am not in full accord. The big job is to spend this vast sum so as to get one hundred cents for the dollar—five hundred billion cents for $5,000,000,000. Obviously, this goal cannot be reached. In order to put men to work as soon as possible, there will necessarily be some waste. This, though, must be reduced to the minimum. The objective is to make jobs for those who now have none. Of course, we must look to the time when industry will largely take care of the unemployed. Finally, when the money now available has been spent, it is important that there should be something to show for it. Not only this, but it must be demonstrated that in the spending, the largest possible number of people have been benefited.

As I see it, and as I said in a letter addressed to Hon. Frank C. Walker, director of the works-relief program, and copies of which were sent to President Roosevelt and to Thomas H. McDonald, Chief Bureau of Public Roads, the best possible project for the expenditure of funds so that the largest number of people will be benefited and pleased is presented in the building of farm-to-market and neighborhood roads. We have become accustomed to the term "farm-to-market" roads. We might, with equal propriety, say "farm-to-church", "farm-to-school", or "farm-to-village" roads. With approximately 3,100 counties in the United States, it is safe to say that 75 percent would be directly interested in the construction of more low-cost roads. Furthermore, no other project calling for such a comparatively small outlay, would, in the end, be enjoyed by so many people. No other proposal holds such possibilities.

Such roads as I have in mind would be for the people now on earth, and would put men to work, not next year, but now. They have to do not with the "Beulah Land", but with the homeland. Their construction would make it possible for farmers to get to and enjoy other more expensive highways, and to do so every day in the year. The building of these roads would not interfere with the larger State and national programs, but would be in addition.

Recognizing the fact that modern road construction must necessarily have in mind automobile travel, I am not opposed to the building of great standard-grade thoroughfares. Frankly, though, it is my feeling that, if necessary, further work on the wide "peacock boulevards" entering the great cities could wait while farm communities were being lifted out of the mud. It has been said that the "mud tax" is the heaviest the farmer pays. If so, and because other taxes are burdensome, he is entitled to relief from the added tax which bad roads impose.

Referring to much modern road construction, speed seems to be the first consideration. My thought is that we should make our highways safe, rather than "super." First consideration, too, should be given to roads not primarily for the tourist but for the home folk.

The tendency in approving money-spending projects is to turn to the big and spectacular, and for such there are always earnest advocates and able spokesmen. On the other hand, it may happen that where millions of people would be helped, and where the benefits would be widely scattered, no city or community receiving much, no committees or individuals come to Washington to urge favorable action. Because of this, it is your duty and mine, as representatives of the average man, perhaps the "forgotten man", to see that he does not continue to be forgotten.

In urging the construction of a hundred thousand miles or more of neighborhood roads, I realize that there is no "pork" in my proposition. No big contractors will reap rich profits. Instead, the money expended will go to hundreds of thousands of men, largely farmers, and those in small towns, who need the work.

In the $4,880,000,000 bill as passed by Congress, $800,000,000 is provided for roads. The President can increase this amount by 20 percent. So, I would not only have built the roads as originally proposed but my suggestion is that this amount be increased so as to permit the building of low-cost roads in every agricultural county. In order that the work might start at once all red tape should be cut and the money made available, under proper safeguards and restrictions, direct to the counties where it would be spent under direction of the county courts, county commissioners, or other agencies. As to this, some might hold that it would mean waste. Instead, I am convinced that it is in distant supervision where waste is worst. It naturally follows that the people who are to be directly benefited in any expenditures are most interested in seeing to it that the largest possible returns result. It will be so with community and neighborhood road work.

In brief, what we want is a road in every community, a road that will enable Bill Smith and his family to get to town or to church, and to make it possible for their children to attend school regularly. We want the farmer to be able to market his milk, cream, stock, and crops, and to do so to the best advantage.

Much talk is heard about rural rehabilitation—about getting city folk out on farms. This may be all right. I am finding no fault, but I know that to keep one farm family on the land that the father, mother, and children know and love and to make it possible for them to continue in the community of which they have been a part, is worth more than to move a dozen families out from the cities.

If America is to survive the great national crisis through which we are now passing, we must have a contented and prosperous country people. Nothing else will contribute more than rural roads. Young people now growing up on our farms will not continue to live there if it means isolation. Telephones and radio will not satisfy if there is an impassable road from the farm to the improved highway which leads to the community center and to the city. America looks to homes, largely to farm homes, to these homes which are more than "filling stations", but which are, in fact, "service stations".

Few Members of Congress, perhaps, know the unimproved country road as I have known it, and which unhappily still exists in too many communities. Without entering into a lengthy description, it might be said that this road sometimes so resembles a slow-flowing, muddy stream, that about the only noticeable difference is that the road has a fence on either side. You say that such roads are no longer to be found. Would that this were true! In the great agricultural district which I have the honor to try to represent, a district of matchless soil and unexcelled farm production, hundreds of farmers and their families were practically cut-off from the outside world, so far as travel went, for 3 months during the past winter. The roads are so bad because the soil is so good!

Because of my known interest in rural roads, I have received hundreds of letters asking me to do all within my power to secure further appropriations for neighborhood-road work. Would that I had time to read at length from many of these letters. I do refer to a few:

I ask you to use your influence to try and shift some of these fabulous sums the Government is spending and have it go to a fund to be used to fix up rural roads so mail can be delivered to farmers.

It is deplorable the way the farmers have had to ride horseback and walk to the hard-surfaced roads. A number have been paying storage on their cars in town, walking here, then driving to the county seat.

After the worst drought in the history of our country and having held on during the worst depression in history, it makes us almost desperate when we are offered a nice fat price for milk, yet cannot get it there on account of the mud.

The farmers around here have been greatly handicapped this winter, most of them having to walk or resort to wagons and horseback, and are forced to leave their cars parked miles from home on the only gravel road we have in this part of the country.

For almost 3 months we have hauled the milk, formerly picked up by truck, in a Ford touring car, which is the only thing we have, and often pulled the car in and out with a team.

I live about 14 miles southwest of our county seat. Our roads were very bad most of the winter. We had to leave our car at the neighbor's on the gravel and go back and forth in wagon and buggy to get feed and supplies for the home and stock. The doctor was called in the community and had to be met in a four-horse wagon. Our mail carrier has gone horseback or walked most of the time this winter.

One of my neighbors took his wife and two children to a missionary meeting last January, and on the way back home the wagon became so mired that it could not be moved. The weather turned cold that night and the wagon stood in the road for several weeks. The team of horses hitched to the wagon when it stuck weighed 3,500 pounds.

I believe that 90 percent of the farm hauling is over unimproved roads. If they could be improved so that they could be used at all times of the year it would be of more benefit to the farmer than anything else the Government could do.

In some cases stock on feed had to be shipped, it being impossible to get feed hauled. Frequently this stock had to be driven miles before loading, resulting in heavy loss in weight. I had fat lambs ready to market but road conditions prevented. Later, I shipped when the market was $1 a hundred lower!

The roads were bad all winter. We had to take our produce to the highway in a wagon and have a car meet us to take it to town, and at times it was almost impossible to get over the roads in a farm wagon. If stock was shipped it was driven to the highway and there met by truck.

Farmers in our section walked to town for 3 months during the winter. When it comes to roads and getting our produce to market, we are just as much in the mud as ever.

Our little village is but 2 miles off Highway No. 40—near enough to one of the best highways in the United States of America that we are often kept awake at night by the noise of motor traffic when the wind is in that direction. And yet, while we listen to the hum of travel so near, we are kept entirely isolated for weeks by mud so deep that only the highest built motor cars can straddle the ruts, and even then they have had to abandon the road for days at a time. Our mail was brought to us on horseback, but there were several days when even the horse could not make it. My children walked to school for weeks straight in mud halfway to their knees, and as a result, there were times when we came very near calling a doctor. But to call a doctor was almost useless. My father-in-law met with an accident, and a doctor agreed to come if someone would meet him at the highway with a team. As this happened at night, it necessitated a great deal of work, time, and exposure for the neighbor who responded, besides inconvenience to the doctor.

We live 1 mile from town, on a dirt road, and our church is on a dirt road. We have been isolated, and the church closed all winter on account of not being able to get over this little stretch of dirt road which lies between us and the farm-to-market road. Three miles of hard road would fix us so we could get out, and the people in the neighborhood could get to church.

Give us just a graveled road that we can get out on, and we will help all we can with our teams and wagons.

If you can imagine a gloomier picture of rural life than bad roads have meant, I confess that you have a livelier imagination than I possess, and I am unable to visualize what is in store for our farm population under conditions as we have them today.

Parks and game forests are all right and a good improvement to any country, but they are not as self-supporting as the farmers could be if we had roads to get out with our trucks, and that means meat and bread for our families.

We feel that greater benefits could be derived in the rural sections if more funds were allocated for farm-to-market roads, rather than such large expenditures on so-called "traffic relief" roads leading into the cities.

We farmers off the slab find it impossible to get our milk to the Page Milk Co. this winter. I have six fresh cows, and cannot get my milk to town. It is only $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles to the corner of my farm. Real soon I will have 12 fresh cows. They must eat, and the only thing I can do is to feed them, regardless.

We have had one of the best Sunday schools, for a country church, but for 4 months the only way one could come was by walking or in a wagon.

For weeks we were unable to sell milk, as the Page Milk Co. truck could not get over our roads. We certainly would like to get better roads of some kind, if only 9-foot gravel, as we depend upon our cows for most of our income.

We are running a dairy and have had to carry the bottled milk to the highway days at a time and unload feed into the field adjoining the highway because a car, truck, or farm wagon could not make it through the public road. I, as well as countless others, feel that the side roads, or "byroads", as some call them, where the farmers' dwellings are located and over which the majority of them must travel to reach the market, and that join the trade territory of our towns, are the roads which need attention.

The school bus and milk truck gave up and traveled up and down on a short distance of pavement and the children and milk traveled out to them by wagon and horseback in 3 miles of "real mud."

It has been very hard to get out milk to the highway. I don't think anyone who does not live on a dirt road knows how bad they really get. Our roads were almost impassable for many weeks. Have had to haul my milk and other produce on a wagon, and it was almost impossible to go that way.

For weeks from one to six or eight cars have been parked at my home and at the home of one of my neighbors while the passengers walk from 1 to 4 miles home, a daily job for school children and teacher.

Not only have bad roads resulted in inconveniences, in heavy money losses, in the suspension of schools and of church services, but there have come also tragedies. For instance, a minister and an undertaker, says the local daily, left yesterday at 1 o'clock to conduct a funeral this afternoon at 2 o'clock. They traveled by automobile to a point on the highway near the county line, then struck out on foot for a 9-mile hike. The casket, which was taken by automobile to the same point on the highway, was there loaded on a two-wheel cart drawn by four horses. The automobile-foot trip was planned after the undertaker had spent more than 24 hours in a trip to and from the home on the first call. The final trip was made by automobile, wagon, horseback, and on foot. Think of this in a progressive community and near a fine commercial city, where there are many miles of standard highways but which could not be reached.

Here is another story of how bad roads take their toll, even of human life: A young boy was helping as one of the substitute carriers on a rural route. When he did not return home at the expected hour, the uneasy mother sent another son in search of him. The lifeless body, crushed beneath the horse, was found about a mile from the family home. Apparently the lad, trying to escape the deep mud, had been riding too near the side of the road, when the horse slipped into the ditch and fell on top of the rider. Terrible, you say. Yes; truly so; and it is my desire to prevent such tragedies.

As a specific case—

Writes one of my constituents—

will say that one of my neighbors was so unfortunate as to lose his home by fire. This home was on a mail route and 1 mile from the farm-to-market road, yet not a single car could get through that mile of mud, and hence, through lack of help, his loss was almost complete.

Rural carriers, than whom there are no more faithful Government employees, know as do few others the penalty that bad roads impose. For instance, a rural carrier writes, under date of February 27:

I have 31 miles of all dirt road, and since the middle of November I have paid out of my salary over $100 in addition to cost of feed for horses. The day before Christmas I used three men besides myself. I then walked more than 5 miles and carried the mail, including a sled for a little boy, so he could have it for Christmas.

I pause just here to say, Heaven bless these mail carriers! Are they not good fellows? The writer of the letter from which I quote goes on to say:

I must trade for a new car again this year, as on the roads we have here a car is good for only about a year without as much extra expense as it takes to pay on a new one.

Confirming reports of rural road conditions, especially as relates to the trials of rural carriers, a leading daily paper says:

All five rural carriers from the local office are walking several miles of their routes daily, and one had had to hire three extra men in order to cover his territory.

We need more money, lots of it, for improvement of rural delivery mail roads not now a part of any Federal or State highway system.

Speaking of ordinary roads for the ordinary man, a pioneer in this field was D. Ward King, a Missourian, who years ago featured the split-log drag, one of the best tools ever used on unimproved dirt roads. The King Split-Log Drag Bulletin, published by the Missouri State Board of Agriculture, with which I was long connected, had a national circulation and was also published in several foreign countries.

You ask, in view of what has been said about road conditions, "Has the Second Missouri Congressional District no improved roads and is the State so far behind in road building as letters referred to would indicate?" The answer to your question is that the district, embracing 15 central Missouri counties, has a splendid system of State and National highways, both east-west and north-south, the former including the two great transcontinental highways, no. 40 and no. 50. In fact, it is doubtful if there is, in all the Mississippi Valley, another congressional district, not containing or contiguous to a large city, having more miles of modern highways.

As to road construction within the State as a whole, the story is one that brings pride to every Missourian. First, let me tell you of some of the revenue provided for our roads from 1917 to 1933 inclusive. Get these figures: From motor vehicle law, $101,491,031.82; gasoline taxes, $68,481,070.05; corporation registration fees, $1,594,690.69; sale of option stamps, $266,050.16; total basic revenues, $171,832,842.72. Next, from incidental revenues we find: Sale of blueprints, $9,158.71; refunds, $2,420,353.94; sale of Federal equipment, $55,572.89; motor-bus fees, $501,204.89; headlight approval and patrol fines, $3,626.20; interest on daily balances, $2,717,826.36; interest on funds on deposit, $216,829.30; miscellaneous collections, $311,217.52; total incidentals, $6,235,789.81. Then come advanced revenues, as follows: Federal aid, $46,631,505.67; proceeds of bonds, $125,204,393; accrued interest on bonds, $151,031.86; total of advanced funds, $171,986,930.53; total of basic and incidental, $178,068,632.53; grand total of receipts, $350,055,563.06.

Naturally, comes the question, "What has the State to show for more than one-third of a billion dollars?" The answer is, in roads completed, or under contract, Missouri has, dropping decimals, the following: Primary system and spurs, 1,632 miles; secondary system, 5,789 miles; additional roads, 293; park connections, 76 miles; traffic-relief roads, 206 miles; supplementary State roads, 4,494 miles. Total of such roads, 12,492 miles.

So, thanks to the progressive spirit of her citizens and to the ability and efficiency of her State highway commission, Missouri has a seldom-excelled road record. Yet, and it is this that I would stress, because of the lack of more neighborhood roads, roads that lead to what is today the most important place in the Nation, the farm home, conditions are as others have told me and as I have told you. What is true of Missouri is true of practically every agricultural State. You agree that something ought to be done, of course, and now is the time to do it.

The opportunity, the golden opportunity, is here. The money has been appropriated. As much as needed can be used to build farm-to-market and neighborhood roads and to provide work now. It is for us to make it plain that the Congress and the country want a great every-county rural-road-building program. Will you, my colleagues, help? Surely so. Then, let us go.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook].

UNITED STATES LEGATION, HELSINGFORS, FINLAND

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, it was indeed gratifying to me to see the bill, H. R. 4448, which I introduced into the House on January 22, pass yesterday without a dissenting vote. I wish to thank the Members of the House of Representatives for supporting this measure. Certainly it was one on which there could be no disagreement. I was pleased to know that the Members were in agreement with the statements I had made previously in support of this bill.

Everyone agreed, I believe, that the sum set in the bill, $300,000, is approximately that needed to provide dignified and adequate housing for our officials at the capital of Finland, Helsingfors. It was agreed that from the standpoint of economy the bill was deserving of passage. The American Legation today at Helsingfors is housed on the fifth floor of an office building and pays for these offices an annual rental of $2,725. Rental for living quarters for the personnel of the office brings the total rental to approximately $12,000 per year.

In view of the fact that the staff of the American Minister at Helsingfors will probably have to be increased in the near future, this argument of economy was all the more apparent. The extent of our commercial relations with Finland is increasing, and I am informed that the present personnel is barely adequate to meet present demands.

We in the United States are happy to know that the commerce between Finland and the United States is increasing. Americans have come to respect and admire this sister republic of the North. The history of Finland's struggle for independence and self-determination is one calculated to arouse admiration in the hearts of the American people. Transferred to the rule of the Russian Czars in 1815 at the Congress of Vienna, the Finnish people suffered much from autocratic attempts at Russification. Happily Finland retained its integrity and its self-consciousness in spite of these attempts, and since the Finnish Declaration of Independence in 1917, this Nation has stood as an inspiring example to lovers of democracy everywhere.

We of the Democratic Party are proud of the fact that our party recognized the independence of this self-reliant people. We of the Democratic Party are proud also of the fact that our recognition of Finland has been more than justified. This Nation has been the only one that has without default met her debt obligations to the United States. This is an example of reliability and trustworthiness worthy of attention in times as troubled as these. It is entirely fitting that the Democratic Party that recognized the independence of Finland should be the party to sponsor and pass this bill in the House of Representatives, for it is a proper means of showing our respect to a sister republic.

American people of Finnish extraction can well be proud of their fatherland. Finland was given no special consideration as regards her debt to the United States, yet she has been true to her responsibility. It is this honesty of purpose which the Democratic Party in the House of Representatives recognized yesterday. That this bill was passed without dissent will, I am sure, strengthen the cordial relations that exist between the Finnish and American people. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Luckey].

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman and fellow Members, yesterday a resolution was introduced in the Senate asking for an investigation regarding the farmers who have come to Washington to voice their approval of what this administration has done for them in relieving in a measure the plight into which the previous administration had placed them. Criticism was also voiced in this House against our great President and against the A. A. A. program by the eminent and distinguished gentleman from New York, the Honorable HAMILTON FISH, Jr., whose name has been mentioned as a potential Republican candidate for the Presidency in 1936. It is in regard to these two incidents that I wish to direct my remarks at this time. I do this for the reason that I deem it an insult, a disgrace, and a shame to question the motives of and reasons why these farmers have come to Washington at this time. Both the resolution in the Senate and the remarks of the gentleman from New York carry the insinuation that these farmers are a bunch of hayseeds and hicks from out in the sticks who do not know what they want and who can be led as a rabble. In the name of our American farmers, I resent this insinuation.

I come from an agricultural State. I know these farmers. I have lived among them all my life. I am one of them. I understand their language, their needs, and their difficulties, which I believe the gentleman from New York does not, for if he did he would not have made the speech he delivered in my State on May 7, 1935, and which was so ably answered by my colleague here this afternoon.

Our farmers of the great agricultural section come from fine, sturdy, pioneer stock. They have inherited that sense of honesty, integrity, and industry that has contributed so much to the winning and upbuilding of the great Middle West. These farmers represent a splendid class of our American citizenship. They are well educated, keen, and intelligent. They know what they want. You find in these Middle Western States of Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and other neighboring States some of the finest agricultural colleges and universities in the country. Our University of Nebraska has 10,000 students, not to mention those thousands of students throughout the State who are enrolled in our normal schools and denominational colleges. These farmers who have come to Washington are the flower of our people. It is true that they cannot dress in the elegant style of those who come from the capitalistic, plutocratic class of the favored East, but their worth and value lies beneath their outward attire.

I am glad that the distinguished gentleman from New York mentioned the Ananias clubs. I recall that last fall in the campaign the Republican spellbinders in the East told the voters there that the consumer was paying the processing tax, but out in my State the western spellbinders told the farmers that the farmer was paying the processing tax. I wonder which of these two groups would be more eligible to membership in Mr. Fish's Ananias club. Repeatedly misstatements have been made on the floor of this House and by the press in regard to imports of farm products. These statements were either made in ignorance of the real facts or they were deliberately designed to discredit the administration's farm program. I called attention to this fact in a statement I made on the floor of the House April 16, 1935. I am glad that the President called a spade a spade.

Years ago when I was in New York City I was greatly impressed by the very evident and prevailing opinion among some New Yorkers that there was nothing worth while west of the Hudson River. Some of the representatives of the capitalistic and reactionary groups in the East do not understand the West. This was plainly manifested when the eminent gentleman from New York, by the use of the G. O. P. pulmotor, tried to inject life into the cold corpse of the Grand Old Party when he spoke at Omaha, Nebr.

Our farmers are too wise to fall for such bunk. They remember the time when they got 10 cents per bushel for their corn and 25 cents for their wheat. Investigate these farmers by a Senatorial resolution? Nonsense. It would be laughable were it not so pathetic. Did the gentlemen from the East ask for an investigation when the United States Chamber of Commerce, the steel industries, the farm-machinery manufacturing interests, or the shipping interests lobbied? No. Never did you hear a chirp from them then. But now, when the American farmer for the first time is coming into his own, they howl "Wolf." These farmers did not come to criticize or ask for anything. They came to express their gratitude for what this administration has done for them. They paid their own expenses out of their own pockets. City and country alike were interested in this expression of good will. They came here to see their Government in action and to voice their approval. What will these farmers think of the speech of the gentleman from New York and the resolution introduced in the Senate?

These farmers stated in no unmistakable terms last fall where they stood, and they will make their position clear again. They are wise to the tricks of the reactionaries. They know how they were fooled by the special interests, how they were drained all these years by the eastern protected industrialists, how they were compelled to sell the products of their labor in the open world market. They know how big business and the big banks exploited them until their backs broke under the unequal load. They know how, by the premeditated and designed curtailment of credit, our small country banks were forced to the wall, so that from 1920 to 1932 we had over 10,800 bank failures in the United States while in Canada there were only 3 and in England there were none.

No; these farmers are not so dumb. They know who is who in the political world. We should rejoice with them that they are again hopeful and are ambitious to carry on, even though it be under great odds. The country should have learned by this time that empty farmers' pocketbooks will not turn the wheels of industry. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a communication from the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

H. R. 6193, A BILL TO PROHIBIT THE IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN-MADE AMERICAN FLAGS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to H. R. 6193, a bill to prohibit the importation of the American flag or emblem from foreign countries. Several months ago, when the birthday of President Roosevelt was celebrated everywhere in the United States, the tables were decorated with flags which bore little labels showing they were made in Japan. This happened at the President's birthday ball held at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York City last January 31, 1935, as well as at the other birthday balls held throughout the country.

It had never occurred to me until that time that most of the small American flags were made in foreign countries, mostly in Japan. If there is anything which should be made in the United States and by American labor, it is the American flag.

It is ironical, Mr. Chairman, to contemplate the fact that the American flag, the symbol of our love for our country, the symbol of patriotism, the symbol of the might and power and strength of the United States, should be manufactured abroad. In order to correct that situation I introduced H. R. 6193.

Since I have introduced this bill I have received communications from every part of the United States giving me further details of the use of American flags and endorsing my bill. I want to read to the Members of the House from the letter which I received from Mrs. Leona Thomas, of Evanston, Ill. Mrs. Thomas is the State vice chairman of the Daughters of the American Revolution of the State of Illinois. She wrote me on February 28 as follows:

It has been our custom to present each new citizen, after he received the oath in the naturalization ceremonies, with an American flag. One man came and protested that his was marked "Made in Japan", and he did not want it.

I then canvassed the local merchants and I could find no place which had flags not made in Japan.

I then wrote to Indianapolis, national headquarters of the American Legion, and inquired, and they, too, found that such flags were all made in Japan.

I have another letter from Mrs. Ruth E. Quinby, of Omaha, Nebr. Mrs. Quinby writes that one day she spent the whole afternoon trying to purchase small American flags for table decorations for a George Washington Birthday celebration. She was unable to find any small flags in Omaha that were not made in Japan. I could quote innumerable other instances of similar occurrences which have been brought to my attention.

H. R. 6193 has been endorsed by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, whose letter of endorsement is as follows:

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES, DEPARTMENT OF AMERICANISM,
Washington, D. C., April 8, 1935.

HON. HENRY ELLENBOGEN,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ELLENBOGEN: Your letter of March 12 addressed to the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Pittsburgh, Pa., was forwarded to our Washington office and turned over to this department, together with the copy of H. R. 6193 which was enclosed with it.

I believe this bill to be a very meritorious one and worthy of the support of every patriotic citizen. The principles involved in this bill are in line with the ideals and purposes of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, and we therefore endorse the bill and urge its enactment.

Very sincerely yours,

VICTOR E. DEVEREAUX, Director.

The bill has been endorsed by the National Daughters of the Grand Army of the Republic, by the Junior Order United American Mechanics, and by many other organizations.

This bill has also been endorsed editorially by the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph at Pittsburgh, Pa., by the New York (N. Y.) American, by the Boston (Mass.) American, by the Chicago (Ill.) Herald Examiner, by the Rochester (N. Y.) Journal, by the Omaha (Nebr.) Bee News, by the Washington (D. C.) Herald, by the Beaver (Pa.) Times, by the Atlanta (Ga.) Georgian, and by many other newspapers all over the country.

I cannot believe that there is one man in this House who would oppose the passage of H. R. 6193. I cannot believe that there is one man in this House who does not endorse the principle that the flags and emblems of this great Nation should be made within its borders. I cannot conceive of any American citizen who would want to use an American flag made by foreign labor on foreign soil.

Mr. Chairman, the American flag is the symbol of the United States of America. It is the symbol of our devotion to our country. It is the symbol of our love and of our belief in our country. I believe that the Stars and Stripes, the flag of a free nation, the flag of the United States, the symbol of patriotism, the symbol of the might and strength and power of the American Nation should be made by American hands on American soil [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. BULWINKLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8021) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3896. An act to provide for the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates, for controlled expansion of the currency, and to extend the time for filing applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, and for other purposes.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—SAMUEL KAUFMAN (H. DOC. NO. 189)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 3105, entitled "An act for the relief of Samuel Kaufman."

This bill authorizes me to summon Samuel Kaufman, late major, Dental Corps, Medical Department, Regular Army, before a retiring board to inquire whether at the time of his resignation, December 15, 1922, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was a result of an incident of service, and if, as a result of such inquiry, it is found that he was so incapacitated, to take the necessary action to have him placed upon the retired list of the Army.

From the facts in this case it appears that Samuel Kaufman, at his own request and for his convenience, was discharged from the Army on December 15, 1922, and granted 1 year's pay, and that at the time of his discharge and again in 1923 and 1924, in connection with his status as a Reserve officer, he was found by the medical authorities of the Army to be not incapacitated for military service. On July 24, 1928, some five and a half years after his discharge from the Regular Army, this ex-officer applied to the Veterans' Administration for disability compensation, was rated 60 percent disabled, service connected, and granted compensation at the rate of $60 per month.

The ultimate purpose of the bill is to increase the annual compensation of the ex-officer in question from $720 per annum to $2,475 per annum, which latter amount would obtain if he were placed upon the Army retired list.

Granting that the ex-officer became incapacitated after his discharge from the Army and that his disability is traceable to his active Army service, there has been provided by law a special means whereby ex-members of our military forces may obtain relief. Such relief has been granted in this case by the Veterans' Administration, and I can see no justification for singling out this ex-officer for preferential treatment when others in the same category are not similarly treated.

The retirement system of the Regular Army was provided for the twofold purpose of attracting desirable permanent personnel to the service and of vitalizing the active list. Its maintenance for such purpose is vital to the national defense and should not be jeopardized by utilizing it as a means of relief or for placing upon the retired list persons other than the permanent personnel of the Military Establishment.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 15, 1935.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 17, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, as we wait and look up to Thee we beseech Thee to draw the veil and hear us. Most wisely manifest Thyself in the deliberations of the Congress. We pray that our daily walk and conversation may be above reproach. We thank Thee that in hope and despondency, in sickness and in health Thy love brings daylight and pierces the dark with starlight. As partakers of the divine Nature, fulfill in us, with splendid serenity, the charm of brotherly love, godliness, and self-control. Enable us to be worthy of all Thy blessed providences, not by breaking our alabaster boxes on forbidding objects but at the feet of Him whom we call Master and Lord. Inspire us to reach forward each day for more knowledge and more purity, ever standing as true men before God and the world. Keep us to the deep realization that only toilers know the sweetness of rest and calm. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

MAY 14, 1935.

Hon. JOSEPH BYRNS,

Speaker House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I am advised by my physician that it will be at least 2 months before I will be able to return to my office.

You will recall that I am the author of House Resolution 203, providing for an investigation of an organization known as the "American Retail Federation."

After the resolution was passed by the House you named me chairman of the investigating committee.

It is essential, in my opinion, that the investigation proceed at once. Therefore, in view of my physical condition, and in order that the committee might proceed at once, I hereby tender my resignation as a member of said committee.

With assurance of my high esteem, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. COCHRAN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] in place of Mr. COCHRAN. The Chair also appoints Mr. BLOOM, of New York, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

LICKING THE GHOST OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by Mr. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, on May 11, 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address of Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, before a farm meeting at Alexandria, La., May 11, 1935:

Washington is a good many miles from Louisiana, and despite our modern devices for learning the news and getting places, we are not always as well informed about your activities and your opinions as we would like to be. It was a pleasant surprise, therefore, to learn the extent to which the farmers of Louisiana are supporting the farm program of the new deal. I refer particularly to the vote in your house of representatives on April 13 on a resolution asking continuation of the processing tax and supporting the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. Although for some reason the fact is not widely known, the vote in favor of this resolution was, I understand, 97 to 3. This also happened to be the exact proportion in favor of the Bankhead Act in your farm referendum last year.

I assure you that your united stand for the cause of agriculture was never more necessary than at the present moment. The next few weeks will be crucial. If the ranks of agriculture hold firm, we have some chance to improve the Agricultural Adjustment Act and come closer to winning for agriculture its fair share of the national income; but if the ranks of agriculture are divided, it is almost a certainty that what farmers have battled for for 15 years will be lost.

You see, what is really going on today is another episode in the famous struggle between Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton. The present danger is that the ghost of Hamilton will triumph, and in that triumph the rights of agriculture will be sunk without a trace.

We hear a good deal about Jefferson today from men who call themselves Jeffersonian Democrats, but who are principally corporation attorneys using the plea of State rights to preserve special privileges. It is going pretty far afield, it seems to me, to try to quote Thomas Jefferson in defense of huge vested interests. You know as well as I do that Jefferson was first, last, and all the time for the farmer. In his time 80 percent of all the people were farmers, and he hoped this would continue.

Hamilton, of course, had very little time for farmers. He believed in national unity, it should be said to his credit, quite as much as Jefferson; but whereas Jefferson wanted unity achieved under the sovereignty of the people, Hamilton wanted unity achieved by the grant of governmental powers to a relatively few powerful groups. Hamilton figured that by granting tariff concessions to business and financial advantages to bankers and speculators, these powerful groups would preserve national unity and at the same time run the country to best advantage.

When the party of Thomas Jefferson came into power in 1800 it was hailed as a great victory for representative government and Jeffersonian agrarianism. The truth is, however, that it was only a partial victory. What Jefferson won was a political victory; in economics the battle had gone to Hamilton. For Hamilton had already firmly established the practice of loaning governmental powers to business and finance in order to give them advantages which he considered necessary to national unity and progress. Tariffs for industry, banking legislation for financial interests, were so well entrenched that even Jefferson could not dislodge them.

That was more than a century ago. The political victory of Jefferson has remained intact, but it was more and more endangered in recent years by the consequences of Hamilton's economic victory. For that Hamiltonian victory agriculture in particular has had to pay through the nose. It has had to sell in an open market and buy in a protected one. It has had to stand by powerless while finance and business and labor have accumulated more and more governmental powers. It has seen the device of the corporation and the labor union make hash of the traditional competitive market. It has seen industry not only exercise, but abuse, the right to adjust production to a changing demand, with the blessing of government. Yet when agriculture has asked for the governmental powers necessary to adjust its production to make up for lost foreign markets, the Hamiltonians have held up their hands in righteous horror.

That was the situation up until 1933. Franklin D. Roosevelt, a Jeffersonian rather than a Hamiltonian, came into office at the insistence of the millions who thought that if governmental powers were to be loaned to one they should be loaned to all; that the disadvantaged, the disadvantaged had even greater need of them than the financially high and mighty.

Since the farmer has to buy in a protected market, the farm program of the new deal found a way to help him sell in a protected market. For the first time, through the device of the processing tax, the majority of farmers had a tariff that actually worked for them.

Because of surpluses so huge as to overshadow our whole national economy, because of the limited amount of food the human stomach can consume, because of a shattered foreign market for farm products, agriculture in 1933 won the right to adjust its production to the market that actually existed.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act borrowed the centralizing power of government so that agriculture might at least begin to win back a little of its fair share of the national income. This goal, it was widely agreed, was desirable not merely for the sake of agriculture but quite as much for the sake of the Nation.

Now that these governmental powers have been used by millions of farmers for 2 years, the cry has arisen that they must be taken away. I do not hear this cry from any large number of farmers. They know that a moderate use of these governmental powers has helped put them back on their feet.

Here in Louisiana your receipts from farm marketings in 1932 were down to $56,000,000. By last year, 1934, these receipts plus benefit payments had risen to nearly $86,000,000, an increase of 51 percent over 1932.

Let's look at the facts on the three important crops for which there have been adjustment programs in Louisiana—cotton, rice, and sugar. In 1932 the farm value of cotton lint and seed was $22,424,000. In 1933 Louisiana cotton producers agreed to cut production in order to lessen the burden of a terrific surplus. As a result of this and other administration programs, the farm value of the cotton crop in Louisiana rose to about $33,000,000, including benefit payments. And last year, again convinced of the necessity for keeping production more nearly in line with existing market requirements, Louisiana cotton growers again applied collective control, and found the farm value of their crop, including benefit payments, mount to $44,603,000, or double the farm value of the 1932 crop.

Rice growers of Louisiana are receiving during the current marketing year nearly $13,000,000, as compared with $6,500,000 for the 1932 crop. Only recently we reached a crisis in the rice program, in which it was necessary that the Agricultural Adjustment Act be amended if rice growers were to continue to enjoy the benefits of the program. The income of rice growers had been improved through a marketing agreement, but due to difficulties in enforcing the licensing provisions of the act a surplus of rice had accumulated which could not be moved under the existing program. It was necessary to shift to a processing-tax program; but the Agricultural Adjustment Act provided that a processing tax could be levied only at the beginning of a marketing year, so it appeared for a time that a large number of growers would not have a market for the 1934 crop of rice. When the attention of Congress was called to this situation, the act was amended so that a processing tax could be levied, effective almost immediately. This permitted the change from the marketing agreement to the processing-tax type of program and made it possible for the rice growers who had not been able to sell their crops to move them into the channels of trade.

Now a word about the sugar program. In years past Louisiana cane farmers were forced to contend with unregulated admission of cane sugar from insular areas and foreign countries in excess of market needs, and growers were dependent solely upon payments received from the sugar factories for their returns from the crop. Assistance to the sugarcane growers and the sugar industry in Louisiana, therefore, has been given in three ways. First of all, under the quota provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act, importations of sugars from the insular areas and foreign countries have been fixed in accordance with market requirements. Secondly, direct benefit payments have been made to cane growers in accordance with established procedure under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. In all, 13,469 checks, totaling $2,952,698, have now been paid on 8,556 contracts as the first installment of the 1934 benefit payments to be made to Louisiana sugarcane growers.

Unlike growers of other basic commodities, Louisiana cane growers have been virtually assured prewar parity returns on their production.

Thirdly, the production adjustment contract for Louisiana cane growers also provides that in the event of crop damage or crop failure due to climatic calamities, crop deficiency payments will be made. The Louisiana cane growers are thereby given a substantial measure of crop insurance under the A. A. A. program.

Prior to enactment of sugar legislation in 1934, the farm value of the sugarcane crop in Louisiana had reached a low level. The 1932 crop had a value of $8,831,000 and the 1933 crop a value of $8,587,000, a marked decline from the average value of the crop of $11,051,000 in the decade of 1920-30. As compared with the average value of the crop in the period 1920-25, when production in Louisiana was at a relatively high level, and the farm value of the crop averaged $14,341,000, the value of the 1932 and 1933 crops represented a decline of as much as 64.7 percent.

Under the sugar legislation of May 1934 and the Louisiana crop adjustment program carried out under that legislation, the value of the 1934 crop (the first to be distributed under the new deal), including benefit payments which have already been made to producers and which will be made in accordance with the provisions of contracts with producers, will be about $13,500,000, which figure is not only much above the 1920-30 average but is close to the average of the more favorable period 1920-25. A sugarcane-sirup program is being developed, approval of which would result in a further increase in the income of sugarcane growers in Louisiana.

It is around the cotton-adjustment program and processing tax, as you know, that the enemies of a new deal for agriculture have rallied. They haven't quite got the nerve to say that the cotton farmer is making too much money, but if they win their fight against the cotton program, the cotton farmer will certainly soon be making less money. To the textile operators who object to paying 16 cents a pound for cotton (market price plus processing tax), to labor leaders who fear that 16 cents for cotton may injure labor, let me direct an interesting question: How much of a return per hour of labor will 16-cent cotton give the average share-cropper?

The minimum wage for textile workers in the South, under the Textile Code, is 30 cents an hour. Do the men who grow cotton do as well? I have had an analysis made for Georgia and Texas, including all the necessary items of expense and receipt. In 1934 I find 16-cent cotton brought to the average share-cropper in Georgia a wage of 14.6 cents per hour; in Texas, 16 cents an hour. Were these share-croppers to get 30 cents an hour for their labor on the cotton crop, as the Textile Code provides for textile labor, the price of cotton would have to be around 30 cents a pound.

It is true, of course, that the share-croppers have a little land on which to raise food and feed, but it is also true that the number of hours during the year when they can earn their 15 or 16 cents an hour cash income from cotton is severely limited. In view of these facts can either industry or labor fairly accuse agriculture of charging too much for its services and its products?

Agriculture is still a long way from having its fair share of the national income. Yet, when it comes down to a question of abundance versus scarcity, we find agriculture far closer to normal production than industry. The representatives of business have no right to complain about production control by the A. A. A. Throughout the depression agriculture kept on producing at the same old rate, and prices were cut in two. You didn't see industry let its prices fall 50 percent. Industry cut production 50 percent in order to maintain prices within 20 percent of normal. Farm-machinery production was cut 80 percent while prices dropped only 5 percent. Acres of factories were left idle; millions of workers were plowed out into the streets.

Last year, despite the worst drought on record, agriculture produced within 15 percent of 1929 production. Industry was still 40 percent under 1929. This year, agriculture will probably come even closer to 1929 production. Will industry do as well?

Those who charge the A. A. A. of inducing scarcity simply do not know the facts. The American farmer always has produced enough food for every man, woman, and child in the United States, and I am sure he will continue to, given a chance to stay on his farm and in business. The adjustment programs have cut down production for an export market which no longer exists; they have not deprived the American people of an ounce of necessary food.

This year, given average weather, the harvested acreage of our 18 most important food and feed crops will be 40 million acres above that of last year. That means an increase of 16 percent over last year. To me that does not spell the economics of scarcity. Agriculture did not start the scarcity idea, has never practiced it, and never will. It asks for a society in which all groups will produce for an ever-increasing demand, but a society in which the productive effort and the productive reward of each great group will be in continuous balance with all.

That is the purpose and the method of the adjustment administration. Agriculture must insist upon the use of governmental powers exactly as long as they are employed by labor and industry and finance.

The processing tax is the farmer's tariff, the marketing agreements and licenses are the farmer's corporation laws. When industry is willing to abandon its tariffs, agriculture will be willing to abandon the processing tax; when business agrees to repeal the statutes authorizing corporations, agriculture will gladly abandon marketing agreements and licenses.

I confess I am impatient with those old-fashioned Jeffersonians who don't realize that the tariff and corporations have come to dominate our industrial and business economy; who forget that the farmer has always been the only unorganized force in America.

These people have never looked into the soul of Jefferson—he would be for the farmer now and he would realize that we must play the game with the rules as they are today. Whatever else he was, Jefferson was invariably the practical statesman.

The Republicans and some Democrats say farmers should do nothing for themselves, but should break the big corporations. It is awfully easy to arouse farmers this way, for they have been betrayed again and again by corporations. But making speeches against corporations, even passing antitrust laws against them, does not get us anywhere. The only sensible alternative is for agriculture to obtain and to use governmental powers comparable with those already used by corporations.

That is what agriculture is doing under the A. A. A., but as I said at the outset, agriculture's continued use of these powers is today in danger. The ghost of Hamilton is abroad in the land. He has come back because he sees that his economic victory of a century or more ago is in peril. As he was watched the new deal, he has discovered to his horror that it not only proposes to give the management of their economic affairs to the people but that it actually has put the notion into practice. He thought that he had established an economic government of, by, and for the few; and he has come back because we have strayed far from his principles.

The ghost of Hamilton does not like to see governmental powers loaned to some six or seven million farmers. Farmers, he would say, exist merely to provide the cities with cheap food and manufacturers with cheap raw materials. Farmers, he would continue, have already won too much through the Agricultural Adjustment Act. It is time to scrap it, says the ghost of Hamilton; time to pound the rostrum and holler about invasions of liberty (whose liberty?); time to suppress, once and for all, the agrarian spirit which is forever disturbing a status quo so comfortable—for the Hamiltonians.

I say it is time to lick the ghost of Hamilton. I say it is time for farmers to get up on their hind legs and fight for what they know to be simple justice.

CONSIDERATION OF H. R. 6914

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I present a privileged report for printing under the rule.

The resolution is as follows:

House Resolution 223

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 6914, "A bill to authorize cooperation with the several States for the purpose of stimulating the acquisition, development, and proper administration and management of State forests", etc. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House, with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered on Mother's Day by Dr. Raphael H. Miller.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, who is Dr. Miller?

Mr. BELL. He is pastor of the National City Christian Church. It is a Mother's Day address, a patriotic address, in which the Members of the House may be interested.

Mr. SNELL. A few days ago it was announced that you were not going to put any more outside addresses in the RECORD. If the majority wants to put this in, let it go on.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I feel that we ought to have some definite policy in the House as to what material shall properly go in the RECORD. It is difficult to draw a positive rule. Nevertheless I am confident that the sentiment of the House is that we ought to have some understanding so that Members will not feel that they are being unkindly treated or discriminated against when someone objects. My judgment is the House should restrict the insertion of outside matters much more than we do. It costs the Government an enormous amount of money to print the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The insertion of a reasonable amount of important statements of Government officials on matters that are of general interest to the country is justifiable. I, of course, do not pretend to determine this question. We have never had any hard-and-fast rule. I have often thought there ought to be some committee to whom all these requests for the inclusion of matters other than a Member's own remarks should be submitted so there would be some system of treating all Members fairly and at the same time protecting the RECORD in an orderly way.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of cold absolute fact we ought to confine matters in the RECORD to what takes place on the floor or to statements of Government officials.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think that is right.

Mr. SNELL. When I was a part of the majority and responsible for these matters that is what I did as far as I was able to.

Mr. BULWINKLE. And what the gentleman from New York was not able to do we did for him.

Mr. SNELL. And I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I feel constrained to object.

THE FARMERS' LOBBY

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, loud and long are the complaints—which are both amusing and disgusting—coming from Republican sources for the most part and voiced because of the visit of 4,000 farmers to the Nation's Capital.

With solemn faces and frantic assurances about their own purity, the defenders of reaction hold up their hands in holy horror because the farmers had the audacity to send a "lobby" to Washington.

How shocking! To what depths the agriculturists have sunk, that 4,000 of them come to Washington to express their opinions about legislation and policies. What frightfully unethical procedure for these men, who raise crops, milk cows, hoe potatoes, and plow in fields, to invade the sacred precincts of the District of Columbia and actually attempt to influence officials and the public! Of course, this has never been done before. Of course, it is an alarming innovation when representatives of a class seek to have laws enacted that they approve. Of course, in all previous times, from the day of the signing of the Declaration of Independence down to the present, Congress, the President, and other officials have lived in a sterilized political ether apart from people and all mundane influences, have never received appeals or requests to do this or that, and have never yielded in any degree to the advice or urging of anybody.

The Railroad Trust, the Oil Trust, the Beef Trust, the Sugar Trust, and all the other monopolies—none of them have ever maintained a lobby in Washington or spent money to entertain officials. Oh, no!

In view of this uninterrupted record of stainless virtue, it really is both astounding and awful that bronzed, muscular, hard-working, honest farmers whose toil produces so many essentials for the whole people should have the nerve to be seen and heard in Washington!

What are we coming to anyway? Cannot these farmers understand that they ought to stay home on their farms, mind their own business, keep their mouths shut, and let the representatives of the millionaire and billionaire corporations, with their diamond pins and rings and "biled" shirts have the Washington show to themselves?

Without discussing the policy of the Agriculture Department and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration which the farmers came to Washington to personally endorse, I want to say with all possible emphasis that they have as much right to come here as any class in this country—and much more right than the smooth and sleek lobbyists for big business. I am glad they came. I hope they come again and often. I hope they exercise increasing influence over legislation and policies as time goes on—and that the same is true of wage workers. When farmers and workers have their say about our laws and methods of government, instead of Wall Street, the Nation will be considerably better off than it ever has been before.

The A. A. A. has undoubtedly made its mistakes, as all human institutions do. But the mistake has not been because agriculture was regulated and "regimented." If there have been errors, it was because there was not enough regulation and because it was not always gaged so that the producer would get the maximum of benefit. The principle of regulating agriculture and of regulating industry in the interest of the common people is a correct one, and the farmers are right in endorsing it, regardless of what we may think about details as to the application of the principle.

It ought not to be necessary to say that 4,000 farmers, or any other number of them, are within their rights in coming to Washington to express their opinions about public matters, just as trade-unionists and ex-service men and other citizens are. Whether they came here to endorse the A. A. A. or denounce it, to advocate Democracy or Republicanism or Socialism or the single tax or repeal or prohibition, or any other philosophy is beside the point. If they had made their pilgrimage for the purpose of assailing the new deal they would have had an equal right to travel to and from the city that is the seat of government.

It is just about time that the captains of industry, the kings of finance, and the czars of banking of the United States discover that the farmers of our country have as much—and far more—right to advocate political principles as the beneficiaries of special privilege.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short extract from a letter received from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short extract from a letter received from Mr. Green. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to know what Mr. Green is going to talk about.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ARMY PARTICIPATION IN OLYMPIC GAMES

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 1803, to authorize the Secretary of War to pay certain expenses incident to the training, attendance, and participation of the equestrian and modern pentathlon teams in the Eleventh Olympic Games. This measure authorizes the Secretary of War to direct the training and attendance of personnel and animals of the Regular Army as participants in the Eleventh Olympic Games. There is no increase in the appropriation or expenditure, but it permits the charge for these expenses to be made to the appropriations for the support of the Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to direct the training and attendance of personnel and animals of the Regular Army as participants in the Eleventh Olympic Games: Provided, That all expenses incident to training, attendance, and participation in the Eleventh Olympic Games, including the use of such supplies, material, and equipment as in the opinion of the Secretary of War may be necessary, may be charged to the appropriations for the support of the Army: Provided further, That applicable allowances which are or may be fixed by law or regulations for participation in other military activities shall not be exceeded.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MILLIONS OF AMERICAN WORKINGMEN AND THEIR FAMILIES ARE DEMANDING THE RIGHT TO LIVE

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Speaker, we all recognize that the most important problem in America today is the problem of unemployment. In order to reduce or eliminate unemployment, it is imperative that we recognize and deal with its causes, rather than merely with its effects, as we are now doing. Some students of economics, including the Director of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, have stated that we will always have 5,000,000 or more of our citizens unemployed. This would indeed be a tragic prospect if it were true—but fortunately, it is not.

It is an axiom of economics that if consumption, or distribution, can keep pace with production, we will have no unemployment. The advent of modern labor-saving machinery has, however, greatly accelerated production, making it possible for one individual, with a machine, to double, treble, and in some instances, to increase by a hundredfold the individual production capacity of the past, thus complicating the problem of balancing production with consumption.

The records of the American Federation of Labor disclose that organized labor is conscious of the fact that constant displacement is going on and wholesale additions are being made to the army of the unemployed. This has been caused by reason of the fact that various men are doing the work which a greater number of men were formerly employed to do.

In addition, the statistics of the Labor Bureau show that between 1923 and 1928, years of unusual prosperity, the number of factory workers in the United States actually decreased by one and a quarter million workers. The latest United States census shows that there were 330,000 fewer factory workers in 1914 than in 1930, despite a population increase since 1914 of 20,000,000, and an increase in factory production during the same period of 72 percent. We have here the positive, definite record that, with fewer factory workers we were producing 72 percent more in 1930 than in 1914.

We have shown a remarkable progress in mechanical development, which is, indeed, a testimonial to our inventive genius. Our mechanical progress, however, has assumed such proportions that unless it is controlled in the interest of society, it will develop into a veritable Frankenstein, which will annihilate society and government, as we now know it.

I do not wish to be understood as advocating the elimination or curtailment of labor-saving devices, but I do advocate a graduated tax on the labor-saving machines, or the products of such machines which violently displace labor. The tax derived from this source should be used wholly as a medium for unemployment insurance, to provide employment on public improvements and developments of a National or State-wide character for the workers displaced by the machine.

Admittedly, the levying of a technotax would be a radical innovation. Therefore, in justice to the owner of the machine and in the interests of the general welfare, I have introduced a resolution providing for an appropriation to conduct a thorough survey of the displacement of human labor by the machine, the results of which would be the basis for recommending to the Congress a plan of equitable taxation.

In the past 99 years our Government has issued approximately 2,000,000 patents. Assuredly no individual could consistently oppose the issuance of patents on devices which relieve human drudgery, improve the quality of a product, or which create employment through the establishment of new industries, such as the radio, the airplane, air conditioning, and so forth. However, no one will claim that a cotton-picking machine, now in process of development, which, it is reported, will take the place of 100 laborers, will add one iota to the quality of the product. In an instance of this kind, we will find that 98 or more individuals per machine, who are already on the ragged edge of poverty, will lose even the small pittance heretofore earned as cotton pickers—they will become objects of charity—while the owner of the machine takes to himself the profits of mass production.

The labor-displacing machine will not buy, neither does it eat; nor does it pay other than a small property tax. The 98 individuals per machine who will be displaced by a mechanical cotton picker will add to the 15,000,000 who have already been released from private industry. These millions must be fed and subsisted in some manner, which, unfortunately, is now being accomplished by borrowing from the owner of the machine through the medium of tax-exempt securities. In other words, the plight of the unemployed and their families becomes increasingly desperate, while the wealth of the machine owner multiplies in the form of tax-exempt securities.

One of the dangerous aspects of the machine in its application today is that it is controlled by monied groups, comprising a very few individuals, thus continuing to concentrate wealth in the hands of a few, enforcing idleness on the workers displaced and adding to the misery of the masses. This is especially noticeable in the larger basic industries.

The technotax would make it possible for the small producer or manufacturer, with little or no mass-production machinery, to compete with the larger machine-equipped factories of the great industrialists. Rather than install expensive machinery and pay a tax thereon, the small manufacturer would employ more human labor, thus contributing toward relieving unemployment. The technotax would permit individual specialists, artists, and craftsmen to compete in industry with highly mechanized production, thus again spreading labor rather than constricting it; and thus, also, stimulating our interest in and appreciation of the finer things in life.

The owners of the labor-displacing machines, especially those in the larger industries, such as the steel, rubber, automobile, and other industries, and the owners of distinctive patent rights on machines which are leased and never sold, will register violent opposition to the technotax. It was necessary to fight a great Civil War to free the Negroes from their economic and physical bondage. In this day of enlightenment and the free exercise of the ballot it will not be necessary to make similar sacrifices to free our workers from the slavery of unemployment which is, indeed, the worst kind of slavery for the worker and his family.

Before the advent of the modern machine every boat load of slaves brought from Africa added to the wealth and also to the leisure of the southern planter. Every modern labor-saving machine adds to the wealth of the big industrialists, while it multiplies the misery of the workers who are displaced by the machine.

My limited time precludes going into detail on the subject of labor displacement by the machine, but in the coal-mining industry alone it is estimated that no less than 100,000 men have been displaced by machinery during the past 10 years, and notwithstanding this, according to the Bureau of Mines, the price of coal in 1934 was higher than in 1929.

In addition, I will mention briefly some of the basic industries which utilize labor-saving machinery to the utmost and in which workers are continually displaced in almost unbelievable numbers.

The glass industry affords a striking illustration. In this industry one machine, in many instances, displaces 30 or 40 workers.

In the brick industry, in the pottery industry, and especially in the steel, automobile, and rubber industries we find an inordinate displacement of man power through the adoption of labor-saving devices.

Even in the business of cleaning poultry we find human labor displaced by approximately 50 percent due to a recently developed cleaning machine. With a recently patented egg breaker, one person does the work heretofore performed by six.

We have an automatic telegraph and linotype machine in the course of development which will displace thousands of telegraph and linotype operators.

Thousands upon thousands of girls lost their positions due to the adoption of the dial system of telephoning.

Television is now being developed and may eventually supplant the movies.

A machine is now being developed which will manufacture shoes from the cured hide to the finished product without human hands.

So much for examples of labor displacement. I could go on for hours describing how the iron man has enslaved and impoverished his prototype of flesh and blood.

Present banking and economic principles were accepted when production was dependent upon human muscles. Now that muscles of steel have taken the place of human muscles in the basic industries, we must adapt ourselves to the circumstances which confront us and free the American citizen from the enforced thralldom of unemployment due to machine displacement. Our scientific advance has outdistanced our social progress. If we will tax the machines to provide honest work, we will then have a satisfied, contented citizenship, with an assured earned income to every individual through the products of his labor, rather than the present capitalistic dole system.

With several million young men and women of America entering the ranks of labor each year, we cannot close our eyes to positive causes and deal only with effects of unemployment, as we are now doing. The welfare of future generations and the safety of our democratic form of government demand that youth be given an opportunity to labor, to provide homes for themselves, and to live normal, independent lives.

Either the Government must own the machines which displace human labor or the Government must levy a tax on such machines, especially on the group machines, to compensate to some degree for the labor displaced. From my observation here in Washington and from my experience with the enormous, inefficient bureaucracies established under the new deal, I am free to say that I am opposed to the Government owning the machines, and I do not favor the Government entering into competition with private industry anywhere, except perhaps in the field of natural resources.

The question at issue is whether the capitalistic system will crush the individual or whether it will be modified so that production and distribution will be kept in balance through the medium of a commodity dollar, the value of which should be controlled by the Congress of the United States, and not by the private bankers who own and control the Federal Reserve System.

Property rights, in no event, should take precedence over human rights. The agencies of entrenched and monopolistic wealth will oppose a tax on the labor-displacing machine with the same vehemence that the southern planters opposed the abolition of Negro slavery. Congress must respect human rights and the tenets of the Constitution which authorize taxation in the general welfare. Common sense itself would indicate that the agency which creates unemployment should bear the brunt of taxation to compensate for the havoc which it creates.

NATIONAL BOY SCOUTS JAMBOREE

Mr. DRIVER, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution for printing under the rules, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 224

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. J. Res. 285, "A joint resolution to permit the temporary entry into the United States under certain conditions of alien participants and officials of the National Boy Scout Jamboree to be held in the United States in 1935." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution, and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8021) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, with Mr. BULWINKLE in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

UNRELIABLE NEWSPAPERS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Eugene Meyer's Washington Post and Mr. William Randolph Hearst's Washington Herald and Times again today state a malicious, deliberate lie about me. It is not astonishing, because they cannot tell the truth.

This Eugene Meyer is the same Eugene Meyer who used money he filched from the Government to rob the little McLean heirs out of their $2,000,000 worth of Washington Post property. I am going to tell all the facts about him sometime.

The William Randolph Hearst I refer to is the same William Randolph Hearst, a moral pervert and degenerate, who has been using an unmerited inheritance of money to shock decent society.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not, as I want to use only 1 minute.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, what is before the House?

Mr. BLANTON. I have been yielded time in general debate, and do not want to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has been yielded 1 minute by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BLANTON. And if Mr. Hearst continues this, I am going to tell how he is using that money out on the Pacific coast and in New York and has been using it for 25 years. That is all I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN].

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, the recent tragic school-bus accident near Rockville, Md., snuffed out the lives of 14 high school children and injured 13 more. Attention has again been concentrated on the terrible toll of deaths and injuries in traffic accidents in this country. Few realize how this toll has been growing. In the last 10 years the number of deaths on our highways has about doubled, reaching the all-time high of nearly 36,000 deaths in 1934. For every 7 persons killed in 1933 in automobile accidents, 8 were killed in 1934. Every 15 minutes someone is killed, and every 30 seconds some person is injured in a traffic accident. It has been estimated that if the present trend of traffic accidents continues, out of each 100 persons born today, 14 will be killed or seriously injured in traffic accidents and 80 will sustain minor injuries. This information comes to me from the director of safety and traffic engineering of the American Automobile Association.

THE STREET IS MORE DANGEROUS THAN THE BATTLEFIELD

In the 18 months of the United States' participation in the World War, 50,510 American soldiers were killed. In the same number of months, from July 1, 1930, through December 31, 1931, 53,650 Americans were killed by motor vehicle accidents. The toll for the last 18 months is still higher. The six major wars in which the United States has participated since its birth as a nation cost less than 300,000 American lives. During 15 years of peace time 1,300,000—over four times as many American people—were killed by accidents, and millions more have been disabled for life.

One million more people killed in American accidents in 15 years of peace than in all major wars of our history. This and a great deal of additional information has been compiled by Ernest Greenwood in his recent book, Who Pays?

MOTOR VEHICLE ONLY ONE KIND OF ACCIDENT

On an average, 90,000 to 100,000 people are killed each year by accidents; 300,000 are permanently disabled; and more than 8,000,000 injured. One hundred thousand American lives lost each year by accidents—8,000 deaths a month, 2,000 a week, 275 a day, 12 every hour. Every 5 minutes a life is lost by accident.

The National Safety Council reports that accidents were responsible for approximately 9,500,000 disabling injuries in 1934. The cost of these injuries, including wage loss and medical expense, approximated $2,400,090,000. To this sum may be added approximately $800,000,000 for property damage in motor-vehicle accidents and $300,000,000 property loss in fires, making a total of $3,500,000,000.

KINDS OF ACCIDENTS

By far the largest number of accidents are caused by motor vehicles. Of the 99,000 accidental deaths occurring in 1934, 35,500 were caused by motor vehicles; 33,000 accidental deaths were caused in the home; 17,500 were caused by accidents of a public character, not including motor vehicle accidents; 15,500 were caused by occupational injuries—Preliminary 1935 Edition of Accident Facts, National Safety Council.

AIRPLANE ACCIDENTS

Recurring sensational headlines flaring forth the toll of lives lost in every airplane accident mislead the public, and cause many of our good citizens to shrink from travel by air. As a matter of fact, a report of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation on Passenger Traffic published 1935, page 23, indicates that airway carriers fly 24,700,000 passenger miles for each fatality, whereas private automobiles drive only 11,300,000 miles. There are more than twice as many private automobile fatalities per number of miles traveled as there are deaths on airway carriers.

MOTOR-VEHICLE ACCIDENTS

Motor-vehicle accidents are divided into several classes:

1. Automobile accidents, excluding collisions with railroad trains and street cars.
2. Automobile accidents in collision with railroad trains.
3. Automobile accidents in collision with street cars.
4. Motorcycle accidents.

The trend of motor vehicle deaths is shown in a report of the Census Bureau for the years 1931, 1932, and 1933. In addition to the figures given by the Bureau for 1931, 1932, 1933, I might say that the National Safety Council estimates that in 1934 there were 1,250,000 disabling injuries resulting from motor-vehicle accidents, in which 35,500 persons were killed. The Bureau of the Census has published the statistics which I will now present to you on the fatalities due to motor-vehicle accidents in 1933, 1932, and 1931. This summary gives the figures for the United States and for each State, the number of deaths, and the death rates due to motor-vehicle accidents, automobile accidents excluding collisions with street cars or railroad trains, automobile accidents in collision with railroad trains, automobile accidents in collision with street cars, and motorcycle accidents.

COSTS OF ACCIDENTS—AUTOMOBILE

"A billion and a quarter dollars a year would be saved in the United States if we would only cut out preventable accidents", says the Literary Digest for October 3, 1931. Sixty percent of this cost is declared to be avoidable. The National Safety Council estimates the cost of motor-vehicle accidents for 1934 to be $1,570,000,000.

Another writer estimates a total economic loss from automobile accidents alone of $2,500,000,000 a year, or five times as great as the gross funded debt of New York State. (Ernest Greenwood, Who Pays? p. 37.)

COST OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS

For occupational accidents the cost of claims, medical service, hospitalization, and funerals is estimated by the National Safety Council at $590,000,000 for 15,500 deaths per year, and approximately 1,334,500 nonfatal injuries. Add to this cost the economic loss due to slowing up of production, spoilage of materials, and injury to machinery, and you will have a total estimated by one authority of $5,000,000,000 a year for the cost of industrial accidents—12 times the value of property destroyed each year by fire, twice as much as we spend on our public-school system.

COST OF ACCIDENTS IN THE HOME

For the 4,767,000 personal injury nonfatal accidents and the 33,000 deaths resulting from injuries in the home, the National Safety Council has estimated the cost at $600,000,000 a year.

A table of estimated costs of accidents has been carefully prepared by Ernest Greenwood, whose other statistics I have already quoted. To quote Mr. Greenwood's table (appendix A, Who Pays?):

Authorities differ as to the economic loss due to occupational accidents (wage losses, medical expense, and the overhead cost of compensation insurance) but it has been placed at $10,000,000,000 by the engineering department of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters. A careful and detailed analysis of 75,000 personal-injury industrial accidents indicates that the intangible loss—spoilage of material, injury to machinery, the general slowing down of processes, etc.—to be about four times this amount, which means that the actual cost of industrial accidents is about.....	$5,000,000,000
The National Safety Council estimates that the wage loss, medical expense, and overhead cost of insurance in connection with 1933 fatal and nonfatal injuries in motor-vehicle accidents at about $680,000,000. The intangible losses are at least three times this amount, bringing the cost of automobile accidents up to more than.....	2,500,000,000
The cost in wage loss, medical expense, and overhead cost of insurance of home accidents amounts to about $550,000,000. It is difficult to estimate the intangible losses, but they must be at least twice this amount, making the total cost.....	1,650,000,000

Balance to cover the cost of transportation and public accidents other than motor vehicle.....	$950,000,000
Total.....	10,000,000,000

TREND OF ACCIDENTS

Faced with these staggering numbers and costs of accidents, we want to know what is the present trend in accidents. Are they increasing or decreasing with the increase in civilization's complexity?

INCREASE IN MOTOR-VEHICLE ACCIDENTS

For automobile accidents the National Safety Council reports an increase in automobile accident deaths from 31,363 in 1933 to 35,550 in 1934. This is a percentage increase per 100,000 population of from 25.0 in 1933 to 28.1 in 1934.

Some authorities attribute the decrease in automobile-accident deaths which occurred between the years 1931 (32,429) and 1932 (28,361) to the depression and consequent more infrequent use of automobiles. But the number of automobile fatalities increased again in 1933 (31,363) over 1932, and still again in 1934 (35,550 estimate). This is an increase per 100,000 of population, an increase per 100,000 cars, and an increase per 10,000,000 gallons of gasoline consumed. If the increase in automobile-accident deaths were exactly in proportion to the number of automobiles in use, varying rates of accident deaths might be attributed to depression and recovery. But when the number of deaths increase per number of cars in use and number of gallons of gasoline consumed, the present trend toward a continued increase of automobile accident deaths becomes cause for alarm.

MINNESOTA ACCIDENT RATES

The Minnesota Safety Council has just published some interesting statistics with reference to the trend of motor-vehicle accident fatalities in the State of Minnesota for the 5 years 1929 to 1933, inclusive. The figures show that regardless of panic or boom there were more motor-vehicle fatalities in 1933 than the peak boom year 1929. And the year 1931, the bottom year of the panic on the basis of national income, brought the highest number of motor-vehicle fatalities for the State of Minnesota. I am at this time offering no deductions of my own on the causes of increases and decreases. I am presenting the facts for observation and study:

For the first 5 months of 1934 the Minnesota Public Safety Committee reports motor-vehicle accident fatalities increased 57.7 percent over the first 5 months of 1933 in Minnesota. But during the last 7 months of 1934 the number of fatalities decreased 12 percent. The total number of 1934 fatalities amounted to 628, an increase over the previous year. On May 18, 1934, the Minnesota public safety educational program was inaugurated at a meeting held at the State Capitol. The Minnesota public safety committee claims that this accounts for the sharp drop in the number of fatalities the last half of the year, in contrast to the record for the first half of the year.

MONTH BY MONTH ANALYSIS FOR MINNESOTA

The actual month by month automobile accident fatalities for Minnesota tend to bear out the claims of the Minnesota public safety committee. I now present Minnesota's record for 1934 by months.

The chart shows that there were 91 more deaths during the first 5 months of 1934 as compared with the same period of 1933, and 24 less deaths during the last 7 months of 1934 as compared with the same period of 1933. Increase in gasoline consumption for the period January through May 1934 as compared with the same period during 1933 was 7.1 percent. Increase in gasoline consumption for the period June through December 1934 was 7.4 percent over the same period in 1933.

MOST DANGEROUS DAYS AND HOURS

The Travelers Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn., reports that Sunday is the most dangerous day for automobile drivers; Saturday is second, and Tuesday last. The story for 1934 is told clearly in chart form:

The most dangerous hour is from 5 to 6 in the afternoon, judging from the percentage of accidents which occurred during that hour. However, the fatality rate was higher for other hours. It is significant that from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m., the normal daylight hours, there were 459,510 automobile accidents, in which 15,050 persons were killed.; from 6 p. m. to 6 a. m., the normal hours of darkness, when the volume of traffic is one-fifth as great as in the daytime, 422,490 accidents occurred, in which 20,950 persons were killed. The rate of death per accident was 51.4 percent worse during the hours of darkness than during the hours of daylight. This means that the hours of darkness are several hundred percent more dangerous than the hours of daylight, although it is customary to drive just as fast at night as in the daytime.

This insurance company has pictured the dangerous hours in the form of a table:

TIME OF ACCIDENTS IN MINNESOTA

One-third of the fatalities in Minnesota last year occurred between the hours of 5 and 9 p. m. The hours between 6 and 10 a. m., although a period of heavy traffic are comparatively safe, accounting for only 6.2 percent of the fatal accidents. The suggestion is made by the safety committee that drivers are more alert and efficient at that time of the morning.

MINNESOTA'S ACCIDENT RECORD BY COUNTIES

A valuable table has been compiled by the Public Safety Committee of Minnesota to show the residents of each county the record of their county in the matter of accident prevention. This table shows the record from January 1 through December 31, 1934, and is published by the State emergency relief administration. It is entitled "Standing of counties on basis of 1934 automobile fatalities." Group A includes counties having 20,000 or more population:

TREND OF OCCUPATIONAL ACCIDENTS

Whether it can be attributed to depression, employees' compensation, or the use of safety appliances, or a combination of these causes, the rate of occupational accident fatalities for the past several years decreased; but in 1934 there was an increase of 1,000, or 7 percent, over 1933. The National Safety Council estimates the total number of occupational accident fatalities as follows:

1928	19,000
1929	20,000
1930	19,000
1931	17,500
1932	15,000
1933	14,500
1934	15,500

INDIVIDUAL COMPANY REPORTS TO THE NATIONAL SAFETY COUNCIL FOR 1933

Individual records of plants to community safety councils show that this increase cannot be due alone to increased employment. The injury frequency rates rose 14 percent over 1933, and the severity rates went up 37 percent. There is some reason for this increase in accident frequency. It may be that false economy policies have been inaugurated on safety devices.

Individual company reports to the National Safety Council for 1933 show the injury rates by character of injury and by industry (from Greenwood, Who Pays? appendix H):

"SAFE AT HOME"

Although the appalling figure of 4,000,000 personal-injury accidents incurred in and around the home each year creates an economic loss of about $550,000,000 per year, the trend of accidents in the home has not been a subject for alarm. Modern improvements are in most cases sources of accident prevention, and the home has been considered a safer place than it used to be. However, the National Safety Council reports for 1934 the highest rate in history, 33,000 deaths, and a total of 4,800,000 injuries and deaths, involving a cost of $600,000,000. A year of excessive heat was responsible for a large share of the increase.

CAUSES OF ACCIDENTS IN THE HOME

It is interesting to note that nearly half of the deaths due to accidents in and around the home result not from modern appliances which would appear to be dangerous but from falls, most of which occur on steps, with slippery rugs, walks, bathtubs, ladders, chairs, tables, and windows bearing their responsibility for accidents in the order mentioned. Three-fourths of such falls are suffered by persons over the age of 65; less than 10 percent by children under 4 years, and about 17 percent by children between 5 and 15 years of age (from Who Pays? p. 58).

CAUSES OF AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS

There is some disagreement about the major causes of automobile accidents, but it is generally agreed that the principal cause of accidents is not the automobile itself, the condition of the roads, or other external factors. The largest share of blame rests squarely on the driver.

One estimate is that about 99.4 percent of the fault lies with the drivers and six-tenths of 1 percent of the accident rate is due to other causes. A more lenient estimate blames the driver for 85 percent of the accidents.

CONDITION OF VEHICLES IN ACCIDENTS

The great majority of motor vehicles involved in accidents are in apparently good condition, as shown by the following insurance company table:

THE DRIVER'S COMMON FAULTS

Another table shows what the driver did to cause the 561,000 accidents in which he was at fault. In addition to the information given in the table, it is estimated that 3.16 percent of the drivers involved in accidents were under the influence of liquor, as against 2.43 percent in 1933. At the same time 4.47 percent of the pedestrians involved were under the "influence" as against 2.99 percent in 1933.

The 1934 analysis of Minnesota motor-vehicle fatalities, by the Minnesota Public Safety Educational Committee, furnishes a good guide to the common faults of which drivers are guilty. The analysis shows that of the 722 drivers involved in fatal accidents 51 percent were traveling straight ahead on the highway. Most of the accidents resulted from collisions with pedestrians. Seventeen and two-tenths percent of the drivers were traveling too fast.

In this connection it should be noted that some faults are much more dangerous than this table would indicate. For instance, 75 percent of the drivers passing on a hill might be involved in accidents, but the percentage of drivers passing on a hill is small and therefore the accident rate from this cause appears small in comparison.

CONDITION OF DRIVER

Apparently 85 percent of the Minnesota drivers involved in fatal accidents were in good physical condition. I will give the statistics showing the condition of drivers involved in accidents. This is the 1934 analysis of Minnesota motor-vehicle fatalities, by the Minnesota Public Safety Educational Committee.

PEDESTRIAN FAULTS

Although the driver is guilty of most accidents, the pedestrian is not without faults of his own. Pedestrians crossing between intersections are responsible for over a fourth of the automobile-pedestrian fatalities. The Minnesota public safety educational program has determined that this condition arises from the fact that motor vehicles travel at a faster rate between intersections, and drivers are not expecting hazards at such places. Also, the relative darkness between intersections at night is considered important. About half of the pedestrians killed on rural highways had been drinking. The other fatalities were caused by pedestrians who walked with traffic or where they could not be seen at night.

It is estimated that in 1934 nearly half of all persons killed in automobile accidents were pedestrians. In some cases they were themselves partially or wholly at fault. Common faults of pedestrians are shown in the following insurance company table:

AGE AS A CAUSE FOR ACCIDENTS

This company's analysis shows that the ratio of drivers under 18 in fatal accidents to the total of that group in all accidents was 65 percent worse than the average for all drivers, or 3 percent greater than in 1933. Between the ages of 18 and 24 the ratio was 27 percent worse, or 5 percent greater than in 1933. Between the ages of 25 and 64 years the ratio was 11 percent better than the average, an improvement of 2 points over 1933. In the ages over 65, the 1934 experience was 104 percent worse than the average, an improvement of 18 points. It is estimated that drivers under 18 years of age cause 1.4 percent of all automobile accidents, 22.6 percent of the accidents are caused by drivers from 18 to 24 years of age, 75.1 percent by drivers from 25 to 64, and 0.9 percent by drivers 65 and over.

The Minnesota experience with reference to age as a cause for automobile accidents is shown by a table published by the Minnesota Public Safety Committee:

OTHER FACTORS INVOLVED IN TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS

Road location: More people are killed in accidents on highways than at any other road location, although the largest number of accidents occur at street intersections, as shown by the insurance company table:

In addition to faults of both driver and pedestrian there are other causes for automobile accidents, including lack of proper laws and poor enforcement. Nineteen States have no drivers' license requirements. Seven States have no minimum-age requirements. Twenty-six States do not require a driver to come to a full stop at a railroad crossing. Thirteen States permit passing on hills and curves. Thirty-four States do not require a driver to dim his headlights on the approach of another vehicle. One expert estimates the cost of traffic accidents due to poor illumination at $275,000,000 (from Ernest Greenwood, Who Pays?).

PANIC AND DEPRESSION A CAUSE FOR ACCIDENTS

I am informed that in a certain city the appropriation for lighting of streets was reduced as of April 1, 1932. Thirteen fatal night accidents had occurred during the previous 15 months. During the following 15 months there were 18. Throughout the entire time when lighting was curtailed, a period of 21 months, fatal night accidents increased 80.5 percent.

FALSE ECONOMY AT THE EXPENSE OF HUMAN LIFE

In the city of Detroit street-lighting appropriations were reduced 33 1/3 percent beginning on January 1, 1932, in the interest of "economy." The result was that 23 more night fatalities than before occurred during the first 5 months of the year. At the same time the day fatalities decreased 33 1/3 percent. At the end of 10 months night fatalities had increased 63 percent over 1931, and the loss of 35 lives was definitely attributed by the authorities to the reduced appropriation for lights. The appropriation was then restored, followed by a decrease in the first 5 months of 1933—when the lights had been restored—of 16 percent. Eighteen lives were saved by abandoning the false-economy policy. At the same time day traffic fatalities actually increased in Detroit (from Greenwood, Who Pays?).

LACK OF LAW ENFORCEMENT A CAUSE

Poor enforcement of laws are certainly a cause of accidents. However, the enforcement of laws is linked with the violation of laws, and in the final analysis reverts back to the faults of the driver, the major cause of motor-vehicle accidents.

CAUSES OF OCCUPATIONAL INJURIES

In occupational injuries as well as motor-vehicle accidents the false economy policy is in a large measure directly responsible for death. Linked with the economy policy is the desire for profits on the part of large industrialists, and the consequent delay and indifference in the matter of providing employees with safety, and carelessness adds to the number of accidents caused by willful neglect.

APPEAL TO THE POCKETBOOK

When employers can by education be shown that their expenses are actually reduced by accident-saving devices and employees' compensation, they are naturally glad to respond. This, in a large measure, accounts for the reduction in occupational injuries year by year.

If an accident occurs in a large plant, which results in a personal injury, such accident can usually be traced to inefficiency or the method of production. In either case, if a system of compensation is in effect and the employee must be paid for his injury, there is a tendency on the part of the employer to investigate the causes of the accident. The investigation will doubtless reveal many similar cases of inefficiency which did not result in accident but did result in loss of time and profits. Therefore, the conditions which brought about one accident and many other cases of inefficiency may be corrected.

MACHINERY AND SPEED

As speed on the highway is a cause for motor vehicle accidents, so the desire for speed in industrial production is a cause for occupational accidents. The stretch-out system, whereby one operator is compelled to operate more machines, again in the interest of economy, is a source of accident as well as danger to the health and well-being of workers. Generally speaking, the industrial accident rate has decreased because it has been realized that safety and efficiency go hand in hand.

REMEDIES FOR ACCIDENTS

I have presented to you the staggering data showing injury and death by accidents, and in some cases called attention to alarming trends. I am not advocating any one remedy, but I am advocating the study of these facts and figures, and the realization that remedies must be found.

MINNESOTA SETS RECORD IN REDUCING ACCIDENTS

My own State of Minnesota is receiving wide recognition for its rapid development of an organized attack on traffic accidents. I have already mentioned the decrease in accidents in Minnesota for the last 7 months of 1934. The State reports an increase of 57.7 percent in motor-vehicle deaths during the first 5 months of 1934 over 1933. Then on June 1, 1934, our drivers' license law became effective, and the safety committee started its work, inaugurating a program of safety activities. For the remaining 7 months of the year the State reports a decrease of 12 percent from 1933 accidents. From an increase of 57.7 percent to a decrease of 12 percent is a very large drop. It is, in fact, the best record made by any State in accident reduction, according to information given me by the F. E. R. A.

PROOFS THAT ACCIDENTS CAN BE REDUCED

Against the dark background of increase in total motor-vehicle fatalities, there are numerous bright spots which provide proof that traffic accidents can be reduced. Some of the proofs furnished me by the office of the F. E. R. A. Traffic Survey Director are:

First. Schoolchild pedestrians: Compared to 1927, children aged 5 to 14 have reduced their toll over one-fourth. Contrasted to this is an increase for persons aged 15 to 64 of about 26 percent.

Second. Commercial drivers: While the death toll for drivers of passenger automobiles has increased since 1927 by about 50 percent, deaths involving taxicabs have been reduced over 40 percent, and for busses the reduction has been about one-quarter.

Third. Trains and trolleys: Deaths from collisions involving trains and trolleys have decreased about one-fifth since 1927.

Fourth. Cities: A number of cities have shown a downward trend of fatal accidents for several years. Among these are Pittsburgh, Providence, Evanston, Milwaukee, and New York. About one-third of the 80 cities over 100,000 in population submitting accident data to the United States Census Bureau, reduced their fatalities in 1934 as compared to 1933.

Fifth. States: Rhode Island has shown a downward trend since 1927, the year 1934 being one-sixth below that of 1927.

Sixth. Rural-urban contrast: The much better trend of urban fatalities as compared to rural, has already been mentioned.

Seventh. License-law States: According to an analysis by the National Safety Council, States having standard license laws with examinations have shown since 1926 an approximately 25-percent reduction in death rate per million gallons of gasoline consumed, while the death rate in other States increased 14 percent.

Eighth. Traffic-control devices: In numerous places, analysis of "before and after" records has shown that well-designed and properly used traffic-control devices, with proper supervision, have reduced accidents. In Philadelphia stop signs reduced accidents over 50 percent, and slow signs by about one-third. A flexible progressive signal system on North Broad Street reduced fatal accidents from 23 to 12 in the year after installation.

Ninth. Highway improvements: In practically every State there are numerous examples of highway improvements which have reduced accidents. Mention has been made of the better accident records on divided highways as compared to undivided roadways.

Yes, there is ample proof today that we do not have to accept this gruesome toll—but there must be a will to reduce it, if desired results are to be achieved.

UNIFORM FEDERAL HIGHWAY LAWS

The work of the Minnesota Public Safety Committee is encouraging. Doubtless many similar commissions are being established in other States. Passing of uniform Federal highway laws, more efficient enforcement, further improvement of highways and signals, and many other remedies are being urged. But the most important remedy is yet to be found: A successful method of teaching the irresponsible to respect the rights and the lives of other people.

I wish to insert here certain recommendations submitted by the Minnesota Public Safety Committee for the reduction of traffic accidents:

We recommend adoption of a system that will afford the proper reporting of traffic accidents.

Our records show that 369, or 51.1 percent, of the drivers involved in fatal traffic accidents were traveling straight ahead on the highway. The fact that more than half of the number of drivers involved in fatal injuries come under this classification indicates the need for a program of education as to the hazard involved on the straight road, the program to be much along the lines of the program carried out regarding passing on curves and hills.

The record further shows that 47, or 6.5 percent, of the drivers either drove or were crowded off the roadway, indicating the need of an educational campaign to eliminate the common practice of cutting in.

The record shows that there were 43, or 6 percent, hit-and-run-driver accidents, indicating the need of arousing public sentiment to insure prosecution of those guilty of this lack of consideration for their fellow men.

ILLUMINATION

A large percentage of the fatal accidents, especially to pedestrians, occurred during the dark hours, which situation can be materially corrected by a careful study of street lighting in cities and villages. With the thought in mind of determining whether the lighting afforded is a factor in the causes of these accidents, city and county officials should check the locations at which automobile accidents have occurred.

Pedestrian deaths can be curtailed by the exertion of more care on the part of the automobile driver, and a continuous campaign of education through the press, the radio, schools, civic organizations, homes, and every other possible contact.

GRADE CROSSINGS

The motor vehicle-railroad classification shows that 37 persons were killed in 24 accidents at railroad grade crossings. Thirteen of these accidents, which caused 25, or 67.6 percent, of the fatalities, occurred at railroad grade crossings which were not protected with automatic signals, watchmen, or stop signs, but did have proper State regulation signs in place. If the drivers of the automobiles had attempted to cross these railroad crossings cautiously, these lives would have been saved. The Federal Government proposal for separation of railroad and highway crossings should be extended as far as possible. New highway railroad grade crossings should not be opened without giving full consideration to the safety of and need for such additional crossings.

GRADE SEPARATION

Consideration should be given by the State and local government units to the use of Federal work relief funds for the separation of grades at important highway intersections, as well as the use of such funds for the elimination of dangerous curves, the widening of shoulders, and the provision of other protective devices. Both State and Federal Governments are moving in that direction.

An effort should be made to provide, as soon as possible, for the completion of the traffic-control plans of the cities of St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Duluth to further curtail the number of deaths occurring in these cities.

Careful study of the causes of the 628 traffic accident fatalities for 1934 suggests the necessity for action as follows:

ENGINEERING RECOMMENDATIONS

Make such reasonable improvements in the physical characteristics of streets and highways as to provide a maximum of safety.

Provide for proper mechanical inspection and maintenance of motor vehicles.

EDUCATION

Continue the program of public-safety education as outlined in our plan, carrying it through every possible medium into the homes, schools, factories, and farms.

ENFORCEMENT

The largest reduction in motor-vehicle fatalities will be obtained when the law-enforcing agencies of the State, the cities, and the counties realize their obligation to the public to see that the laws pertaining to the safe operation of a motor vehicle are enforced without fear or favor. It is suggested that when the highway patrolman, the sheriff, or the police officer has fulfilled his duty by apprehending the violator of the safety laws of the State or city, he be upheld in the municipal and district courts, not with the idea of penalizing the individual driver, but to make possible the saving of human life and limb by curtailing thoughtless and oftentimes reckless driving on our streets and highways.

I urge that full consideration be given to the adoption of a standard drivers' license law for the State of Minnesota as recommended by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety of the United States Department of Commerce and the National Safety Council, renewable either annually or biannually, and that the provisions of such a law be enforced in the interests of safety.

Appreciation is expressed for the fine work of the Minnesota highway patrol, composed of men trained in first aid and in general automobile mechanics, who afford real help and service to the motoring public.

The support of all of our citizens interested in public-accident prevention is needed to make more effective the highway patrol and other traffic law enforcement agencies as mediums of accident prevention.

SCHOOLS TEACH SAFETY—TEACHERS AID CHILDREN

The little rime taught by school teachers to children might well be remembered by adults:

Stop, look, and listen before you cross the street;
Use your eyes, use your head, and then use your feet.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF SUCCESSFUL REMEDIAL MEASURES

There is no one panacea for reducing accidents. I have given this matter careful study and have come to the conclusion that what is needed is not a National Safety Week or some other temporary splurge but continuing activities constructed along intelligent lines, and particularly programs which have already proven their value in other places.

F. E. R. A. ACTS

One of the first needs in tackling traffic problems in each community or State is getting the facts. I was much pleased to learn about the traffic survey work which the F. E. R. A. has been sponsoring. Perhaps 100 cities have been making or are now making such fact-finding studies.

A very extensive manual has been prepared for the guidance of local survey directors in making and analyzing these studies. This is a very intelligent use of our relief funds and it should be strongly urged upon communities throughout the country which have not already taken advantage of this plan for reducing accidents.

Several of the leading traffic specialists of the country are serving through the F. E. R. A. as advisers to communities in the conduct of these surveys and in getting results from the survey.

UNIFORMITY OF TRAFFIC LAWS

One of the major needs is for uniform traffic laws so that when we travel in our automobiles from State to State we shall not find ourselves criminals in one State for things which we have learned in our own State and which are not "crimes" at home.

For some years traffic specialists from all over the country have gathered in Washington and have developed a uniform vehicle code which each State should adopt. In addition, there is a model traffic ordinance for cities, which sets up appropriate local regulations, and some recommendations on types of organizations and methods which are necessary successfully to cope with the traffic problem. Furthermore, this same group has developed standards for traffic signs, stop-and-go signals, road markings, and so forth. If we could get these uniform laws and standards adopted throughout the country, and if they were intelligently and effectively administered, it would go a long way in the reduction of accidents.

Some of our States, even some very prominent ones, do not even require a person to be licensed in order to drive an automobile on our highways. All the person has to do is to buy an old wreck of a car, step on the gas, and let the public beware. Yet several studies have shown that States having drivers' license laws, properly administered, have done much better in reducing accidents than have the States without drivers' license laws.

Can you imagine a railroad picking up the first man who happened to desire to be an engineer, putting him into the cab, and telling him to go ahead? Yet the train cannot leave its tracks. It does not have to be steered, while the automobile—many times more of a killer than the train—requires most experienced steering under numerous conditions.

OUTLINE OF PLAN FOR FUTURE

A well-rounded attack on the accident situation must be made in five different fields:

1. Sensible legislation.
2. Effective organization of State and municipal forces to cope with the various phases of the problem and unswervingly progressive administration of their efforts.
3. Traffic engineering, including the proper design of streets and highways, their marking, proper use of signals, development of plans for regulation, continuing conduct of fact-finding studies, and so forth.
4. Strict and businesslike enforcement, giving particular attention, however, to two matters which are all too little being realized, namely:

(a) That the largest part of the enforcement job in traffic is really a job of education.

(b) Concentrating the energy of police and court in traffic-law enforcement on driving violations and on the worst of these, rather than upon minor first offenses such as over-time parking, which have very little to do with our serious accident situation and relatively little to do even with the congestion on our streets.

5. Education—generally considered the keystone of the arch—is the most needed of all activities to reduce accidents. Education has proved its value in many ways, some of which I have already mentioned. The school safety patrols, sponsored largely by the American Automobile Association, are a symbol of the accomplishment among grade-school children. The same national motoring association is now sponsoring a course for use in high schools to teach and train youngsters so that we may have a generation of better drivers of automobiles. The major appeal being made is to good sportsmanship.

Adult education is at once the most needed and most difficult type. However, much can be done even with adults if there is the will to do. I believe the pamphlet Guides to Traffic Safety, developed by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety, contains many worth-while recommendations.

HOPKINS HELPS

Harry L. Hopkins is driving ahead with his usual energy to obtain better traffic results all along the line, and I am glad to say that I find all Government agencies, State and National, sympathetic and willing to aid in the solution of injury and death from accident problems.

THE INJURED ARE MADE VICTIMS OF AMBULANCE-CHASING CORPORATIONS

In the wake of accidents lie huge profits for large insurance corporations—profits wrung from accident victims. Representatives of these heartless corporations rush to the scene of the accident like vultures to the dead, and with promises of, "We're here to help you—of course you have no case—don't bother with lawyers—we'll see that you get something", so induce the dazed accident victim to release the party responsible for the accident from all obligation. This is "ambulance chasing" in its most vicious, systematic, developed form.

SEE YOUR LAWYER FIRST

I want to say that I have taken a special interest in workmen's compensation and accident legislation while a State representative from 1910 to 1914. I successfully piloted through the Minnesota Legislature in the 1911 session a bill to increase the value of human life from $5,000 to $7,500 in case of death by wrongful act. Millions have been paid to widows and orphans under that law. We tried to place the value at $10,000; $7,500 was the best we could do at that time. I was engaged in this legislative work at the same time that I was practicing law, handling many injury and death cases in the courts, and I am familiar with these laws and remedies proposed. The same experience in a larger field comes to me as a Member of Congress and a practicing attorney in the city of Minneapolis, and I say that something must be done to remove the corporation and claim agent ambulance-chasing curse.

AMBULANCE CHASING CORPORATION CLAIM AGENTS

The worst offenders, the most contemptible ambulance chasers of all, are the large corporations who at the same time slander the legal profession by charging attorneys as a class with the same offense. A few attorneys may have violated the ethics of the bar in this respect. These wrongs are infinitesimal compared with the unscrupulous methods of ambulance-chasing corporations.

When one of these ambulance-chasing representatives of an insurance company approaches an accident victim with a promise of fifty or a hundred dollars compensation, that should be the signal for the injured victim to see his lawyer and collect the five hundred or a thousand dollars or more which is rightfully due him. Under no circumstances should he sign the insurance company's release without consulting his lawyer first.

LAWYERS WILL DONATE THEIR SERVICES

The great body of lawyers are honorable men. There are any number of my fellow members of the Minneapolis, Twin City, and Minnesota Bar who will consult with accident victims and give them the benefit of their expert advice without charging a cent for advice. That is why I say to an accident victim, "Always see your lawyer first."

APPEAL FOR NATIONAL ACTION

The Seventy-fourth Congress must pass much-needed national legislation along these lines. We must not adjourn without moving in the direction of national uniform safety laws. The death roll must be cut down. Death now rides at the wheel. The number of injuries is colossal; the number of deaths and injuries beyond comprehension. Good government and good American common sense will in great measure solve all of these traffic and industrial problems, and the greatest industrial nation in the world will some day place on its statute books the best code of safety laws, rules, and regulations—a guide for our country in this campaign for safety-first legislation.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crowe].

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, I am at this time taking some time on the floor because of some statements made yesterday afternoon concerning the use of building stone material for Federal buildings and for other purposes of the Government. My home is in Bedford, Lawrence County, Ind. A large amount of limestone is quarried in that county. I wish to say in that connection that the Indiana limestone belt, which I partly represent, has its troubles. Distress is on every hand. Loss of homes because of unemployment, even hunger in spite of generous relief abounds. They are disposing of only a small amount of stone today and not any greater percentage of former output than other building stone and other building materials are selling.

In that connection, in 1928, 25,000 carloads of Indiana limestone were used. In 1934 less than 4,000 carloads were used. Nineteen thirty-five bids to use even a still less amount. In 1928 there were 16,000 employable people in those two counties where this stone belt lies. At that time eleven and one-half thousand of those people were used in the stone industry and other industries which had to do with the stone business. Today there are less than 700 men employed in the entire industry, which is only approximately 6 percent of normal, and means 94 of each hundred formerly employed now unemployed or on relief. Because of that fact we have today 5,287 families on the relief rolls. They constitute 31.17 percent of the entire population of those two counties. So we are as hard hit as any building-stone industry district in the United States.

Now, it has been pointed out that certain recent Government buildings in the city of Washington are not properly constructed of worthy material. With this I want to take issue. I defy anyone, any place, to successfully contradict the statement that you cannot find finer or better buildings, or buildings that are more nearly worth the money expended for them, than you will find in the triangle group down Pennsylvania and Constitution Avenues. No undue proportion of the money spent for those buildings went to the Indiana limestone district or to the State of Indiana.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWE. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. The statement was made on the floor yesterday to the effect that this stone was produced largely by scab labor and not organized labor. What can the gentleman tell us about that?

Mr. CROWE. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I will be glad to pursue that in just a moment, as I have some figures on the question.

First, however, I want to take three buildings in this triangle group, on which I have some figures, covering the Nation-wide distribution of the total expenditures—namely, the Department of Labor Building, Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Post Office Department Buildings. Those three buildings cost $21,000,000. The expenditure for those buildings went out as follows:

The estimated cost of $21,000,000 as the total for the architectural and engineering services and construction of the group of buildings erected in Washington, D. C., to house the Department of Labor, Interstate Commerce Commission, and Post Office Department, it has been shown upon analysis of the expenditures thereunder, was distributed over a wide range of territory in a number of States from which the various materials and items of equipment used were furnished.

The distribution of this total for the District of Columbia and the States is shown by the following table. A similar distribution of the expenditures will also be found to occur from buildings constructed by the Federal Government in other localities:

Alabama	$30,000
Arkansas	160,000
California	500,000
Connecticut	600,000
Delaware	40,000

Out of this $21,000,000 Indiana received $2,500,000 for stone; the State of Michigan received $1,100,000; the State of New York received $1,250,000; the State of Pennsylvania received $2,500,000; Virginia received $1,000,000. Transportation received $2,000,000, and the District of Columbia received $3,000,000, which went principally to skilled labor drawn from many States. The $21,000,000 went to many widely scattered industries in 27 States of the Union and benefited these localities in 27 States and did not benefit just one State, or even a few adjoining States. The limestone in those buildings stands out magnificently, any impartial observer will agree.

Now, I want to tell you who was consulted about these buildings before they were constructed. Some outstanding firms of architects were selected and sent out over the United States to survey buildings throughout the country. The original board consisted of Mr. Arthur L. Brown, of San Francisco; Mr. Bennett, of Chicago; Mr. Medarg, of Philadelphia; Mr. Ayres and Mr. Delano, of New York; and Mr. Louis Simon, of the Treasury Department architectural staff. To that list later was added the name of John Russell Pope, of New York, who is considered an outstanding architect in the United States, as well as in England, France, and Italy. He has been decorated for works that he has done in those nations. Those men went out and surveyed buildings in the United States. They ordered surveys made of 50 or more outstanding buildings in the United States which had been constructed for 50 or more years, to determine what material was worthy for use for our department buildings in Washington. Those men decided on a program which was laid out in its entirety, but that program was made to conform in design and general character to the Treasury Building, which was built in 1840 by "Old Hickory" Jackson. Other buildings down in this triangle group were made to compare and stand up alongside of a building like that. This group today stands out in the front rank of Government buildings to be found anywhere.

I say to you that I point to them with pride. The Archives, designed by John Russell Pope, made of select buff Indiana limestone, is a masterpiece. The entire triangle group are buildings which would be a welcome adjunct to any government any place in the world and will stand throughout the ages and be useful as well as ornamental.

The question of labor has been raised. I submit for the RECORD a scale of wages that is paid in our district today to all kinds of labor, which includes common labor. In a district that is as hard hit as that district is now, people would have worked for almost any price. They would have begged for a job at 10 cents an hour, but the lowest the industry has paid at any time, even to common labor when it could be had for 10 cents an hour, was 35 cents an hour. The wages range upward from that to $1.12½ an hour for carvers and $1 an hour for stonecutters. It now varies from 38 cents for common labor up to $1.12½ an hour. The men who are employed are the best paid of any men in any comparable city in the country today. To say that that industry uses scab labor is to make a statement that is absolutely and positively a misstatement of fact, if it was meant to be applied to the Indiana limestone district. I say that without fear of contradiction. The men in that district belong to unions—not unions of the company. They belong to and are associated with the American Federation of Labor. For the most part, they belong to that great national organization. I have been with the men. I have helped them contact the Labor Department here in Washington and also the national labor associations in Washington. The Central Labor Unions of Lawrence and Monroe Counties have enrolled thousands of men who are and who have been employed when the quarries and mills were all running.

The statement was made yesterday that the Indiana Limestone Co. had contributed $100,000 to the Republican campaign fund. This is an erroneous statement, it is not a true statement of fact, and I am not afraid to contradict it. As might happen in any endeavor of life, some individual company may have contributed a small sum, a nominal sum. I do not know that; I could not say that anybody contributed; but if they did it may have been some one company contributing a nominal sum. I call attention to the fact that the Indiana Limestone Co., which is accused of contributing this large sum of money, was in the hands of its bondholders' reorganization committee and in the hands of its bankers and did not have a sum of money like that to be handed out to anyone or to any organization. So I repeat, I contradict that statement.

But if some one company did contribute something, or if some one company did slip on their labor and did not pay the scale, it would be analogous only to the situation that might be found in any city with a hundred stores; one of the stores might slip somewhat and not pay as high wages as the rest, but would you condemn the city because one of its hundred stores made a mistake? Neither can you condemn an industry composed of 31 large separately owned and separately managed organizations, the people making up the management of those organizations being equal to the best, the most honorable to be found anywhere in the Nation.

Permit me to say further that the statement made that Indiana limestone is not fit for Government building construction is on every point and is by every fact unwarranted. I do not think any man could honestly in his sane moments make such a statement. The Empire State Building, in New York City, Radio City, the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, the Cities Service Building, the Metropolitan Art Museum, the Irving Trust Co., the Life Insurance Building in New York City, as well as dozens and dozens of other fine buildings in New York City, are faced with Indiana limestone.

In Boston 39 large buildings built within the last 15 years are faced with Indiana limestone. The buildings, mind you, were built and paid for by people who were spending their own and not the Government's money. If Indiana limestone is satisfactory for use by private people, is it not good enough to be used in Government use? There is no other stone comparable for the purpose. Thus it is exclusively used by private enterprise as well as by the Government.

Indiana limestone is shipped to more than a thousand stoneyards in the United States and Canada, where the big blocks are cut up and fabricated in those cities by thousands of skilled workmen.

That Indiana limestone has enjoyed a reasonable share of the work created by Federal building construction where stone has been used is true, but this is not because any favoritism was shown or any preference paid, but simply because it affords more in the way of structural merit, durability, and a fine appearance than any other exterior building material of equal cost.

The fact that Indiana limestone has been used so extensively in the fields of commercial building where costs are always carefully considered is a sufficient argument on that point.

Approximately 90 percent of all the large buildings in the United States and Canada that are faced or trimmed with stone are faced with or trimmed with Indiana limestone. Why? Because it offers more in the way of value for every dollar expended than any other exterior material of equal or approaching merit.

It is my opinion that the Government recently has been pursuing the wrong course and has not been using the best materials. It is my conviction that the Government should specify the use of the best of stone in its Government buildings and always use materials which will endure and look good for many years to come. Let them use granite, marble, or limestone, or sandstone so long as in using those materials they build to obtain the best results—buildings which will stand for hundreds of years—yes; for thousands of years if need be. If they do that, then we of Indiana will take our chance on Indiana limestone getting its fair share; and that is all we want, all we ask for, and all we expect. We ask only that our limestone receive fair consideration and know it will then receive its fair share. Our stone is used not only in various parts of the United States, but also in Canada, Alaska, Mexico, as well as Central and South America. Eleven State capitol buildings, incidentally, have been built of Indiana limestone.

The great Indiana oolitic deposit of limestone is in reality a national asset. The investment there is not only spread through investors to every State in the Union, but there is no comparable deposit of stone to be found on the entire continent. The only other deposit of like character is the famous Portland limestone quarries in England, which has been used by that nation not only in their greatest public edifices, but in many of their greatest cathedrals over a period of 1,500 years.

The fact that Indiana limestone is used for a Boston project does not by any means mean that Indiana gets all the benefit. There are substantial limestone-fabricating plants located in and around Boston, who have imported millions of dollars' worth of Indiana limestone rough blocks over the past quarter of a century to be hewn and shaped for building construction. I wonder if my fellow colleague, Mr. O'CONNOR, from Brooklyn, realizes that there is over $12,000,000 invested in greater New York in stone-working plants who fabricate Indiana limestone almost exclusively. Mr. O'CONNOR also makes reference to the great unemployment in the marble trades in New York totaling, as he says, some 2,500 members. Does he realize that there are over 5,000 limestone cutters on the New York union roster, the majority of whom are also out of work? I wonder if he also realizes that whereas 98 percent of all the limestone used in New York is fabricated in the area, compared to a very small percentage of the granite—in fact, just a few percent being fabricated there. If Mr. O'CONNOR should elect to visit almost any reasonable city in our entire 48 States and inspect one of the local cut-stone industries he would find their stock of raw material 90 percent-plus composed of Indiana limestone.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWE. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Lately a committee was appointed to ascertain facts about the use of stone in our public buildings. Senator BAILEY was chairman of this committee. Does the gentleman know what the committee has ascertained so far as the use of stone building material, such as Indiana limestone and the granite of New England? We have all been very much concerned about it.

Mr. CROWE. I am sorry I was not called into that conference. That conference, I think, had to do mainly with granite and marble.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I think limestone was included also.

Mr. CROWE. I was not called to the conference and did not know about it. All I can say is that I would like to join any group which has for its purpose a study of the use of the most worthy and more permanent building materials in our Government buildings.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am delighted to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to myself.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday we listened to a good deal of what I am compelled to call fol-de-rol in regard to alleged favoritism extended to Indiana limestone by Government officials in carrying out the Government's construction program, and I am glad that the able Congressman who represents the heart of the Indiana limestone district, EUGENE B. CROWE, has taken the floor to refute some of the statements that were placed in the RECORD yesterday. Bedford, the town where Mr. CROWE lives, is the limestone capital of America. He lives with the industry, is incessant in his efforts to promote it in every legitimate way, and he is in a position to throw light through the fog of errors that enveloped the discussion of yesterday.

The Lord Almighty made two great building materials—granite and limestone. One of these is costly and the other is relatively inexpensive. From the standpoint of utility in the construction of buildings to be used as Government workshops to house Federal activities they are on a parity, one material being as good as the other. Most of the limestone deposits of standard quality are located in the State of Indiana. The ways of Providence are inscrutable and we do not know why that is so, but it is so.

I have heard for years the same old cry that Government officials are guilty of favoring Indiana limestone at the expense of granite. There is nothing to it. If Indiana limestone has a monopoly of utilitarian Government construction it is a monopoly that is not given by any Government officials but it is a monopoly that was given by God when He placed these valuable limestone deposits in that part of the earth that is now embraced in the State of Indiana. It is a monopoly due to the fact that Indiana furnishes a building material, eminently satisfactory and suitable to all governmental needs, at a cost much below the cost of granite.

I wonder whether the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] have taken the trouble to investigate the difference in the cost of constructing public buildings by use of granite and the cost of the same buildings by use of Indiana limestone. The difference is about 15 to 20 percent. On a Government building program of $100,000,000 the difference would be between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000.

Do the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from New York think that it would be in the public interest to saddle on the people of this country, who are already groaning under the crushing burdens of Government, the additional burden of this enormous differential when there is no reason on earth for doing so except to gratify the whims or the desires of those who, for one reason or another, feel themselves more closely attached to granite than to Indiana limestone?

There is no man in this House for whose powers of mind I have more respect than the gentleman from New York. Usually his discussions are logical, forceful, admirable, but I think I never knew him to indulge in more specious argument than he did yesterday on this question. He said in effect that because there are 2,500 marble cutters out of work in New York the Treasury Department has done a very wrongful thing in constructing public buildings out of Indiana limestone, as if that were a sufficient reason why the Government should turn its back on this suitable Indiana material which is available at a much less cost than either marble or granite. The answer to that, of course, is apparent. The general cessation of private construction has almost paralyzed the Indiana limestone industry and thousands on thousands of its workers are out of employment and on relief. From the standpoint of humaneness and from the standpoint of solving the relief problem it is just as important that our Indiana workmen shall have employment to support themselves and their families as it is that the workmen in the gentleman's district shall have employment, and I wish from the bottom of my heart that every workman in his district could get a permanent job tomorrow.

The gentleman from Massachusetts placed in the RECORD a list of 216 building projects which he said apparently are to be built without the use of any granite whatsoever. I wish you would look at that list. It includes such great cities and centers of population as Bowie, Tex., which I assume was named after the famous author of one of our leading and most efficient implements of destruction, the Bowie knife. I do not know whether or not Bowie is located in the district of our delightful friend, Mr. BLANTON, but I am sure he can tell us all about it—in his own time. According to the census reports, Bowie has a population of 3,131. Surely the able gentleman from Massachusetts does not seriously contend that the Government should erect a granite palace down at Bowie. Then the gentleman's list includes the overpowering metropolis of Galax, Va., which has a population of 2,544. Galax may be a gay place, but it will be lax in its duty to the public interest if it demands its granite palace. The Galax section of America is ably represented in this body by Congressman THOMAS G. BURCH, and he has not yet arisen to exclaim, in the language of another distinguished Virginian, "Give me granite, or give me death."

The list of towns presented by the distinguished Massachusetts Congressman [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] as being without granite, both in esse and in posse, includes many centers of population like Bowie and Galax—such, for instance, as Lyons, Kans., with 2,939 inhabitants; Baxter Springs, Kans., with 4,541 inhabitants; Thief River Falls, Minn., with 4,268 inhabitants; and Raton, N. Mex., with 6,090 inhabitants. The good people of many of these places, in fact, of most of the places on my friend's list of 216 graniteless towns, are not used to stately granite edifices, and if they should have one thrust upon them, I fear the shock to the community would be great. My own thought is that in the case of most of the towns cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts even Indiana limestone is too expensive a material to be used, and that the buildings in those smaller towns should be constructed of brick.

All of this shows how far afield we are likely to go when we tinker with the orderly processes of government that are constituted to settle and determine these questions. Mr. WIGGLESWORTH and Mr. O'CONNOR are both good fellows, able Representatives, and ornaments to this lawmaking body. I adjure and implore them to banish the terrible Indiana limestone bogey from their troubled dreams. Let the Government officials who usually handle such matters continue to handle them and they will be handled right. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, every thoughtful Member of this House must realize that in the very near future the revenue system of this Government must be materially changed. Repeatedly have I said since I have had the honor of representing the Second District of Oregon on this floor that I was ready to forget party lines and join any group willing to present a revenue bill providing for a balanced Budget. The present system, I fear, actually creates and sustains unemployment.

As I view the situation, I can see nothing more pernicious and detrimental to stability than the prevailing notion that we are in a depression and that the clouds will soon roll by and the sun of prosperity will shine on our land as it did in the happy days following the World War. It does not appear to me, however, that we are due to have a return of that era. It seems to me that we are in a new era, a new world, and that we are drifting we know not where, because we refuse to chart a new course. There are several causes which have brought about this condition. First and foremost is the machinery that has come in every shape, manner, and form, until today it is part of our very existence. Nobody, so far as I know, has ever carefully analyzed the effect of the internal-combustion engine on humankind.

A few days ago I stood on Pennsylvania Avenue and I watched the swiftly moving motor traffic. My mind went back through the very brief years since the horse-drawn vehicles were in evidence on that famous Avenue, and as I looked I thought that perhaps the future historian will say that the greatest single factor creating our economic chaos has been the internal-combustion engine—the tractor, the truck, and the motor car.

No one can fail to realize that the Government cannot continue to spend more money than it takes in. That some persons and corporations and combinations are making money in these hours of distress for millions there can be no doubt. Money is piling up for a privileged few, even at a time when one-sixth of our entire population is eating out of the hand of charity and perhaps another sixth near to the bread line. It has been said that before the snow flies next winter one out of every six of the population of the United States will be drawing some kind of a check from the Government. It is true that at the end of this fiscal year, when the Government books are balanced, that balance will show several thousand millions of deficit.

In 1935 the expenses of Federal, State, and local governments, not including emergency outlays, will amount to above thirteen billions, or fully one-fourth of the national income. The only effective method for redistributing the national income equitably so as to permit maximum consumption and hence maximum employment of the employable is through taxation. Much has been said the last few months in this House about the processing tax. I am free to admit that this is in effect a sales tax, to which I have always been opposed. At the very earliest date the processing taxes upon necessities should be shifted from the backs of those least able to pay to those more able to pay. An additional revenue of $4,000,000,000 could be and should be collected this year by taxing personal incomes, corporation incomes, and liquid surpluses, corporation profits, estates, and gifts. Most of the consumption taxes are paid by people with incomes under $1,200. Total tobacco taxes for 1935 will probably be $466,000,000; liquor taxes, $430,000,000; gasoline, $170,000,000; and minor nuisance taxes, $250,000,000. I would clearly draw a distinction between sales taxes on luxuries and sales taxes on necessities, and would continue luxury taxes. Necessities should never be subject to the sales tax.

From the internal-revenue reports we find that 320,503 persons reported net incomes of over $5,000 in 1933. They had a total income of $4,992,545,000, of which $1,789,828,000 was from wages and salaries and $3,202,725,000 from ownership or control of property. There is no record of their additional income received from wholly tax-exempt Government bonds. One percent of the families in America received about one-tenth of the national income and one-fifth of the total property income, but they paid in Federal income and surtaxes only $333,276,761.

After paying all direct taxes in 1933, 46 persons in the United States with incomes of over $1,000,000 each had left an average of $1,211,000. Eighty-four persons with incomes of a half million to a million had left, after they paid all taxes, an average of $442,151. The internal-revenue records show that 139 persons with incomes of $300,000 to $500,000 had left an average of $260,487.

In Great Britain a married man with three dependent children having a salary of $5,000 pays an income tax of $560. In the United States that man would pay $52, or less than one-tenth of what the British taxpayer pays. The British budget is balanced.

There is no accurate record of the full amount of tax-exempt bonds. I heard one of our colleagues state in the Well that it was probably fifty billions. Perhaps forty-two billions is a safer estimate. Part of these Government bonds are partially taxed, but it is estimated that the tax-exempt income from those holding Government bonds is somewhere between $650,000,000 and $700,000,000 annually. Much of this tax-exempt income is received by people who pay taxes in the higher income brackets. Just remember there are no tax-exempt bonds in England. Neither should there be in the United States.

The New York Journal of Commerce reports:

First. Dividend and interest payment to investors in 1932, the worst year of the depression for the common man, were almost $2,500,000 more than in 1929. In 1929 the investor received $6,887,650,000. In 1932 he received $6,900,000,000. Was it a depression for the investor?

Second. Total dividend and interest payments for the 5 years of the depression were $10,000,000,000 greater than for the 5 years before the depression. From 1930 through 1934 the investor received thirty-six billions in dividends and interest. From 1925 through 1929 he received only twenty-six billions. This compares with seventeen billions for the 5-year period from 1920 to 1924, inclusive, and with thirteen billions from 1915 to 1919, inclusive. Whose depression was it?

Third. In the investor's worst depression year, 1933, his receipts were $6,500,000,000. This was more than a half billion dollars above 1928 and more than twice his share of the war profits of 1919. Is it not clear from what sources taxes should come?

It is indisputable that while the national income has been declining the investor's share has been increasing both relatively and absolutely.

In his report on the operation of the National Industrial Recovery Act, Mr. Leon Henderson, Director of Research and Planning Division of the N. R. A., states:

Although pay rolls in December 1934 were only about 60 percent of the total in 1926, dividends and interest were 150 percent of their total in 1926.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York reported the total net profits of 290 industrial and mercantile concerns were $430,500,000 in the first 9 months of 1934, compared with $202,800,000 in the same period in 1933, an increase of 137 percent.

The Treasury Department reports that in 1933 the net income of corporations reporting net incomes was $2,506,078,279, compared with $1,851,575,582 in 1932, an increase of 35.3 percent.

The net income of corporations in 1934 was probably at least $3,400,000,000, and possibly $3,600,000,000. The 392,021 corporations which submitted balance sheets for 1932 to the Federal Treasury paid out in interest and dividends $7,902,644,000, but paid in Federal income taxes only $282,059,000.

At the close of 1932 the liquid assets of these corporations' cash and tax-exempt bonds amounted to $27,834,066,000, or some billions more than the national debt before the "depression." Of this the 618 largest corporations held over half.

Great Britain, with about half our wealth and half our income, collects nearly twice as much from personal and corporation income taxes as we do. The indications are that we could get at least three billions a year more from these taxes than at present. Can we balance our Budget if we try?

On December 31, 1932, 618 corporations, each having total assets of $50,000,000, reported to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

Cash on hand.....	$8,447,610,000
Tax-exempt investments.....	6,328,996,000
Surplus and undivided profits, less deficit.....	22,616,039,000
Total.....	37,392,645,000

They paid out in cash dividends that year $2,269,998,000.

While no figures for this group of large corporations are available for 1933, the fact that for all corporations the 0.9-percent deficit in 1932 on book value of capital was turned into a 0.4-percent profit in 1933, and many of the large corporations made big profits in 1934, would indicate much larger liquid surpluses at the end of 1934 than at the end of 1932.

The total net value of the 8,727 estates for which returns were filed in 1933 was $712,588,000, upon which the total tax liability was only $59,429,000, or 8.3 percent, while in Great Britain the annual yield of the estate tax is about $375,000,000. On the basis of our wealth the estate tax here should yield at least $700,000,000. This means amendment of our inheritance-tax laws and rigid enforcement.

In 1933 the total revenue of the Government of Great Britain at the computed conversion value of the pound was $3,506,611,000, the expenditure $3,643,474,000, while our revenue was $2,238,356,000 and our expenditure $4,845,018,000. In 1934 the figures for Great Britain were: Revenue $4,079,270,000 and expenditures $3,905,632,000; and ours, revenue $3,277,734,000 and expenditures $6,883,862,000.

I want to give credit to the People's Lobby, which assisted me by assembling these figures. Except where otherwise indicated nearly all the figures are derived from official reports of United States Government.

I regret that no general revenue revision repealing taxes on consumption and providing taxes according to ability to pay and service rendered has been undertaken by this administration.

As a friend and supporter of the administration, I appeal to those who control and manage the affairs of this House to have prepared during the recess this summer a revenue bill that will honestly balance the Budget, so that when the Seventy-fourth Congress reassembles the 3d of next January one of the first bills for consideration will be the revenue bill that will really balance the Budget. No greater disaster could happen to this Nation than to have our bonds fall, say, 10 points in the markets of the world.

Every business man on this floor will recall happy days gone when he casually endorsed a note for a friend. Finally, the banks from which he borrowed insisted that he should list among his liabilities the notes he guaranteed. The experience of those days will recall the fact that the Government was right in requiring us to list guaranteed notes, for in almost all cases the guarantor had the note to pay. Sol Smith Russell, in the days gone on the American stage, often said: "When I was young I had money, I had friends; I loaned my money to my friends; I lost my money and my friends." I very much fear that many thousands of millions of the bonds that the Government has guaranteed and millions of loans will be lost and the Government will be called upon to make good the deficit.

In estimating the debt of this Government, if we use the rules of the Treasury Department and count all guaranteed bonds as debts, we will find that on July 1, 1936, the total obligations of this Government will approach thirty-nine billions, and the annual interest charge will exceed one thousand millions. We are today borrowing from the investing classes, and many of those with small incomes are called upon to pay the major share of the cost of maintaining the unemployed. The war against this so-called "depression" cannot be won by borrowing from the wealthy and taxing poverty.

I admire the almost superhuman effort of the man in the White House in attempting to give work to the unemployed, but it is safe to say that despite his most herculean efforts there are probably several million that cannot be employed, even under the tremendous work program now being promulgated. In the future it will take from $5,500,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 a year to meet the current expenses of this Government. The Government must meet its responsibility for the care of the aged, the child and the mother, for health and education. This can be done, justly, only by drastic changes in our fiscal system. I have given figures to show why I believe these changes should be made.

Again I wish to warn my friends on the Democratic side of this House that the responsibility is ours. We must not neglect our duty. Whether we remain in power after 1936 is a minor matter compared to the saving of this form of government, unquestionably the best form of government that has ever been developed. We who know a little of its inside workings must admit to each other, at least, that it is still far from perfect. It is the greatest experiment in government for the masses that time has ever known. We must not allow it to be wrecked on the rock of insolvency. We have the money, we have the income, we have everything that our people need for clothing, food, necessities, and luxuries. We must devote our time and energy to an equitable division of the rewards of labor and genius. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, in a very short time we will be called upon to vote for either an extension or the abolition of the N. R. A. The N. R. A. has been a godsend to my district and to my people.

Let us go back to 1933, before the N. R. A. was brought into being. The girls working in the textile mills and the sewing factories were compelled to work 10 hours a day, and 6 days, for which they were paid from $2.50 to $3.75 per week.

Under the N. R. A. today, the same girls receive a minimum of $13 and work but 40 hours per week.

Practically the same situation exists in the oil industries, where the hours of labor have been reduced and more men employed. Should the Clark amendment be accepted in the House of Congress, it will mean that these men will have to go back to the long hours of work, with no increase in wages, and the extra men who were taken on, be out of work and forced to seek relief on the relief rolls in my district.

It means that the girls in the sewing factories would have to go back to the 60 hours and receive but $2.50 to $3.75 for their work.

That is the reason, my friends, I am making this plea here this afternoon for the Members of the House to vote to continue the N. R. A. under the present set-up for a period of 2 years.

There is nothing in the present situation which indicates to me that industry and business are in any way better qualified today to manage the industrial life of our Nation, unaided by the cooperation of labor and the supervision of Government, than they were 2 years ago. I see nothing in the present situation which leads me to believe that industry alone will find a way out of the depression from which we are still suffering. Two years ago, our business and industrial leaders were willing and eager to accept the leadership and the cooperation of Government and of labor. Today, due almost entirely to that leadership, they are in a more favorable position and feel strong enough to go ahead without any further cooperation with Government. Their present determination to free themselves of all restraint and regulation and return to the old chaotic order of cutthroat competition, merciless wage cutting, long hours of work, and every sort of unfair trade and labor practice is in effect a recognition that they have benefited very greatly from the program of the past 2 years, and now feel sufficiently recovered to engage in the old struggle. If we now discontinue the N. R. A., or if we consent to its continuation for a very limited period of time, we are in effect saying to business and to industry, "Go back to the old order, to the old destructive practices which led this country into the depression. Treat your employees as you will; establish any kind of competition you will. With such things the Government has no interest."

We might as well face the fact that continuation of the N. R. A. for the short space of 10 months is in fact an abandonment of the N. R. A. Even worse, it is a qualified abandonment, a cowardly gesture of buck passing, which will cost the administration not only a great sum of money but which will have a most unfavorable reaction upon business and upon the administration itself. It would be far wiser and far braver to end the N. R. A. now than to continue it for a time so short and in such a modified and curtailed form as to make its failure inevitable. This is what the Clark resolution will do, and this is what we must prevent at all costs. Enlightened business leadership stands back of the 2-year continuation; enlightened labor leadership stands back of it. Such a continuation is an essential part of the administration program of recovery and of reform.

We must not be misled by the opposition to the N. R. A. which has developed. There will always be opposition to any regulation by certain groups. There are many lawless, ruthless people who are interested only in profits and who are willing to secure those profits at the cost of human misery, suffering, and even death. Those people have, of course, been restrained by the N. R. A.; they have been forced to do many things they did not want to do. They have, for example, been forced, in many cases, to give up hiring children; they have been forced to pay better wages and hire more employees because hours of work were reduced. They have had to refrain from some of their most merciless competitive practices. Of course, they oppose the N. R. A., as they would oppose any restriction.

Two of the greatest evils of our industrial life have been partially, if not wholly, corrected under the N. R. A., and we might in time succeed in the complete elimination of those evils if we continue the N. R. A. I refer to sweatshop labor conditions and child labor. What assurance have we if we refuse to continue this law, that we shall not again in the very near future see our mills and factories filled with children of 12, 13, 14, and 15 years of age, while their fathers and older brothers walk the streets looking for work they cannot find? What assurance have we that we shall not again see the country filled with sweatshops in which women and girls work night and day for wages as low as $2 or $2.50 per week? I know that child labor still exists; I know that sweatshops and home work still exist. But now, under the N. R. A., increasing control is possible.

I make no claim that N. R. A. has done all we hoped it would. I know it has not reduced hours sufficiently, that it has not raised wages as it should, and that compliance with code provisions has not been well enforced. Those are weaknesses in administration of the law and not in the principle upon which the law is based. They are weaknesses which should be and can be corrected but they are certainly not weaknesses for which the entire attempt at regulation of industry should be abandoned without a fair trial. Were any of us so optimistic as to believe that industry could be entirely remade in the short space of 2 years? When we adopted the N. R. A. most of us looked upon it merely as the beginning of a long-time effort to bring some change in our economic order. I do not believe there is a thinking disinterested person in the country who is not today convinced that some change is necessary. Nor do I believe there is such a person who can deny that wages have been increased and unemployment decreased under the N. R. A. You have only to read some of the records of code hearings to find that 2 years ago entire industries admitted paying wages as low as 5 to 10 cents per hour for adult male labor. Those same industries under the N. R. A. are paying wages of 20, 25, or 30 cents per hour. We may believe those wages still too low, but we cannot fail to see what such increases must mean to the workers concerned, and what they must mean in increased buying power. But

Evils as great as those from which we suffered are not corrected in 2 years, nor in twice times 2 years, but we have started on the road to changes in our thinking and our practices. We must not forget that we still have eleven and one-half millions unemployed, and that that number will increase immediately the N. R. A. is discontinued, because hours of work will be increased and many men and women thrown out of work, while others work 60, 70, or 80 hours per week. The N. R. A. has returned a significant number of men and women to work. The principle of re-employment through reduction of hours of work is sound.

Chief among the claims of the opponents of the N. R. A. is that it oppresses the little fellow. Concern for the little fellow has, it would appear, been suddenly stirred into life. Opponents of the Recovery Act are now apparently convinced that he is the victim of monopolies established under the codes. When has not the little fellow been the victim of monopolistic practices? He has always been at the mercy of the big concerns. Actually, he has never been in as favorable a position as he is today, when he has an agency of the Government to protect his interests.

In many cases the little fellows who are making such an outcry against the N. R. A. want to go back to the pre-code conditions of sweatshop labor, of long hours, low wages, and intolerable working conditions. It was through the exploitation of labor that many of them managed to exist and to make profits. They would not deal with organized labor; they would not pay wages paid in the larger and more carefully managed plants; they depended upon their abilities to sweat labor, to employ women and children, to work their employees long hours, for profits which they cannot make under decent conditions. Such economic units are actually a burden upon our economic and social order which must be wiped out if we are to go ahead to any kind of an ordered, decent economic and social system. Before we talk too loudly and long of the oppression of the little fellow under the N. R. A. we should make a very careful investigation of just how much of the oppression consists in an effort to make that little fellow observe standards with regard to his wages and hours and labor and trade practices which are fair and just.

A few examples will show definitely what I mean. A study of bakeries shows that in small units (those with annual sales of $10,000 or less) the percent which profits constituted of net sales was twice that of the larger units (those with annual sales over $10,000 and up to and including $100,000), while the percent which wages constituted of net sales was less than one-half of the figure constituted by wages in the larger units. Similarly, in the case of 5-and-10-cent stores, the percentage of profits for the smaller units was 60 percent above that for the larger units, while the percentage of costs represented by wages was only about one-third. (These figures are from the Dun & Bradstreet Retail Survey for 1933.)

Small enterprises very often show more favorable earnings than the larger units, and those favorable earnings are often based on lower wage costs. For the first time in his life, the little fellow who has a legitimate claim of oppression has an agency to which he can appeal. This is one reason we hear more about the small-business man than ever before. When there was no attempt made to supervise and control business practices, he could not make his voice heard. If he could not meet competition, he simply failed and went out of business. Nothing was done to help him.

A comparison of the number of commercial failures before and since the N. R. A. should convince any sincere advocate of the small-business man that the N. R. A. has been of tremendous value to small business. In 1932, the Survey of Current Business reported 2,652 commercial failures; in 1933, that number had been reduced to 1,692, and in 1934, still further reduced to 1,015. What but the N. R. A. was responsible for this striking decrease in such failures?

I do not talk of section 7 (a) in connection with a continuation of the N. R. A. The right of workers to organize and bargain collectively has not been adequately protected under the N. R. A. Like other portions of the act the collective bargaining section has not been properly enforced. Like the other sections of the act, it must be strengthened; it must be enforced; but it must not be discontinued. We have not yet given N. R. A. a fair trial. Its most bitter opponents have nothing to offer in its place. Their cry is not a cry to go forward, but rather one to go back to the old intolerable conditions which the people of this country simply will not support. The N. R. A. still represents the alternative to revolution. It still represents gradual and ordered change instead of violent, sudden change. And change of one kind or another we shall have. We can make our choice. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the abolition of the N. R. A. in one industry that I know of in particular means the placing of 13,000 men on the streets of our Nation. That is just one industry alone. This is in the event the Clark amendment is adopted by the House. If this is true in the case of one industry, what does it mean to the workers as a whole? I dare say, Mr. Chairman, without fear of contradiction, that if Senator CLARK's amendment is adopted we will find over 1,500,000 more people on the streets of our Nation again. That is why every workingman and every workingwoman is pleading for the life of the N. R. A. Our great leader demands it. He insists that it be continued for a period of another 2 years.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement made by the Oklahoma farmers who visited Washington in connection with the recent Farm Congress that has just closed, and also to include a resolution adopted by them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to the gentleman revising and extending his own remarks, but it was understood here this morning that we would not put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD anything except from officials of the Government. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I must object to anything other than the gentleman's own remarks.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I made the request to insert in the RECORD the statement and resolutions of the farmers from my State who came to Washington to thank a generous Uncle Sam for saving them from bankruptcy, and I am sorry that the gentleman from New York objects to my request, because, as I understand it, this is the first time in the history of the Nation that a group of people ever came from all over the Nation and thanked the Congress for what they had done. The 73 farmers from Oklahoma invited the whole Oklahoma delegation to dinner and fed us. They did not ask for a thing. They only wanted the opportunity to thank us for what we had already done. I thought the uniqueness of the whole situation was worthy of recognition.

There is a bill now pending before the Committee on Agriculture known as the "Frazier-Lemke bill", H. R. 2066. The purpose of this bill is to refinance farm indebtedness at lower interest and longer terms. I arise to speak in behalf of this principle. The United States granted a moratorium to Germany extending their time and lowering the interest rate. I believe our Government should likewise grant a moratorium to the American farmer.

FARM INDEBTEDNESS HINDERS RECOVERY

I shall therefore address myself to that principle, with the hope of stimulating interest in what I consider one of the most important phases of Federal aid to agriculture.

Uncle Sam has saved the farmers of the United States from absolute bankruptcy. Farm prices have been doubled and tripled since Mr. Roosevelt took office, so from the standpoint of farm prices the farmer has been greatly benefited; in fact, saved.

But the thing that is now making it difficult for the farmer to repair and improve his farm, to replace his worn-out machinery, to buy harness, equipment, paint, and clothes is the debt burden that, like a millstone about his neck, is still keeping his head under water.

CHANGE IN VALUE OF DOLLAR WORKS HARDSHIP

Most of these debts were made when times were good and money was cheap. The farmer naturally figured in terms of his commodities. Wheat was $1.50 a bushel. If he borrowed $1,000, he figured it would take 666⅔ bushels of wheat to pay it back. Cotton was 20 cents a pound, so he figured it would take 10 bales of cotton. Pork was 15 cents per pound, therefore 30 fat hogs would pay off his $1,000 note. Now, of course, it was not written in the mortgage that the farmer would have the right to pay off in terms of what he borrowed. Yet in all justice he should have the right to pay off that debt with dollars of the same value that he borrowed. Therefore, I believe that he should be refinanced on long terms and low interest rates in order that he might not lose his property until the dollar returns to its normal value.

Suppose one day you went over to your neighbor and borrowed a bushel of wheat. Then when you went to pay it back you took a bushel over to him, and he said, "No; you owe me 6 bushels." You would have thought he was crazy. Yet that is what happened. When many of these debts were made wheat was $1.50 a bushel, but when the debt came due wheat was 25 cents a bushel.

I had this personal experience. I borrowed some money on my ranch when wheat was $1.25 per bushel. I raise wheat and could have paid that debt off with less than 800 bushels of wheat, but when the note came due I was selling wheat at 25 cents per bushel. It took 4,000 bushels of wheat to pay that note, not counting the interest. It took five times as many bushels of wheat to pay the principal as it would have when I made the debt. That is a typical example of millions of cases of farmers.

Therefore the farmers should be granted a moratorium in order to give them a chance to pay back those debts with the same dollars they borrowed. By the terms of the Frazier-Lemke bill, the farmer is required to pay only 3 percent a year, 1½-percent interest and 1½ percent on the principal. This will pay the entire debt in 47 years.

AN EVEN BREAK ON INTEREST RATES

But to merely extend the time is not enough. The farmer cannot pay the high rate of interest that he is being charged. Not long ago I talked to a banker in Omaha, Nebr., a very splendid man. I asked him, "What is the lowest interest rate that Swift Packing Co. can borrow from you for?"

He said, "One and a fourth percent."

I said, "What is the lowest rate a good-risk farmer can borrow for?"

"Six percent."

I said, "What is the difference?"

"Well," he replied, "the loan to the packing company is liquid. We can get the money on that any time we want it. But in the case of the farmer, we must wait until his crop is harvested; therefore we must charge him more interest."

The banks do not make loans on farm land anyway. Therefore such a law as this would not injure the country banks. I do not wish to destroy our banks. The farmer cannot get along without the country banker. What we need today is a lot more "chain harness banks."

Perhaps the private banks cannot lend to farmers for the same rates that they lend to big business because they must meet certain requirements as to liquid assets. But the Government can lend to the farmer at as low a rate as big business enjoys. The men who gamble on the stock market can borrow "call money" at less than 1 percent, and big business can borrow for operating their business as low as 1¼ percent.

The farmer is trying to compete with big business and carry this tremendous handicap. If big business had to pay the same interest rate that the farmer does, it would not outstrip him as it does now. A farmer is lucky if he can get money at 6 percent simple interest. There are fees, commissions, and sometimes compound interest that runs his rate far above 6 percent.

We have in Oklahoma as good land as lies out of doors. Our soil is so rich that if some States had it they would sack it up and sell it for fertilizer, and yet I do not believe there is a farm in Oklahoma that on a strictly agricultural basis has paid 6-percent interest on the investment since the crash of '29. That is taking the best farm and the lowest interest rate. If that is true of the best farms and the lowest interest, then what of the other farms and the higher interest? The question answers itself.

INTEREST KEEPS MARCHING ON

When the depression hit the farmer he could cut down on all of his expenses except the interest on his debt. It kept marching on. In Oklahoma we reduced our property tax assessment, but the interest on the farmer's debt kept marching on. The farmer raised his own food and feed and lived at home without cash. He patched his harness with baling wire and repaired his machinery with barbed wire. He stopped every possible expenditure, but the interest on his debt kept marching on. That interest required cash, in many cases more than his total cash income for the year.

He could not pay. Many farmers have already been foreclosed. The Government stepped in and offered him a helping hand through the farm land loans, but the interest rate on these is still too high. It is 5 percent plus certain fees and charges. This Frazier-Lemke bill would refinance the farmer at 1½-percent interest. Big business can borrow money for that. All I am asking for the farmer is the same as big business enjoys. I am not asking a special favor for him. I am merely asking that the advantage that big business has over the farmer be cut down and equalized.

EQUALIZING THE CONTEST

At the University of Oklahoma we have a circular race track. This track is divided into lanes. Each racer must stay in the lane assigned to him. The fellow who has the outside track must run farther than the one on the inside; therefore, at the start of the race, the referee places the man in the outside track several paces down the track so that when they come out at the finish line both have run exactly the same distance. That is all I am asking for the farmer. He has had the outside track too long. All I am asking now is that you cut off enough of this interest to give him the same chance as big business.

A gang disk plow is a horse killer. It is too heavy for four horses, but if you put five on one must walk on the plowed ground. Unless you change him off he will give out. He cannot walk on the plowed ground all day and keep up with the other four that have firm footing.

Gentlemen, the farmer has walked on the plowed ground until he "is give out." Why not shift him over on a firm financial footing and give him a chance?

By the terms of the Frazier-Lemke bill he would be required to pay 3 percent a year, 1½-percent interest and 1½ percent to apply on the principal, until the debt is entirely liquidated.

GILT-EDGED SECURITY

For these loans the Government would have gilt-edged security. What could be better security than a first-mortgage lien on the farms of America? The mortgage companies consider them the best security. The life-insurance companies consider them the best security. Adam Smith, the dean of economists, says that all wealth comes from the land. It represents the productive power of the Nation. The Government, therefore, would have the best security there is in the Nation back of these loans. Furthermore, the Government would have the name, reputation, and character of the farmers on that paper. These loans would be secured both by character and collateral. Could anyone ask more?

NO COST TO THE TAXPAYER

The Government can perform this service for the farmers without a cost to the taxpayers, but at an actual profit to the Government. The Frazier-Lemke bill provides that the Government can borrow money at 1½ percent to lend to the farmers at 1½ percent, thus breaking even on those loans financed in this manner.

But if the Government does not find enough money that can be borrowed at 1½ percent, then it can issue new money and receive 1½ percent on that money, thus making a profit on the loans that are financed in that manner. The Government has allowed private banks to issue new money and lend it at 6 percent interest, and the banks receive all that profit, while the Government received nothing. The only change of policy involved here is that the farmer gets the money for 1½ percent instead of 6 percent, and the Government gets the profit instead of the banks.

This bill has a safety valve. If the financiers of the Nation do not want the Government to issue this new money, they can buy enough Government bonds at 1½ percent to refinance these farm debts. This will have the wholesome effect of forcing money into circulation.

GREATER ECONOMIC SECURITY

Such a policy of refinancing the farm indebtedness would result in greater economic security for the Nation. I favor granting pensions to old people who are unable to support themselves. But in my opinion that is not getting at the source of the trouble. If we will lower interest on farm mortgages, we will not need so many old-age pensions. High interest is what has bled our farmers white. It has drained them dry. It has eaten out their substance, and consumed their savings. Through good years and bad, it has marched steadily on. It is a certainty against an uncertainty. It never fails. Droughts and floods, pests and depressions, come and go, but interest goes marching on.

The result is that the farmers have lost their homes. Many old graybeards who pioneered in Oklahoma are today trying to get on the relief rolls. Many silver-crowned old mothers who were among the "first settlers" are today asking for old-age pensions. Many pioneers who made the run in Oklahoma in 1889 are today on relief. Forty-six years ago last month they staked a claim in the new State. They were young then. Their blood was red; their hopes were high. They lived on gyp water and white gravy. They weathered the droughts of pioneer years that they might have a home to shelter them in their old days. But the interest on the mortgage overtook them. Today they are farmers without a farm, homesteaders without a home.

I favor an old-age pension all right, but that only takes care of the victims of high interest. It does not remedy the evil that causes poverty in old age. If you cut those interest rates down, there will not be so many of our old people who need pensions.

Let our people own their homes. Let our farmers own their farms. Then you will have national security.

When a farmer owns the farm he is farming he will take better care of it. He will farm it better. He will keep the improvements repaired. He will protect the soil against erosion. The value of the farm thus increases. But the tenant has little incentive to keep up a place. Therefore the value of the farm property decreases when loan companies and insurance companies own the farms and rent them out to tenants.

Home owners make the best citizens in times of peace and the best soldiers in times of war. The farm-owning farmer is the bone and sinew of the Nation. But the tenant becomes discouraged. Even the peasants of Europe have their huts, but the tenants of America have not where to lay their heads. If you want patriotic citizens in peace or war, help them to own a home. Then they have something to live for and, if need be, die for. You cannot expect the gypsy to feel much loyalty to the place where he camps tonight, for tomorrow he moves on. But if you want our people to say, "This is my own, my native land", let them own some of it. If you want them to sing, "My country, 'tis of thee", "I love thy rocks and rills", let them own some of those rocks and rills.

Therefore I should like to see this Congress pass legislation that will grant a moratorium to the debt-burdened farmer of America. The high morale of the American farmer is worth preserving. But once he loses hope entirely, there is darkness ahead for our Nation, because there is no fall so dangerous as the fall of those invisible towers of faith.

But let the farmer own a few fertile acres of land, and the agitator's words will fall on dull ears.

When a man works his own plot of ground he is twice fed by it. There is a wholesomeness that permeates his being and purges his mind of evil thought. A man cannot lean up against the forks of his own apple tree and plan the destruction of his own country. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, yesterday it was announced through the press that there had been allocated for the construction of a tidal power project at Passamaquoddy Bay the sum of $10,000,000 out of the work-relief fund.

The project is sufficiently novel, and the interest so widespread, that it seemed to me quite appropriate that as a Representative of the congressional district in which the project is located I should explain briefly to this assembly, and to the very much wider audience, the location and character of this project, incident to what I trust may be a visit to the project during its construction and after its completion by very many here, who may join with the million people who each year spend their vacation in the State of Maine. [Applause.]

The Passamaquoddy project is located on the extreme northeastern part of the United States where the tides reach between 30 and 40 feet. At the point where this is located the tides run as high as 30 feet and have an average height of 18 feet.

The project was originally conceived by Dexter P. Cooper, brother of Hugh Cooper, the distinguished engineer who has constructed many power projects not only in this country but throughout the world.

Dexter P. Cooper has devoted most of his mature life to the formation of the project and carrying out surveys which have finally made it feasible.

While I was Governor of Maine 7 years ago, a charter was passed by the Maine Legislature and signed by me, authorizing the construction of this project as a private enterprise, but owing to the depression it was never feasible to carry it out as a private project.

It was later taken up as a public or Federal project, and as a result of the studies made by those in authority, it culminated in the Work Relief Board recommending it to the President of the United States. The initial allocation is $10,000,000, with an ultimate expected cost of $30,000,000, to be carried out as a great tidal power development, perhaps the greatest throughout the world.

Tidal power has been the dream of engineers for centuries without end. It is not as novel or fantastic as might at first seem, since the English economic council on the estuary of the River Severn has been for some years studying such a project and preliminary works looking toward the carrying out of such a project have been authorized.

There is before you a blueprint showing how the tides have been harnessed. As a result of the configuration of the earth up there an island at the mouth of the bay makes it possible to hold the water in an upper pool, letting it then run through down into a lower pool, which is held at the level of low tide, getting a constant head of approximately 16 feet, which, with the weight of the sea water, will generate in its inception 166,000 kilovolt amperes, looking to an ultimate development of 366,000 kilovolt amperes, which is a tremendous power project. It will take 30 months to construct, and it will require the expenditure for direct labor of 52 percent of the allocation of $30,000,000. It will involve the removal of 2,500,000 cubic yards of rock, 9,000,000 cubic yards of earth; 700,000 cubic yards of cement will be placed, and we have the cement plant now located in the Second Congressional District of my colleague [Mr. MORAN], which will be readily accessible to furnish the cement. It will require 13,000,000 pounds of metal, which will be used in the construction of the dams and generating units in various phases of the project.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. CROWE. That works project brings relief. Does the gentleman approve of it?

Mr. BREWSTER. I am thoroughly in accord with the proposition that the $4,880,000,000 work-relief fund must be used for the relief of those in distress throughout the United States, and we have over 40,000 upon the relief rolls now. I subscribe entirely to the proposition that any feasible project that will put these men to work is fully warranted and wise, and it has been determined as a result of careful studies and surveys that this will take some 7,000 men off the relief rolls and give them employment throughout, we trust, the greater portion of the next 2 years.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think it is a splendid project, and this question arises: I am wondering if the gentleman can tell us about it. Have there been any safeguards or provisions written into the project guaranteeing to the consumers of power up there low rates for that power, or will there be proper safeguards placed in the grant limiting the rates that may be charged the consumer?

Mr. BREWSTER. This is being constructed purely as a Federal project, and there is at this time no provision as to how that power will be distributed. There is nothing, however, to indicate that conflict is proposed with existing investments, as the power developments in Maine at the present time are in the central part of the State on the rivers, and there is only one power line running down along the border of the State, while a municipal power plant furnishes power in Eastport, Maine, where this project is located.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman believe that, in fairness to all of the people in that area who will consume the power from that project, the Government ought to safeguard maximum prices that might be charged before any State charter or private power contracts are granted for distribution of power to the consumer? In the T. V. A. they sell power to private companies at two-tenths of 1 cent, and proper safeguards as to the maximum charge per kilowatt-hour are made to the public. Do not you think we ought to properly safeguard the rates to be charged the public?

Mr. BREWSTER. I have felt that we could safely trust this administration not to permit extortion from the power consumers.

Mr. McFARLANE. I agree with the gentleman that we can trust the administration, but sometimes we do not know who is going to administer the affairs up there or what influence private power companies might have in securing power contracts and how they may inveigle those in charge to permit high rates, and so forth.

Mr. BREWSTER. It has been considered that a State authority might be created for the purchase of this power and its distribution. If such an instrumentality were used as has been proposed, it would certainly provide ample safeguard of the nature you suggest.

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. BOLTON. Aside from the relief side of the question, does the gentleman know whether there is a demand for this additional power to be developed, or is it to replace existing power supplied by private plants?

Mr. BREWSTER. There is no existing market for this power other than the normal expansion of power demand, but it is expected that industries will gather to use this power attracted by the cheap power and water transportation. There is at the present time no contemplation, so far as my knowledge goes, that they will enter into competition with private enterprise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is this to be a self-liquidating project?

Mr. BREWSTER. It does not enter within that field, as it is being constructed entirely as a Federal project by the Engineering Corps of the War Department. Some of the cost is being reckoned as part of our national defense as a potential source of needed electrical energy for producing nitrates, as is T. V. A., and part of it is being charged to the expense of relief, which the Government is now being required to supply.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman has suggested there would be a plan on foot whereby some State authority would take it over and distribute the power?

Mr. BREWSTER. In the charter that was drafted it was contemplated that it should then be self-supporting for the part which the State authority assumed, and that the State authority should assume all expenses of distribution, although securing funds for development from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Does the State of Maine still restrict the exportation of power from the State?

Mr. BREWSTER. It does.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. How would that law affect the regulation and sale of this power?

Mr. BREWSTER. In the charter, which was granted while I was Governor of the State, specific exemption was made of this project allowing power to be exported from this site.

I speak of this because it has been easy to be facetious regarding the development of tidal power. As far as my knowledge goes, there has never been a question raised as to the engineering feasibility of this project or as to the vast amount of power that would result from the development of the tide.

I trust that many Members of this Congress may join that army of a million of which I spoke that each year vote in favor of coming up to Maine. Bar Harbor and Acadia National Park, where much of our activity centers, is nearby along the coast. The President's summer home at Campobello is just across the bay. The attractions of the coast of Maine have been long and widely known, and it is a matter of great gratification to us that now a great engineering enterprise of this character is to be carried out up there in that corner of the United States, where we trust we may welcome increasing numbers of you as the months and years go by. Come up and see Maine sometime. [Applause.]

Mr. BOLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BOLTON. Can the gentleman tell whether this proposal will interfere in any way with navigation; and, if so, has it been considered by the Engineers of the Army?

Mr. BREWSTER. It is my understanding that it has been reported by the engineers as not interfering with navigation. The site is located entirely outside the bounds of where vessels now pass, as both Eastport and Lubec find themselves and their wharves entirely outside the bounds of the dams, although a lock is being provided through which ships may pass if they wish to use one of these basins as an inner harbor.

Mr. BOLTON. In other words, it cannot be considered as coming within the river and harbor activities of the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. BREWSTER. It is my understanding that the Solicitor of the War Department has so ruled.

The engineering phase is notable. The upper bay is filled at high tide, when the water level is up, perhaps, 30 feet. It then runs through the dam to the lower basin, which is at the level of low tide. Meanwhile a great storage reservoir to take care of midtide is located some miles away, where the water is pumped 130 feet above sea level. It then flows down to take care of the period when the tides are just at mid. All of these features make it a thing of great engineering interest and will undoubtedly result in its receiving world-wide attention not only during the course of its construction but in its operation, which we trust may also result in an industrial development for the use of the very cheap power which will result.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. HOLLISTER. This is absolutely for the development of power?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman is a great lawyer. Does the gentleman feel that the expenditure of Federal money solely for the development of power, with no connection with anything else, is a constitutional expenditure of funds?

Mr. BREWSTER. This project seems to come well within the bounds of the constitutional provision that Congress shall have power to "provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks made yesterday by our distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD]. He told us at the beginning that his was to be a political address. That was hardly necessary. I believe that I could have imagined our distinguished friend pleading a cause out in his home State as a brilliant defense lawyer, for certainly he brought to his command all of the ingenuity, all of the cunning, all of the craftiness that a brilliant, capable lawyer can bring to bear in defense of his own cause. I compliment him for the effort that he put forth to have the Democratic program appear in its best possible light. I tried to ask the gentleman a few questions yesterday as to what he understood to be regular expenditures and those which might be characterized as extraordinary expenditures. I want to quote him correctly. His declaration was:

No one is claiming on behalf of the administration that we are balancing the Budget or attempting to balance the Budget of the unusual expenditures which are an investment in the future, but we do say that, so far as current expenses are concerned, we are approximately balancing the Budget.

That is a startling confession. The Budget is not being balanced, nor is any attempt being made to balance it. How the party platform and the Democratic stump speeches of 1932 must haunt the faithful when they hear that bold and brazen confession.

I want to direct the attention of the gentleman from Indiana and the Members of the House to a few pertinent statements that were made during the course of the hearings on the naval appropriation bill. For instance, note the following from page 275 of the hearings on the Navy appropriation bill:

PROJECTS COMPLETED FROM FUNDS ALLOTTED BY P. W. A., FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. McLEOD. How much money did you receive from P. W. A. funds last year?

Captain McKITTRICK. I can give you a list of the Public Works projects which were completed during the fiscal year 1934 for the Naval Academy, including the hospital and all of the activities of that district. They are as follows:

1. Repairs to swimming pool filters.....	$435
2. Pile dolphins.....	600
3. Improvements to Santee Wharf.....	25,844
4. Repairing smokestack, hospital.....	358
5. Window screens, radio station.....	823

LXXIX—489

6. Irrigation system, Thompson Stadium.....	$1,859
7. Painting radio towers.....	6,480
8. Overhead doors, radio.....	990
9. Repairs to Reina Mercedes pier.....	59,884
10. Timber trestle, experiment station.....	2,380
11. Fire pump, radio station.....	2,978
12. Shore protection, radio station.....	10,404
13. Flagstaff, hospital.....	1,342

Total..... 114,377

These are items that the gentleman from Indiana would have us believe were entirely extraordinary expenditures, yet the admission was made during the course of the examination by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] that had there not been available extraordinary or emergency appropriations that these items would have had to have been provided for under the regular appropriation bills. No accountant would classify repair items as capital investments. I feel that there is no possible dispute between the gentleman from Indiana and myself as to whether or not these are future investments or just maintenance costs.

I refer the gentleman to page 437 of these hearings in which inquiry was being made with respect to the cost of the original fill of ammunition for the vessels of the Navy. I read:

Mr. McLEOD. In answer to a question by the chairman you said that it would be hard at this time for you to segregate the contribution of money specifically appropriated by Congress for the building of ships and that of P. W. A. funds. You recall making that statement, do you not?

Admiral STARK. So far as these new ships are concerned, that is not at all difficult, because they are built under their specific appropriations.

Mr. McLEOD. Of P. W. A.?

Admiral STARK. Separate records of obligations and expenditures are maintained for the ships being built under the P. W. A. allotment of funds. Perhaps I do not exactly understand your question.

Mr. McLEOD. You might answer the question this way: If money is provided by P. W. A. for the building of a ship, and the money is used for the building of a ship—P. W. A. money—is P. W. A. money also provided for the cost of the original fill of ammunition for that ship?

Admiral STARK. Yes, sir.

Mr. McLEOD. Regardless of whether it would be $125,000 or $375,000?

Admiral STARK. Yes, sir.

Mr. McLEOD. It would make no difference?

Admiral STARK. That is correct.

A navy would be a useless luxury indeed without ammunition. And still our friend would have us believe this is an extraordinary or emergency expenditure.

May I again refer my friend from Indiana—I have the greatest regard for him—to page 594 of those hearings where we have the startling disclosure made that the naval authorities have used P. W. A. money to provide the funds for the 5-percent increase in wages and the 40-hour week? I read:

How are you financing this year the 5-percent pay increase and the additional cost of the 40-hour week? Are you drawing on the indefinite appropriation or are you absorbing the expense?

Admiral SMITH. Part of it was taken care of by transfer of funds from Public Works appropriations.

Mr. CARY. From what fund was the transfer made, Admiral?

Admiral SMITH. Part of it was transferred from the public-works appropriations that were granted by Congress.

Mr. CARY. Was that public-works money that was allocated to the Navy for some specific purpose?

Mr. SMITH. No, Mr. Chairman. Public-works appropriations, as you know, are continuing appropriations. There are no yearly appropriations. They accumulate from year to year. We had under those appropriations an accumulated balance that had not been expended because of restrictions put upon cash withdrawals, which enabled us to transfer that amount of money from the public-works appropriations to the appropriation "Maintenance" without jeopardizing any project which had been authorized with which we might proceed.

Mr. CARY. How much was transferred from public works?

Admiral SMITH. The amount transferred to maintenance in 1935 was $531,487 from public works and $200,000 from emergency appropriations, making a total of $731,487.

Mr. CARY. Without those transfers from the public-works appropriation and the emergency appropriation you would have been compelled to ask for a deficiency appropriation, would you not?

Admiral SMITH. Yes, sir; we would.

Mr. SMITH. We would have asked for an allocation of money in a deficiency bill which provided an appropriation to take care of those items.

Pay restoration and the additional cost of the 40-hour week comes within the extraordinary or emergency classification under the present administration's method of budgeting.

I wish the gentleman from Indiana would take the time to go through this record from beginning to end. I have picked out just a few statements at random. I wish he would do this, for then he would see how frequently throughout these hearings on the naval appropriation bill admissions are made by those in charge of the operations of the Navy that P. W. A. funds are used and have been used, and it is contemplated that they will be used, not for extraordinary items, not for emergency items, not for future investment items but for the operating costs, for the maintenance costs of the Navy. And what is true of the Naval Establishment is true in other governmental operations. The gentleman's criticism, therefore, caustically referring to the deficit of the Hoover administration might well be directed, only to a larger extent, to the present administration. If a single system of bookkeeping were being used, if we would put all of the items of income and all of the items of outgo in one set of books; if, in other words, we followed a bookkeeping system which would reflect definitely the deficit, the income, and the amount being spent, the country could then intelligently and honestly appraise the value of the alleged achievements.

The gentleman from Indiana dwelt at considerable length in his defense of the administration on the supposed benefits coming to the Nation from national planning in agriculture. He declared that we must have national planning in agriculture as we have had in industry. His glittering generalities included a statement that the farmer is producing the foodstuffs that feed America. A complaint from one of the housewives from my own district, directed to the Secretary of Agriculture, contradicts the assertions made by our distinguished colleague. The complaint is a recital of a personal experience of this woman when she went to market for the foodstuffs for the family. The suggestion was made to her that instead of buying boiled ham from America that she purchase a product which came in from Poland. As an inducement to her to buy the imported product, she was told by the storekeeper that the imported product could be sold for 20 cents a pound cheaper than the domestic hams. To this practical housewife it was difficult to reconcile the program of the Agricultural Department of limiting production and opening the doors wide to foreign competition. Her pointed inquiry to the Secretary of Agriculture was in these words, "I would like to know how you justify curtailing the raising of hogs in our own country, then permitting Poland to ship ham for consumption in the States. Do you consider this fair competition?" There can be no reasonable answer to this question. There is no justification for a program which will permit curtailment of a home product in order to invite the importation of a foreign product. There is only one basis for this procedure and that is the fantastic, experimental policy of wastefulness sponsored by the present administration. It is the philosophy of creating scarcity in a land of plenty in order to artificially raise prices. The records from the Ways and Means Committee on this subject are illuminating. During the calendar year 1934 there were imported from Poland 340,379 pounds of hams, shoulder, and bacon. During the first 3 months of 1935 there were imported 317,666 pounds of hams, shoulders, and bacon. In other words, during one-quarter of the present year there were imported almost as many pounds as were imported during the entire year of 1934.

In order to provide a market for the pork produced in Poland, where apparently the Tugwellian theory of birth control has not been adopted, the American farmer will be forced to continue the use of the contraceptive devices advocated for the relief of the American farmer in hog raising.

Time will not permit a reference to all of the defenses advanced by the gentleman from Indiana in justification of his party's program. As eloquent as he might be, the futility of his effort is apparent. The administration's program has been one of extravagance, wastefulness, and luxury. It has been predicated on the theory that we should spend ourselves out of our difficulties. Profligacy is the order of the day. Frugality is a discarded and outmoded virtue, and no effort on the part of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle can refute these charges.

The warning of Plutarch might well be used as a warning to America today when he said:

It was a shrewd saying, whoever said it, that the man who first brought ruin on the Roman people was he who pampered them by largesses and amusements.

The need of America for today is for one budget—not a double budget—a budget which will reflect definitely emergency disbursements as well as regular disbursements; a budget which will reflect in all of the governmental operations the cost of the present program so that we today may know the enormous price being paid for the maintenance of the gigantic, bureaucratic machine created by the Democratic Party. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include certain excerpts.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, do I understand that these are excerpts from official reports of Government departments?

Mr. McFARLANE. That is right; they will be Government records.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to answer the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], which remarks are to be found in the RECORD of May 13, on page 7409. During the course of the gentleman's remarks, the following colloquy occurred between the gentleman and myself:

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman mentioned the total expenditures of the Government from its founding to the end of Taft's administration. Let us consider in connection with the Republican regime the gentleman speaks about, the legislation for which the Republican Party is responsible which has brought about the situation in the country where 4 percent of the people own more than 80 percent of the wealth. It was brought about through special-privilege legislation. Legislation enacted by the Republican Party is responsible for the present condition of the country.

Mr. RICH. I have heard statements similar to that just made by the gentleman from Texas made on this floor half a dozen times, that 4 percent of the people own 80 percent of the wealth. The gentleman is conservative, for many Congressmen have stated on the floor that 3 percent of the people own 95 percent of the wealth.

I wish gentlemen who talk thus would present facts and figures to support their conclusions. I wish some Member who makes such statements would come prepared with his figures to support them, and I shall try to get them printed in the RECORD, for I do not believe such statements.

Mr. McFARLANE. I shall be very glad to present them in my own time.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I doubt the accuracy of his statement. I believe he is misinformed. I have heard similar statements made on the floor of the House a number of times, as I said before. Several times I have tried to find authority for such statements but have not been able to find it. I do not believe it; I do not believe those statements.

THE DISTRIBUTION OF INCOME AND WEALTH

In answer to that colloquy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I have here information clearly showing that the Government records show that the statements I have made are in keeping with the facts as to the distribution of wealth in this country as near as it can be ascertained. I will first quote from the Washington Daily News, page 31, of April 11, 1935, in which it says:

The News assigned one of its most competent investigators, Lowell Limpus, to the job of digging up the figures. About Limpus' character and qualifications for such a job, it should be recorded that he is not a sentimentalist; is not suffused, for instance, with the conviction that when a white-collar person loses his job he should be taken by the hand by a paternalistic Government and taught eurythmic dancing. Limpus is a realist.

He was a West Pointer, in fact, and West Pointers are not noted for their sentimentality toward the poor, the rich, or anybody else.

So Lowell Limpus * * * worked for weeks in the Library of Congress and elsewhere. * * *

The results of that research are now being published in the News. And to the consternation of many people (including ourselves when we first heard of them), the results of that research show that * * *

More than 96 percent of the workers in the United States receive less than the $2,000 a year which is regarded as sufficient only for basic necessities.

According to the United States Federal Trade Commission, in 1926, 1 percent of the people dying did own 59 percent of the wealth reported; and since that time the rich have been getting richer in proportion and the poor poorer. (Italics mine.)

The national income picture projected on the year 1932, according to Mr. Lowell Limpus' analysis, shows:

I. The people

The poor (those with incomes of less than $2,000 per year):
Wage earners.....	28,263,372
Farmers.....	8,014,585
Unemployed workers.....	15,840,000
Total poor.....	52,117,957
The nonpoor (all those with incomes exceeding $2,000 per year):
From income-tax returns.....	2,083,153
Total employable adults.....	54,201,110

II. The money

Aggregate national income.....		$57,204,980,000
Income of poor:
Paid to wage earners.....	31,533,000,000
Farmers' income.....	2,924,893,805
Odd jobs of unemployed.....	429,037,350
From gardens, roomers, etc.....	286,024,900
Total income of the poor.....	35,172,955,055
Income of the nonpoor.....	22,032,023,345

III. Conclusions

Less than 4 percent (3.75) of the employable population receives 38.5 percent of the national income. More than 96 (96.25) percent of them receive less than $2,000 per year.

This is not a new problem but is one that has been confronting our Nation for more than 50 years and, according to our leading economists, the concentration of wealth into the hands of a few people has been growing worse all the while. According to the above table more than 96 percent of the workers of the United States receive less than $2,000 a year, which is regarded as sufficient only for basic necessities. Three and three-fourths percent receive 38½ of the aggregate national income. They own and control more than 87 percent of the national wealth. According to the News:

The poor are getting poorer, the national income is steadily draining into fewer and fewer pockets, the Nation's wealth is rapidly coming under the control of a mere handful of men. (Italics mine.)

These facts have been known for many years. Charles B. Spahr pointed them out in 1890. George K. Holmes, of the Department of Agriculture, spotted the maldistribution in 1892; Lucien Sanial again showed it in 1900. Bryan C. Matthews commented on it in 1908. The Commission on Industrial Relations sounded the warning in 1916. Dr. W. I. King surveyed it in 1921. The Federal Trade Commission in a report to the Senate, Resolution No. 451 of the Sixty-seventh Congress, reported on it in 1926. Robert Doane analyzed it in 1933, and the Daily News brought these figures down to date.

The Conference Board Bulletin, April 10, 1935, analyzed the national income produced from 1899 to 1934 and makes this interesting comment on the analysis submitted:

National income—the net value of the goods and services produced by the Nation's gainful workers—amounted to $47,600,000,000 in 1934. Compared with $41,800,000,000 in 1933, this represents an increase of 13.9 percent. In the same interval wholesale prices of commodities increased 13.7 percent, while the cost of living of wage earners rose 6.1 percent. The effective increase of national income, measured by purchasing power, was, therefore, considerably less than the nominal increase, measured in dollars.

Comparing 1934 with 1929, when national income reached its highest level, $83,000,000,000, it is found that the income level declined 42.7 percent, wholesale prices 21.4 percent, and the cost of living 20.6 percent. The purchasing power of the national income produced in 1934 was, therefore, about 27 percent below the predepression peak.

While national income produced represents the earned income from production, it does not necessarily coincide with the combined income that is paid out or distributed to individuals as wages, salaries, and other labor income, rents and royalties, interest, dividends, and withdrawals by proprietors and partners. During the depression years 1930–33 estimates of the United States Department of Commerce indicate that income paid out exceeded income produced by about $27,000,000,000. (Details, by industries, are given in National Income and Its Elements, Conference Board Bulletin, May 10, 1934.) The deficiency was met out of previously accumulated business assets.

National income produced, 1899–1934

Year	Total (billion dollars)	National income
		Per capita	Per gainful worker, including unemployed	Index of wholesale prices, all commodities (1926=100)

Per capita income of $377 was produced in 1934. This figure is 44.8 percent below the 1929 level, in dollars, and 30 percent below it in purchasing power. The average income produced per gainful worker, including the unemployed, was $946 in 1934, as compared with $1,719 in 1929.

The accompanying table and chart shows the total income produced, the income per capita of population, and per gainful worker from 1899 to 1934. The column of index numbers of wholesale prices, expressed in terms of 1926 as 100, furnishes an approximate guide regarding the extent to which rising incomes have been offset by rising prices, and vice versa.

These estimates of national income produced have been derived from a number of sources, adjusted in some instances to preserve continuity of concept. Figures for 1924–28, 1933, and 1934 are estimates of the National Industrial Conference Board. For 1929–32, United States Department of Commerce estimates of income produced have been used, as given in its report, National Income, 1929–32. For 1918–23, the Federal Trade Commission's estimates of national income in its report, National Wealth and Income, correspond to the production concept. For 1909–17, the estimates by D. W. I. King, of the National Bureau of Economic Research, have been adjusted, mainly by eliminating imputed income from ownership of durable goods (including owned homes). For 1899–1908 estimates by Dr. Warren M. Persons have been incorporated in order to carry the series back to the turn of the century.

Our leading economists agree that $2,000 is the minimum annual income sufficient only for basic necessities for the average family, and the above table shows that only 2 years in the last 35 has the average worker received more than $1,700 per year, or nearly $300 less than a living wage. When our country was enjoying its most prosperous times, the average worker received nearly $300 less than the amount required for a bare living per family. Let us compare the average in this table showing income and wealth of the average worker, as above shown, with that of the income and wealth of the average farmer. According to Dr. A. G. Black, Chief of Bureau of Agricultural Economics, the following tables show agriculture's share of the national income and national wealth:

The Daily News of April 10, 1935, in analyzing the national income distribution trend, shows:

THE INCOME-DISTRIBUTION TREND

I. As revealed by income-tax returns

(Average of people under $5,000 per year)

1928, 24.8 percent of the people had 67.3 percent of the income.....	$2,700
1929, 23.07 percent of the people had 67.2 percent of the income.....	2,600
1930, 21.8 percent of the people had 58.1 percent of the income.....	2,600
1931, 18.3 percent of the people had 48.8 percent of the income.....	2,500
1932, 8.9 percent of the people had 36.3 percent of the income.....	2,800
1933, 8.5 percent of the people had 36.3 percent of the income.....	2,030

II. As revealed by Department of Commerce estimates

Per capita income	Salaried employees, selected industries	Wage earners, selected industries	All employees, all industries
1929.....	$2,567	$1,406	$1,475
1930.....	2,589	1,331	1,448
1931.....	2,474	1,186	1,360
1932.....	2,175	959	1,199

Thus it will be seen by each succeeding year that fewer percent of the people is controlling a larger percent of the income. The News wealth-distribution trend clearly shows that as the years have passed the rich have grown richer and the poor poorer, as is shown by the following table:

THE WEALTH DISTRIBUTION TREND

I. As revealed by estate-tax returns

1916 (U. S. Ind. Com.) 2 percent of people reported owned 60 percent of wealth.

1926 (Fed. Tr. Com.) 1 percent of people reported owned 59 percent of wealth.

II. As revealed by independent estimates

1890 (Spahr) 1 percent of the people controlled 50 percent of wealth.

1892 (Holmes) 0.03 percent of the people controlled 20 percent of wealth.

1900 (Sanial) 0.08 percent of the people controlled 74 percent of wealth.

III. As revealed by Doane's estimates

	People with less than $2,000 incomes owned—	People with more than $50,000 incomes had—	People with more than $500,000 incomes had—
	Percent	Percent	Percent
1921.....	17.12	10.94	2.36
1929.....	15.03	13.19	3.74

Analyzing the above table the News said:

All sources consulted agree that more and more of this wealth is coming into fewer and fewer hands. This applies to its control as well as its actual ownership.

Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, of Montana, made a survey recently of corporation control, and in analyzing the study made by himself and other economist experts, on pages 2200-2201 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 19, 1935, he said:

Let me recite some statistics from an authoritative source—the Modern Corporation and Private Property, by Berle and Means.

In 1930 there were over 300,000 nonfinancial corporations in the United States. Their gross assets were approximately $165,000,000,000. Of these 300,000 corporations, the 200 largest, including 42 railroads, 52 public utilities, and 106 industrials, each with assets over $90,000,000, had combined assets of over $81,000,000,000. These 200 corporations, representing less than seven one-hundredths of 1 percent of the number of corporations, thus control practically half of the corporate wealth of the country. Their control of the business wealth of the country, corporate and non-corporate, is equally impressive. It is estimated that at least 78 percent of American business wealth is corporate wealth. Since the 200 largest corporations control over 49 percent of all corporate wealth, it is estimated that they control over 38 percent of all business wealth. Likewise a substantial proportion of the total national wealth, corporate and noncorporate, business, agricultural, personal, and governmental, is controlled by these 200 largest corporations. Figures for 1930 indicate a total national wealth of about $367,000,000,000. The $81,000,000,000 controlled by these corporations represent about 22 percent of the total national wealth.

Even more significant than the present extent of concentration is its increasing rate; that is, the increase in the proportion of corporate business and national wealth controlled by the largest corporations. This rate of increase was greater for the years 1924-29 than for the years 1909 to 1929; but if we take the period of slower growth 1909 to 1929, and apply the same rate of growth for the next 20 years, we find that by 1950 70 percent of all corporate activity would be carried on by 200 corporations. By 1950 half of the national wealth would be under the control of such corporations and by 1970 all corporate activity and practically all industrial activity would be absorbed by these 200 giant corporations. If we take the more rapid rate of growth, from 1924 to 1929, and apply it to the future, we find that by 1950, 85 percent of the corporate wealth of the country would be held by these corporations, and by 1960 all corporate activity and practically all industrial activity would be in their control.

The existence of these giant corporations, of course, means enormous concentration of control in the hands of their individual managers. The 200 largest corporations are directed nominally by about 2,000 individuals out of a population of 130,000,000. These 2,000 individuals are those in a position to control and direct half of our corporate business. But actual control rests in the hands of even fewer individuals. Many of the 2,000 directors are inactive. The ultimate control, therefore, rests in the hands of a few hundred men. One further fact should be remembered. The foregoing figures are based on the direct control of assets by 200 nonbanking corporations. But the influence of each of these corporations, as is stated by Berle and Means, extends far beyond the assets under its direct control. In short, the bulk of our corporate resources, the product of the savings and labor of millions of individuals rests in the control of a handful of men. These are the facts. It is the very negation of industrial democracy. It resembles, instead, a feudalism more pervasive than that of the Middle Ages.

Certainly with these facts staring us in the face no one will further contend or deny that the incomes of the rich are increasing and that the wealth of the Nation is rapidly and steadily under these depressed times being concentrated into the hands of the few. The News of April 9 states it thus:

THE NATIONAL-WEALTH PICTURE

III. Conclusions

More than 96 percent (96.25) of the employable adults own less than 13 percent (12.4) of the national wealth.

Less than one two-hundredths of 1 percent (0.005) of these people control nearly one-fourth (23.5 percent) of the wealth.

Less than 0.04 percent of these people control more than 40 percent of the national wealth.

THE CAUSE

A review of the laws enacted for the past 60 years or more would throw great light on the reasons for the great concentration of wealth as above shown. Our lawmaking bodies, State and National, have continued year after year to enact legislation for the benefit of the well-organized lobbies, controlled by wealth and for their benefit and through the enactment of special privileged legislation, including tariff and tax laws, a small number of men through their nationwide property holdings and campaign of propaganda, have been able to dominate and control the business, economic, and political life of the Nation. Through their control of our medium of exchange and our banking system they have been able to contract and expand the currency at will and in this way cause panics that have periodically wiped out the life savings and property holdings and earnings of the people, and have permitted these money changers to get possession of a large part of the Nation's wealth at a small percent of the real value of such property. The greatest vehicle used by these predatory interests in carrying out their program has been through the collection of interest.

USURY

Under the laws of God given by Moses usury or interest is positively forbidden, and the Bible is full of passages prohibiting the taking of interest or usury: Exodus 22:25, Leviticus 25:35-37, Deuteronomy 23:19, 20, Psalms 15:5, Proverbs 28:8, Luke 6:35.

Yet we find since about the fifteenth century, as the importance of the big bankers has grown and their power extended and their control, first over the church, then over the politics of the nations, has enabled them to control legislation and have enacted laws legalizing usury at whatever rates possible until now interest taking is recognized as a highly legalized moral undertaking. The statement has been frequently made during recent sessions of Congress that the total interest burden of the people of the Nation today is about $15,000,000,000. Add to this the total tax burden of the people (National, State, county, and school) amounting to about $15,000,000,000, would make a total annual interest and tax burden for the 25,000,000 families in the United States of $1,200 that each family must pay for interest and taxes alone. No Nation can stand any such a burden of indebtedness forced upon its people. Interest should be abolished in keeping with the teachings of the Bible. Wealth is barren. It produces nothing; it merits no increase.

To give some idea of how the interest burden alone, of the Federal Government has increased I submit the following table:

It is estimated that the average worker today spends about one-half of his time working to pay for his per capita interest and tax burden to which you exclaim, "I pay no interest and/or taxes." However, if you will analyze your purchase you will find these charges in everything you purchase, your food, your clothing, your rent, your transportation, as well as your payments for professional services and other purchases, and these fixed charges are always increasing.

THE REMEDY

The President, when he flew to Chicago and made his acceptance speech as nominee of our party in 1932, said:

That admirable document, the platform which you have adopted, is clear. I accept it 100 percent. [Applause.]

In the first plank of the 1932 Democratic Platform, we read the following:

We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.

In his acceptance speech the President said:

For 3 long years I have been going up and down this country preaching that government—Federal, State, and local—costs too much. [Applause.] I shall not stop that preaching. As an immediate program of action we must abolish useless offices. We must eliminate actual functions of government; functions, in fact, that are not definitely essential to the continuance of government. We must merge, we must consolidate subdivisions of government, and, like the private citizen, give up luxuries which we can no longer afford.

By our example at Washington itself we shall have the opportunity of pointing the way of economy to local government, for let us remember well that out of every tax dollar in the average State in this Nation, 40 cents enters the Treasury in Washington, D. C., 10 or 12 cents only go to the State capitals, and 48 cents out of every dollar are consumed by the costs of local government in counties and cities and towns.

And then further he said:

Throughout the Nation, men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the Government, of the last years look to us here for guidance and for more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of national wealth. [Applause and cheering.]

And in his inaugural address he said:

Practices of the unscrupulous money changers stand indicted in the court of public opinion, rejected by the hearts and minds of men.

True they have tried, but their efforts have been cast in the pattern of an outworn tradition. Faced by failure of credit, they have proposed only the lending of more money. Stripped of the lure of profit by which to induce our people to follow their false leadership, they have resorted to exhortations, pleading tearfully for restored confidence. They know only the rules of a generation of self-seekers. They have no vision, and when there is no vision the people perish.

The money changers have fled from their high seats in the temple of our civilization. We may now restore that temple to the ancient truths. The measure of the restoration lies in the extent to which we apply social values more noble than mere monetary profit.

No President has served our Nation confronted with greater problems than has President Roosevelt and no President has tried harder than has he to remedy the chaotic condition he found at the beginning of his term of office. His most bitter critics will concede our Nation today has made greater progress toward recovery from the depression in which we found ourselves in March 1933. We should, however, hew to the line and cut expenses wherever possible in keeping with our pledge to the people.

We should immediately set ourselves to the task of working out a more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of national wealth. In order to do this Congress must coin money and regulate its value and stabilize its purchasing power at the earliest possible time. We should immediately amend our tax laws by increasing our inheritance taxes, at least comparable with those of France and England, and we should tighten up our gift-tax law nullified by the reign of Mr. Andrew W. Mellon.

I have offered measures covering these subjects that I hope will receive the immediate consideration of the Ways and Means Committee, H. R. 8401, H. R. 8402, and H. R. 8403.

We should further amend our personal income-tax laws by the enactment of a progressive personal income tax providing rates sufficient to insure a fixed ceiling on personal income. Such an amendment to our tax laws would peacefully and orderly bring about a redistribution of our national wealth. These amendments would soon be reflected to both the consumer and producer.

Business, which is prone to reduce wages or oppose their increase, would not find it advantageous to do so if the resultant savings increased their income tax sufficiently to reduce their personal income. Likewise, the incentive to reap excess profits by increasing the selling price would cease to exist. Instead the tendency would be to maintain good wages, shorten hours, and decrease prices to the lowest point compatible with this maximum possible personal income. The increased wages, shorter hours, and decreased selling prices would automatically benefit the whole community by increasing employment and buying power.

Such a tax would not only eliminate profiteering but would stimulate legitimate business and profits. By taxing only personal incomes and not business profits, a handicap would be removed from business. Untaxed, undivided profits would be available for development and expansion made necessary by the increased buying power of higher wages and more employment.

Deferred dividends or undivided profits held to avoid the tax would be futile. The longer profits were allowed to accumulate the larger the dividends or taxable income when the melon was cut, and so the greater the tax and the smaller the personal income would be. Yearly dividends would thus necessarily result. Only such undivided profits as were necessary for sinking funds, operating expenses, and expansion could profitably be held. Excess profits, that now through salaries, commissions, bonuses, and dividends find their way into the pockets of a few stock manipulators and officials would then be participated in by all stockholders and indirectly by the public also.

Would such a tax drive money into tax-exempt securities? Not necessarily. Better and surer dividends to small stockholders should have the opposite effect. However, with an income limited to $50,000 yearly, one would never be able to buy enough tax-exempt securities to be a menace to the community.

Many economic evils and practices that are common under the present system would not be practical or profitable with such a progressive personal income tax. Holding companies, trusts, monopolies, and other devices for making and covering up excess profits would be of no avail. All such profits would ultimately be passed on as personal income and so would be available for taxation.

The temptation to water stock would be much lessened. Stocks are watered so that a few at the top may reap a bounteous harvest without giving anything in return. What would be the advantage of such manipulation if most, or all, of the profits reverted to the people through taxation?

The proposed tax would make large holdings of unproductive natural resources unprofitable or impossible and so help to restore such resources to the people. It would tend also to break up all large fortunes and holdings however owned or controlled. We would have no millionaires or wealthy playboys, also fewer paupers.

The perennial warfare between labor and capital would be largely avoided by such tax. Labor troubles are usually due to the desire of the employed for a more equitable share of the profits of industry. Given such a share, the conflict should cease.

Undue political influence and power that so often goes along with great fortunes and incomes would naturally be much less when such fortunes and incomes no longer exist.

Such a tax would take the excess profits out of the munitions and shipbuilding industries. It would thus help to eliminate one of the potent factors that tends to promote war.

Would such a tax and such a limitation of personal income deprive us of the services of our great industrial leaders? Would competent men refuse to work for such a pittance? We need have no misgivings about not being able to secure the services of competent men in any line or for any job for an income of $50,000 per year. The net salary of the President is about $50,000. Our Congressmen, Cabinet members, Supreme Court Justices, and business executives all receive less than $25,000 per year. Competent men are found in every line of work who do not receive that much. In fact, all of our so-called "industrial leaders" have worked for less and would gladly do so again, if necessary.

Let us suppose such a one should refuse to work for a paltry $50,000 per year. What would he do? Retire to his million-dollar estate and live off his income? Well, as that income could not be over $50,000 per year, he would not be able to pay taxes and upkeep on that million-dollar estate very long. As a result, the estate would have to be sold. This, of course, would be very desirable. The land would then be available for small home owners. A number of small home owners is a far greater asset to any community than is one large estate.

Nor need we fear that our millionaires would take their wealth and flee the country. If they did leave they would not be missed. They could take with them little of real value. Our industries and resources would have to be left behind.

Would the possessors of swollen incomes try to evade such a tax? Probably so. Many of them try to now, and they often get by with it. Under the proposed plan such evasion would be more difficult. The greater the income the more numerous the sources from which it is derived and the more complicated and difficult it is to uncover. A limited income would naturally be derived from a smaller number of sources and so would be much easier to check. Requiring all corporations and employers to report the wages, salaries, bonuses, and dividends paid to all employees, stockholders, and officials would reduce evasion to a minimum. Anyone found spending money clearly in excess of his reported income would, of course, be a subject for special investigation.

Some will say it sounds all right but the people would never stand for such a tax. Well, that depends on what is meant by the people. Under the proposed plan, as under the present one, only a very small percent of the voters would pay any income tax at all. The rate on the lower incomes, $4,000 or less above exemptions, would be less than now. We might conservatively conclude that less than 1 percent of the people would then pay more income tax than at the present. The other 99 percent and all the non-income-tax payers would profit either directly or indirectly. If properly presented to the people, their own self-interest should cause them to approve such a tax.

Since our income tax is provided for by constitutional amendment we should have no interference by the Supreme Court. Nor could it be said that the proposed tax would violate the provisions of the Constitution which forbids unjustly depriving anyone of his property. It would merely prevent acquisition of property in excess of that compatible with the public good.

As stated before, the amount of the tax suggested, 1 percent on the first $1,000 above exemptions and increasing 1 percent with each additional $1,000, is purely arbitrary and may be adjusted to meet the needs of the Treasury Department for income. The practical working of such a plan is the point stressed. To be effective the tax must progressively increase so that excess profits will result in a diminished personal income. A lesser tax, such as our present income tax, is shifted to the consumer and so will not produce the desired result.

Such a tax would best be a Federal tax. There would then be no excuse for a business, corporation, or surtax. The ultimate purpose of all profits is personal income. Real-estate and personal-property taxes would then, as now, be left to the State, county, and municipality. The rationale of this is easily seen. Real estate and personal property is local and so available for local taxation. One's income may be derived from Nation-wide sources and so can best be controlled by a Federal tax.

I have requested an estimate of the revenue that would be yielded under the different measures above discussed, and have received the following information from the Treasury Department in this regard in a letter dated May 8, 1935:

Estimated increases in revenue

Individual income tax.....	$234,400,000
Estate tax.....	127,000,000
Gift tax.....	14,200,000

In conclusion, let me urge you that if you favor the legislation I have offered and believe in the remedies suggested that you immediately contact the members of the Ways and Means Committee and ask for hearings on these bills so that we may get action and have this legislation considered on the floor of the House. The depression is still with us; more than 10,000,000 able-bodied men anxious to work cannot find employment at a living wage. Men, women, and children, because of this condition, are going hungry and are in need of clothing and a place to live.

Do you as a Member of Congress have the courage to vote for legislation that will drive the money changers from the temple and restore our Government back into the hands of the people? If so, let us work and vote for legislation which will bring about that result. Let us redistribute the wealth through limitation of personal incomes, through increasing our inheritance and gift tax rates, making them at least the equal of those of other countries. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain letters address to me and the replies to same.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois and some other Members thought I was applauding the statement just made by my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] when he said that the rich were becoming richer and the poor becoming poorer. I did not applaud that statement. Rather I condemn the condition he recites. I was applauding, however, the courage of the gentleman from Texas to come out here on the floor of the House and tell the truth in regard to the maldistribution of wealth in this country. I shall have more to say about that subject later. In my judgment, the only way this evil may be corrected once and for all is by a capital tax levy, bringing every swollen fortune down to $1,000,000 and scaling every big income down to not more than $50,000 a year, and I think that is about $40,000 too much.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am working on a tax measure that will bring about just that result; that is, limiting future incomes to not exceeding $51,500 annually.

Mr. TRUAX. I would not make it $51,500; $50,000 is about $40,000 too much.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to one of the most sinister campaigns of propaganda being conducted by the big interests and by big business, the fellows who were down here in Washington a few days ago attending the convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce. In this convention they roundly criticized and condemned President Roosevelt and the new deal. This campaign of propaganda is directed to the Members of Congress so that we will oppose the Wagner National Labor Relations Board. I am happy to say that as a member of the Committee on Labor our committee voted unanimously to report this bill favorably.

Yesterday the Senate passed the bill by a vote of 63 to 12. During this very week and for some days before, we have had an organized propaganda by big business and by the big industrialists seeking to have this bill defeated.

Mr. Chairman, I have here some telegrams received today. They come from Columbus, Cleveland, and other cities in the State of Ohio. These telegrams and letters are inspired by the big business interests. They are the known enemies of all legislative measures that have as their end the benefit and welfare of the great mass of the common people of this country. I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a reply that I have drafted to all of these telegrams and letters. This reply is drafted upon the basis that the two greatest producing classes of the country are the farmers and wage-workers who create all the wealth and ultimately pay all of the taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to make one last argument and to take one last parting shot, as you might call it, for the enactment into law of the Patman soldiers' bonus bill. We read in the newspapers that this bill has been forwarded to the White House and that the first of next week, probably Monday, we will receive a veto message from the President of the United States. I want to say that if this veto message actually does come before us on Monday of next week, in my humble opinion, it will be contrary to the wishes of the great majority of people in this country. It will be contrary to the wishes of the farmers in this country. It will be contrary to the wishes of the great mass of wage-workers of this country. It will be contrary to the wishes of the unemployed. It will be contrary to the wishes of 20,000,000 people who are on the relief rolls and it certainly will be contrary to the wishes of the ex-soldiers. Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote to override the expected veto. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, here are 10 telegrams evidently inspired from the same source and apparently dictated by the same hand. You will note that they are all transmitted on the same day, May 15, 1935. The time of transmittal ranges from 11:46 a. m. to 12:15 p. m., exactly 29 minutes to send these telegrams from the Cleveland office of the Postal Telegraph Co. I want to commend the Postal Telegraph Co. for their speed in transmittal, and also for the fair dealing in absorbing the 5-cent Federal tax on telegrams, instead of charging it to the sender, as is done by the Western Union Telegraph Co., a Kuhn-Loeb, Morgan outfit, so I am told.

In the State of Ohio the Postal Telegraph charges us 25 cents for a 10-word message, while the Western Union charges 30 cents for the same message. This is a racket, resulting in millions of dollars of illicit profits annually. Getting back to telegrams, I am told that the passage of the Wagner bill will cause ruin in the country. It will send people to the poorhouse. It will promote strikes and unrest. It will send us hell-bent to chaos. Industry will fall, and so forth, and other asinine nonsense.

History tells me, and the most costly depression in all history proves, that the racketeering bankers, industrial pirates, and millionaire bluebeards did more to send this fair country of ours headlong into irreparable and irreconcilable industrial ruin, financial chaos, than all of the horny-handed farmers and wageworkers combined.

A financial dictator nor an industrial czar never arises from the ranks of the workingman. A Robespierre is never born from the masses of those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow.

Here are a baker's dozen of telegrams, ranging from the American Rolling Mills Co. to the Tinnerman Stove & Range Co. These messages are interesting but not necessarily dangerous.

MIDDLETOWN, OHIO, May 17, 1935.

Hon. CHARLES V. TRUAX,

House of Representatives:

I cannot believe that you would support the Wagner bill as now written if you understood serious situation confronting employees in industry should this law be enacted as passing Senate. Employees would be subject to racketeers and abuse, which would result in strife such as this country has never known. Senator WAGNER at 1934 hearings agreed his bill ought to be amended so as to prohibit intimidation and coercion from any source. We urge you to insist on this amendment before final passage of this legislation.

The following letter emanates from one of the largest retail merchandising establishments in Ohio:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 2, 1935.

HON. CHARLES V. TRUAX,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TRUAX: In view of the fact that the proposed Wagner labor-disputes bill, S. 1958, has come out of the Senate committee, we ask that you give careful consideration to the serious effects that undoubtedly would follow the adoption of such a bill.

Since the passage of the N. I. R. A. we have had considerable experience with many of its phases, and particularly with 7 (a). While we have always believed that 7 (a) should have contained the same prohibitions against coercion, intimidation, etc., on the part of employees, employees' organizations, and labor unions (of which some portion of the employees might perhaps be members), that were imposed upon the employers by the specific language of the act, nevertheless we feel that it would be far better to continue 7 (a) in its present form than to operate a retail store under the proposed Wagner bill.

You are no doubt familiar with the favorable as well as the unfavorable features of the bill itself, and we hope you will oppose its enactment.

Very truly yours,

THE HALL BROS. CO.,
JAY IGLAUER,

Vice President and Treasurer.

I know this merchandising organization only by reputation. I know them to handle a high-grade line of merchandise and to charge and receive prices commensurate thereto. They complain about their experience with section 7 (a) of N. I. R. A. Strange to relate, organizations of employees complain about this same section. They contend that Donald Richberg nullified the intention of Congress and the intention of the President by his arbitrary interpretation of section 7 (a) of the Recovery Act. Organized labor contends, and rightly so, that the N. I. R. A. should be continued, if not for any other reason than because of the abolition of child labor, outlawing of "yellow dog" contracts, and the right of collective bargaining under section 7 (a).

The truth is, however—labor knows this, and it is also known by the real friends of labor in Congress—that section 7 (a) is not enforced, and the big industrialists and the big commercialists do not want it enforced. I must admit the contentions in this letter have more merit than the others. This firm is to be commended, because in over 42 years of business life they have had no labor disputes until March 1934. Had a similar condition been observed by the majority of large employers of labor, there perhaps might not be so much need today for the legislation we are considering. The regrettable fact remains, however, that such has not been the experience of others. Hence the imperative need for this legislation.

I am happy to include this letter from the Hancock Savings & Loan Co.:

THE HANCOCK SAVINGS & LOAN CO.,
Findlay, Ohio, May 3, 1935.

HON. CHARLES V. TRUAX,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TRUAX: We know you are flooded with letters and arguments, both in favor of and against the legislation that is proposed, and we hesitate to write you, but we feel it our duty, and we feel quite sure that you will agree with us that there are many bills before the Legislature at this time that are very radical. We refer to the Wagner labor-disputes bill and the Black 30-hour bill, as well as the social legislative program that is before you.

We feel that if business was left alone today, we would be on the way to recovery, and when business was approaching, or was near, normal would be a much better time to consider social legislation, as well as other legislation mentioned above.

We would appreciate a very serious consideration along this line. Money is piling up in all financial institutions, who are waiting for an opportunity of investment, if given the assurance there was going to be no rational change.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,
Sincerely,

R. C. FIRESTONE, Secretary.

I expected, naturally, that this legislation would be opposed by the money lenders. I am at a loss, however, to understand just how money-lending institutions would be adversely affected by the enactment into law of the Wagner-Connery labor relations bill. As I know the business, their hours are not long, the work is not toilsome, the employees are not numerous. They have few labor disputes. I fail to perceive how this institution would be seriously affected by the 30-hour-week bill, but here is the colored gentleman in the woodpile.

You will note that these people are opposed to the President's social security legislative program. In other words, they are against the new deal, they are against old-age pensions, employment insurance, old-age annuities. I take it that they also oppose the Rayburn-Wheeler utility bill which proposed to abolish once and for all time the real overlords of creation, the Morgans, the Dohertys, and the Mellons of public-utility holding companies.

You assert, Mr. Firestone, "money is piling up in all financial institutions." I have heard that statement made before. I heard that statement made on the floor of the United States Senate a short time ago. A distinguished Senator asked for the proof of that assertion. He was not furnished the proof. If your statement is true, then why is it necessary for the United States Government to authorize $3,000,000,000 of Government funds to refinance farms—to authorize nearly $5,000,000,000 Government funds to refinance homes? If your statement is true, then why is it necessary for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to act as a central bank, practically owning 6,000 of the 15,000 banks in the country open and doing business today? No doubt you will try to tell me that the millions of workers in this country who are unemployed now and who will have a tendency to be unemployed when this country comes out of depression, largely because of progress in mechanical agencies and machines, no doubt you will tell me that these people will suffer more than in the past if this bill is enacted into law. Frankly, I do not believe any such statements or assertions. I think you are in error and that you will so admit once this bill is enacted into law and becomes operative.

You will recall that only a short time ago the brewers of the country were having bad attacks of financial jimjams because their places of business were closed as tightly as tombs. Then the Seventy-third Congress, responding to the wishes and desires of the people, legalized beer and other beverages. When that legalization was in process of consummation by Congress, we were told by brewers and prospective brewers that the people, and especially the thirsty ones, would soon be lapping up 5-cent beer. That ill-timed prophecy has never been fulfilled to my knowledge. The price is still 10 cents. Instead some brewers are attacking the proposed processing taxes for hops, and now they rant about this bill. The manager of the company whose place of business is in my own congressional district, I am sure is unduly excited when he says that this measure "spells ruin for industry in this country." The fact that he spells the words "ruin" and "opposes" on his typewriter with red ink is prima facie evidence that he is excited. He concludes his little epistle with these words, "the Black 30-hour bill is just as bad." Here again I must disagree with this gentleman.

FINDLAY, OHIO, May 11, 1935.

HON. CHARLES V. TRUAX,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TRUAX: If there ever was a measure that spells ruin for industry in this country, it is the Wagner labor-disputes bill, S. 1958.

We do trust you will see fit to oppose this bill.

The Black 30-hour bill S. 87, is just as bad.

Thanking you, I am, very truly yours,

WM. J. ALTMAYER,
Manager the Krantz Brewing Co.

DAVID KIRK, SONS & CO., LTD.,
Findlay, Ohio, May 4, 1935.

THE HONORABLE CHARLES V. TRUAX,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The writer was very much startled by the news that the Wagner labor-relations bill now appears acceptable to the majority of Congress.

This is inconceivable to me that our Representatives would even consider such a dangerous piece of legislation, which is so vague in its wording that wide-spread confusion and endless litigation must follow any attempt at interpretation.

This bill would put Federal Government endorsement on the closed shop, which would definitely lead to the recognition of national labor unions in all our industries, providing for ma-majority rule, by which 51 percent of the employees of industry could decide for the other 49 percent, and an outsider could originate or enter into a dispute by which he is not affected and need not be either an employer or an employee.

The bills S. 87, S. 1958, H. R. 3657, and the Wheeler-Rayburn utility bill should be defeated for the best interests of the country, of which you and I are a part.

The writer would be pleased to hear your views on this, as I have always respected your judgment a lot in matters of this kind.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

DAVID KIRK, Jr.

Here is another from my own congressional district, the eighth of Ohio. This comes from a well-known wholesale grocers and importers company. The writer of this letter is "much startled by the news that the Wagner-Connelly bill appears acceptable to the majority of Congress." Well, this gentleman must recall that the majority of Congress is the Democratic majority in Congress and the majority that enacted into law the Roosevelt recovery measures. I voted for practically all of these recovery measures. I confess that I voted against the so-called "administration banking bill" a few days ago. To me this bill meant a continuation and perpetuation of the bankers' racket, which costs the taxpayers of this country billions of dollars every year. Therefore, I voted "no" on this bill.

This gentleman also discloses a clearly defined line of demarcation between his views and those of us who are fighting for an equitable redistribution and distribution of national wealth, property, and income. I am transmitting to the gentleman mentioned a copy of the letter which has been prepared to answer the hundreds of similar propaganda letters and telegrams received in my office. There are literally hundreds of these communications in the same vein and along the same lines that could be included if time and space and ethics permitted. Some of our constituents resent and object to the acknowledgment and answering of these letters by form letters. Some of them call them circular letters. I regret this incident deeply and can only say to these constituents that a limited office force and a limit on our time, even though we do not govern our time by the N. R. A., precludes a more formal and personal reply.

Now come some gentlemen living up in the Seventeenth Ohio Congressional District, namely, the Swisher & Shafer Auto Co., dealers in Cadillac, La Salle, Stutz, and so forth. Perhaps these gentlemen are influenced by the kind of customers they deal with, since it will be universally admitted that owners and drivers of Fords and Chevrolets are inclined to be more concerned with the welfare of the working people than are the owners and drivers of Cadillacs, La Salles, and Stutzes:

SWISHER & SHAFER AUTO CO.,
Mansfield, Ohio, May 13, 1935.

Representative CHARLES V. TRUAX,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: We are writing this letter asking you to help us in protesting the Wagner labor-relations bill (Senate bill 1958), which we are sure if passed will make it bad for the manufacturer as well as the automobile dealer.

We will appreciate your help.

Thanking you in advance for your support,

Yours very truly,

W. O. SWISHER.

Here comes our old friends, the American Ship Building Co. Here is their letter:

THE AMERICAN SHIP BUILDING CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio, May 14, 1935.

HON. CHARLES V. TRUAX,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We would like to take the liberty of giving you our views in regard to the Wagner National Labor Relations Act, or any bill embodying its principles. From every angle we believe that this bill would be detrimental to the public. By far the large majority of employers and employees in this country have maintained harmonious relationships for years, and there are a great many companies where satisfactory employee representation plans have been in actual operation for long periods of time and where the employees themselves have insisted upon exercising this right by themselves, as they are now doing, without any outside jurisdiction or interference.

This bill is backed only by the American Federation of Labor and the professional labor leaders who, on their own figures, represent not more than from 10 percent to 12 percent of the country's industrial workers. In its practical application this bill would allow the rights of the other 90 percent of the country's workers to be entirely subjugated to this 10 percent. It offers nothing to prevent labor organizations and other forces from exercising any degree of violence, coercion, or intimidation against employees. It contains nothing which would make professional labor organizations in any way responsible in the eyes of the law.

If passed this bill would do more than anything which has occurred in recent years to set up false standards of class distinctions and of class interests where previous relations were harmonious and where there is no real diversity of interests.

May we urge that you do all in your power to defeat this bill?

Very truly yours,

R. B. ACKERMAN, Secretary.

It seems that these gentlemen suddenly become vitally alarmed about the welfare of the "people." In fact, they go so far as to say that the Wagner National Relations Act will be "detrimental to the public." They take a left-handed crack at labor also by saying the bill is "backed only by the American Federation of Labor and the professional labor leaders who, on their own figures, represent not more than from 10 percent to 12 percent of the country's industrial workers." I am sorry, Mr. Ackerman, that I cannot go along with you in this philosophy or theory. It was Mr. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., that company which built so many ships for the Government during the World War, and who made millions of dollars from the Government, it was Mr. Grace, when testifying before the Senate Committee Investigation of Profits in War Munitions, it was that same Grace who admitted that he had received a bonus of nearly $3,000,000 for his own services, who acknowledged that he was opposed to the payment of the soldiers' bonus because he had never looked at it in that way before. So to the American Ship Building Co. I can truthfully say that the bill will be enacted into law by the Seventy-fourth Congress, signed by the President of the United States, and they will have a fair chance to prove or disprove their contentions.

THE AMERICAN COACH & BODY CO.,
PUBLIC UTILITIES EQUIPMENT MANUFACTURERS,
Cleveland, Ohio, May 14, 1935.

HON. CHARLES V. TRUAX,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We are sincerely interested in the Wagner bill which is now pending before the House. We believe that the Wagner bill would be an injustice to all employers, small or large, because it gives not only the American Federation of Labor unions a free hand to coercion but also encourages the professional labor organizer, which is resulting in nothing but disturbance, strikes, and racketeering. Unless similar provision is enacted to protect the employers, to make the union organizations responsible, either direct to the Federal Government or courts, there will be nothing but friction and strikes and retardment in progress.

For this reason we believe the Wagner bill should be defeated, and we are hereby asking you, in your own fair judgment, to help defeat this bill.

Sincerely yours,

THE AMERICAN COACH & BODY CO.,
JAMES HOLAN, President.

I note from the heading on this letter that the company caters to the manufacturers of public-utility equipment. I assume, therefore, that this company will also be against the Rayburn-Wheeler bill that outlaws and abolishes public-utility holding companies. It appears that the American Coach & Body Co. has a big grievance against the American Federation of Labor. My experience teaches me that were it not for the organized activities and militant spirit of the American Federation of Labor, with their fighting and courageous leader, Mr. William Green, and of other kindred organizations, labor would be crushed completely out of existence by certain employers and their henchmen.

The Dayton Chamber of Commerce, Dayton, Ohio, writes me as follows:

DAYTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Dayton, Ohio, April 22, 1935.

HON. CHARLES V. TRUAX,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Acting under instructions of the board of directors of the chamber of commerce, I am pleased to transmit to you enclosed a copy of the report of the taxation and legislation committee, together with the action of the board of directors of this organization, on Senate bill no. 1958, known as the "Wagner labor-disputes bill."

We trust that you will give the attitude of this organization and the reasons therefor your very serious consideration, and with the hope that it may be somewhat of a guide to you in any vote that you may register as a Member of Congress on this very important and exceedingly far-reaching bill.

Very truly yours,

DAYTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By WAYNE G. LEE, Managing Director.

They send me a copy of the action of the committee on legislation and taxation and the board of directors of the Dayton Chamber of Commerce re Wagner labor-disputes bill. They wind up that statement by saying:

One can readily grasp the bureaucratic control that would be exercised by the Government not only under industrial management itself but upon the employee who might be unwilling to join a labor union. Your committee unanimously recommends the chamber's opposition to the passage of this bill.

Signed "W. S. McConnaughey, chairman taxation and legislation committee."

You will note in the foregoing letter that the Dayton Chamber of Commerce submits the letter with the hope that it will be "somewhat of a guide" to me in any vote that I may cast on this bill. My dear friends, I am sorry to state that my mind was made up on this bill sometime ago, as my mind is made up on all legislation that is of far-reaching benefit to the common people. I think you are not in full possession of the facts in this case or you would not solicit me to oppose this legislation.

Here are several more from Dayton, and I insert them in the RECORD at this point:

HON. CHARLES V. TRUAX,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: As a representative of industry and as one of your constituents, I wish to enter my protest in opposition to the proposed legislation known as "the Wagner labor relations board bill", which I understand is now in the hands of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

As I see it, this bill injects the Federal Government further into the relationship between virtually all employers and employees, regardless of the number of persons employed; it creates an all-powerful central administrative body which may summon employers to appear anywhere in the country on 3 days' notice; and it forecloses the rights of minorities to representation in collective bargaining negotiations by setting up a majority rule.

With reference to the central administrative body referred to above, their findings of facts bind any court to which an appeal is made, although the board itself is not bound by "the rules of evidence prevailing in courts of law." In other words, the board can reach a decision on hearsay or rumor and the courts must accept as "facts" what the board accepted as "rumor."

Further, while the proposed legislation prohibits certain labor practices as unfair on the part of the employer, it sanctions the closed union shop and imposes no restraints on labor unions.

There are many additional features in the bill to which I object, and which I will not burden you with at this time, but I feel that if this proposed legislation is enacted into law it will not only place additional hardships on industry and create additional strife between employer and employee, but will also seriously retard our progress toward complete economic recovery.

I therefore bespeak your earnest support in aiding to defeat this proposed legislation.

Very truly yours,

CARL L. STORCK,
Assistant to the Factory Manager.

One is from the Delco Products Corporation, a subsidiary of the General Motors Corporation. Needless to state that these gentlemen are all wrong in their premises. I take it from a perusal of the letter that they offer no opposition to a continuation of the N. I. R. A., which is designed primarily to benefit and protect the big industries. The conclusions in this letter are wholly erroneous. The bill does not further inject the Federal Government into the relationship between employers and employees, only as it should be injected therein to protect the rights of those workmen, those vital cogs, in these huge industrial machines that rob workingmen of their youth and future earning powers. The bill, of course, should and does sanction closed union shops, but does not impose restraints on legitimate labor unions. It gives the employees themselves the right to say to what organization they will belong without dictation or punishment by the employers.

AMERICAN ZINC OXIDE CO.,
Columbus, Ohio, May 9, 1935.

Congressman CHARLES V. TRUAX,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN TRUAX: Referring to the Wagner labor-disputes bill (S. 1958), it is our opinion that legislation of this nature will aggravate labor troubles and do more harm to a very large majority of workers than it can possibly do good to the comparatively small number advocating such legislation.

Permanent legislation prescribing relationship between management and labor is not desirable and can result only in additional disputes, arguments, and general confusion and dissatisfaction, which means hardship to the workers and their families.

What is needed, in our opinion, is more genuine cooperation between labor and management, and legislation such as the Wagner bill would make this more difficult.

Will very much appreciate a line from you stating your position on this piece of legislation and your opinion of the bill's chance for passage.

Yours very truly,

J. I. WALL, Manager.

This one is from the American Zinc Oxide Co., a subsidiary of the American Zinc, Lead & Smelting Co. You will be interested to know that the only acquaintance I enjoy with these corporations is by hearsay or reputation. I have not the pleasure of knowing them personally in the 12 years during which I have been a servant of the people, first as director of agriculture for the State of Ohio for 6 years, and now as Representative at large for the State of Ohio. I repeat that never once during my 12 years' service to the public have any of these gentlemen deemed it necessary to contact me heretofore. Now, since they seemingly fear the "organized onslaughts of organized labor", they appeal to me for help. That is futile, I beg to state. You state more "genuine cooperation" is needed. I am in accord with that viewpoint, and this is exactly what the Wagner-Connery bill proposes to do. Mr. Wall, I take this opportunity to answer the last paragraph of your letter. My judgment is that the bill will pass the House of Representatives by a large majority.

LOCKHART IRON & STEEL CO.,
Pittsburgh, Pa., May 13, 1935.

HON. CHARLES V. TRUAX,
The House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are writing you in connection with the Wagner labor relations bill, as we wish to go on record as opposing the passage of this act, as, in our judgment, it would by its terms and procedure tend toward a continuous stimulation of complaint.

It would excite irritation and result in increased bitterness in employment relations, thus having the effect just the opposite to that intended to improve, and would indefinitely prolong the return of reasonably prosperous conditions in this country.

The bill if enacted would practically impose the closed shop upon industry and throw the labor situation into the hands of the labor union, but there is nothing said that would prevent labor organizations from exercising coercion or intimidation.

We trust you will use your best efforts to defeat the bill in question.

Yours very truly,

LOCKHART IRON & STEEL CO.,
J. M. GILLESPIE, President.

Assuredly those of us in the House of Representatives who are vitally interested in the welfare of American labor are not surprised when we receive letters of protest from the subsidiaries of the steel trusts. Here is one from the Lockhart Iron & Steel Co. The president of the corporation, Mr. J. M. Gillespie, is having nightmares about "increased bitterness in employment relations." Let me humbly suggest, friend Gillespie, that the continued opposition of the steel trusts to this and other measures designed to help the wageworker will do more to promote and increase that "bitterness" than all of those measures combined.

Mr. Chairman, I conclude my remarks with a reaffirmation of my attitude and position on this all-important legislation.

TRUAX REPLIES TO OPPONENTS OF WAGNER-CONNERY LABOR-RELATIONS BOARD

As a member of the Committee on Labor I voted to report favorably the Wagner-Connery labor-relations bill.

The two greatest producing classes of the country are farmers and wageworkers who create all the wealth and ultimately pay all the taxes.

For the past 15 years both of these classes have been exploited by the millionaire overlords and racketeering bankers with the result that farmers were universally bankrupted and wageworkers universally unemployed. The money lenders and Shylocks finished the job by wholesale and ruthless foreclosures of farms and homes.

The Roosevelt Administration sponsored and the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses enacted into law the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Farm Credit Administration, and the Farm Bankruptcy Act for the relief and benefit of farmers. N. I. R. A. was created for the benefit of industrialists. Banking legislation was enacted for the benefit of bankers and capitalists. H. O. L. C. was established for the relief and salvation of stricken home owners.

To complete this circle the establishment of the National Labor Relations Board and enactment of the 30-hour-week bill are necessary, the first bill to provide for a peaceful forum for both industry and labor and to benefit employers, workers, and the people at large. It is designed to put "teeth" in section 7 (a) of the N. I. R. A. It is necessary to guarantee to labor the right of collective bargaining. It will promote industrial peace instead of riotous discord.

Fewer hours per day, less days per week, will reduce the ranks of the 11,000,000 unemployed caused not only by the depression but by the permanent loss of jobs due to the mechanistic age. I will vote for the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEEN].

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, on January 3, 1935, I introduced House Joint Resolution 51, proposing an amendment to the Constitution which provides for the election of Members of the House of Representatives for 4-year terms. The resolution makes no provision as to whether or not Members should be elected during the Presidential election years or during the off years. I preferred to leave this feature to the wisdom and judgment of the House and Senate.

It is my contention, as well as my sincere, honest, and conscientious belief, that Members of the House of Representatives should be elected for 4-year terms instead of for 2 years, for the following reasons:

First. If the term of Members was lengthened to 4 years, the office would seek the man instead of the man seeking the office. Persons with the most satisfactory qualifications and background do not feel that they can afford to lay aside their business or profession for such a short tenure of service, coupled with the possibilities of meeting defeat at the end of 2 years' service. As a result of this attitude on the part of the better qualified persons, the office is frequently sought by persons of insufficient training, experience, and background. The result, of course, is the lowering of the standard of efficiency in the greatest law-making body in the world.

Second. The Federal Government has grown to such large proportions that Members cannot do much more than learn the rules during their first term, which is largely an apprenticeship. The duties devolving upon the Members of the House of Representatives are multiplied many times in comparison with the duties devolved upon Members in the earlier years of the history of our country. Some Members of the Seventy-fourth Congress, who have served for more than 20 years, say that their problems and duties have multiplied several fold in the past 20 years. Correspondence has increased from a mere handful of letters each day to hundreds of letters every day.

The departments of the Government have expanded in such proportions that frequently Members of the House of Representatives find it necessary to spend half their time in the departments trying to work out problems with officials and problems which concern the interests of their constituency.

It has been said that the enormous amount of work which piles upon Members of the House frequently makes them errand boys. During my first term as a Member of the House I received more than 10,000 letters from persons requesting my aid and assistance in securing jobs. These letters, for the most part, were from sincere, honest, and conscientious constituents. Many of them could not be handled by the secretaries but required my personal attention.

During the course of a year Members of the House receive thousands of letters from their constituents pertaining to pending legislation. Constituents are interested to know the various provisions of pending bills. They have a right to know. It is a matter of impossibility for Members to find time to properly study legislation or to do their committee work. Since legislation in the House of Representatives is largely the work of committees, it is highly important that Members attend the committee meetings. All too frequently Members have conflicting committee meetings and do not have time to study legislation. Requests from their constituents to go to various departments and look after hundreds of problems takes a great deal of time. If Members attend their committee meetings, study the legislation, and acquire the proper background and keep themselves informed on important measures which affect their districts and the whole country, they, in turn, must neglect hundreds of duties which they properly and justly owe their constituents.

If Members were elected for 4 years, the time, thought, and work which they devote to reelection every 2 years could be devoted to their duties while in office and the benefits to the whole country would be most wholesome. Although my district is largely agricultural, I find it necessary to study and familiarize myself with legislation relating to industry, mining, banking, foreign and domestic commerce, tariff, and various and sundry other subjects. Members of Congress represent the whole country, as well as their districts. Legislation of national importance requires considerable thought and study.

Third. Elections are expensive, both to Members and to the general public. The taxpayers have to bear their share of the expense in connection with primaries and elections. Four-year terms for Members of the House will certainly be more economical.

Fourth. History substantiates the fact that a 4-year term for the Members of the House of Representatives was advocated by several members of the Constitutional Convention. Some of the members argued for and contended for 4-year terms for Members of the House of Representatives. It must be remembered that the Nation in 1789 was an exceedingly small country compared to our Nation of today. Most of the Representatives in Congress at that time lived only a short distance from the Capitol in Washington, D. C. Their problems were fewer and much less complicated than are the problems of today.

Fifth. The outstanding reason which I submit in defense of the legislation proposed in House Joint Resolution 51 is as follows:

(a) The executive branch of the Federal Government has a 4-year term to execute the will of the people as it is reflected through and expressed by the legislative branch.

(b) The judicial branch of the Federal Government has 4-year terms, for the most part, among county, circuit, and district judges, with a life tenure for judges of the Supreme Court of the United States.

(c) Members of the United States Senate, which is one division of the legislative branch of the Federal Government, are elected for 6-year terms.

The legislative branch of the Federal Government is essentially and fundamentally the most important of the three branches of Government. The judicial and executive branches are secondary in importance for the reason that they merely seek to properly adjudicate and execute the decisions of the legislative branch of the Government, which in turn is the expressed will of the people reduced to law. All appropriations must originate in the House of Representatives. Before the judicial branch of the Government can act on questions of litigation, and before the executive branch can undertake to execute the laws, the legislative branch must necessarily have preceded them by legislating the expressed will of the people into law.

The question, therefore, arises, if it is advisable for the executive and judicial branches of the Federal Government to be given 4-year tenures in which to adjudicate and execute the wishes of the people in terms of judicial and executive procedure, then why is it not as equally wise and important that the legislative branch be given at least 4 years in which to carry out the expressed will of the people in a legislative capacity? In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, the question answers itself. In the light of reason, logic, facts, and circumstances I cannot see any justification for continuing the time-worn and wholly unsatisfactory method of electing Members of the House of Representatives every 2 years, while on the contrary I can think of many reasons which justify 4-year terms for the Members of the House.

Sixth. Twenty-three States elect their Governors for 4-year terms, and most county officials in all the States are elected for 4-year terms. If the people find it advantageous to provide 4-year terms in their local self-government, then certainly this is all the more a greater reason why their system of local self-government should be extended through the Federal Government to Members of the House of Representatives.

Seventh. May I call your attention to the following excerpt taken from my five-point platform submitted on July 12, 1934, to the citizens of my district. I quote as follows:

If you endorse the following simple platform I will appreciate your support for a second term: (1) Introducing and sponsoring a bill to make the term of Members of the House of Representatives in Congress 4 years instead of 2 years.

I may add, Mr. Chairman, that I honestly and conscientiously believe in the merits of this legislation, and it is my opinion that the majority of the citizens of my congressional district are also convinced that the legislation is meritorious and should forthwith be enacted into law.

Eighth. The initiation of legislation by the executive branch of the Government, through its departments, carries with it the inferential power of legislating and the increasing tendency of delegation of legislative power to the executive branch of the Government is rapidly subordinating the legislative branch. There is some justification for this delegation of power in time of war or during an extreme economic crisis such as existed from 1929 through 1932; however, it is equally important that the receding period not be overlooked or delayed. Four-year terms will have a beneficial effect in helping to restore the lost power and prestige of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEEN. I yield to the chairman of my committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the gentleman whether he would prefer to have all the Members elected the same year or have half of them elected every 2 years, so as always to have experienced men in Congress?

Mr. DEEN. I think it would be better to have half of them elected every 2 years, because we would need the experienced men.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage of Representatives, the Delegate from Hawaii, and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, and for expenses of the Delegate from Alaska and the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, $175,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee: On page 11, strike out lines 13, 14, 15, and 16.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the fact that this may not be a very popular move on my part. I hope I may not be misunderstood by my colleagues.

I am taking this position: The mileage fixed for the Members of the House was set way back in 1860 or 1866, I believe. At that time it was expensive to travel. We did not have the roads, the automobiles, or the railroads. There was some excuse for rather liberal compensation as mileage to the Members of the House and Senate at that time.

I think the Membership of the House can well afford to begin to set an example of economy and retrenchment in expenses. If we are to ever come back, in my judgment, we will have to practice more rigid economy and have less expense in government, and, surely, the Membership of the House can afford to set this kind of example for other public officials throughout the Nation.

It is with this in view, Mr. Chairman, that we on Capitol Hill here in Washington may set the precedent of undertaking to share the burdens of the taxpayers back home.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNYDER. When the Economy Act was passed by the Congress it was for the purpose of reducing expenses. It reduced our salaries 15 percent, and I should like to know whether the gentleman voted for or against the Economy Act.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I voted against the Economy Act, for I was pledged to support the soldiers.

Mr. SNYDER. That is it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I did that; yes.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER. What does the gentleman's amendment propose?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. To strike out the $175,000 for mileage allowed the Membership under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CARPENTER. It strikes out all mileage?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER. I wish to say to the gentleman that I have introduced a bill reducing the mileage to 10 cents a mile, or, in other words, just cutting it in two.

I wish further to state to the gentleman that I voted against the Economy Act because I thought it was unjust to the veterans, but at that session of Congress I refunded to the Government $242 of mileage, all that I did not expend out of my mileage above the cost of my traveling to Washington in my own car for which I made no charge, and furthermore, I refunded the Government $1,000 by check out of my salary in addition to the $242, reducing my salary to $7,500. I also made a calculation so that for the next 10 months of the second year I would receive the same amount of salary.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I want to commend my colleague for that sacrifice upon his part.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I am wondering if the gentleman would not admit that his amendment is somewhat discriminatory against the delegation from California?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. If the House does not concur in the idea of striking out the entire mileage, I agree with my colleague on the right that certainly no one of us can insist that we are entitled to any more mileage than the actual expense of travel incident to going and coming to our respective residences.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may again be reported.

The Clerk read the Mitchell amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK HIRE, MEMBERS AND DELEGATES

For clerk hire necessarily employed by each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, in the discharge of his official and representative duties, in accordance with the act entitled "An act to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government", approved June 20, 1929, $2,200,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, after line 19, insert "That no part of this appropriation shall be available to any Member who employs his next of kin within the third degree."

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I realize that this is not a popular move on my part. I have not a doubt that the Membership of this House suffers very greatly in the public estimation because of the current rumor that many Members have immediate members of their family on the pay roll.

In these days of unemployment, when we are appropriating millions of dollars for those who are suffering, and trying to make available positions for our fellow men, I feel sure that every Member of the House will concede that it is nothing but just and right that with the compensation we receive one member of the family ought to be satisfied with the salary he receives and not place any other member of his family on the pay roll.

I am glad to say that it is not practiced as much as it formerly was. I was elected a Member of the House 4 years ago, and at that time it was flagrant and practiced much, not only at this end of the Capitol but at the other end of the Capitol.

Today, perhaps, there are fewer members of the family on the pay roll than before. I want to commend my colleagues for that, but surely we owe it to ourselves here on Capitol Hill to quit the practice altogether.

Some of the States bar it under their constitutions. In Missouri and Oklahoma and in some other States it is not constitutional to put members of their own family on the pay roll.

When I go before the Committee on Accounts, I propose to amend my bill on nepotism so as to prevent the heads of bureaus from appointing their sons-in-law and their daughters-in-law and other members of the family on the pay roll. It has been practiced too long, and I hope that you will vote for my amendment as an example for other officials, both State and county, in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee) there were 18 ayes and 82 noes. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Would it be in order at this time to offer an amendment to make this effective as of today but not retroactive?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would first have to see the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I have not one prepared.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Office Buildings: For maintenance, including equipment, miscellaneous items, and all necessary services, $346,694, of which sum $6,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 15, strike out "$346,694" and insert in lieu thereof "$347,894", and in the same line strike out "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,200."

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is agreeable to the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. It adds $1,200 for the purpose of buying steel shelving in one of the rooms under the charge of the Architect of the Capitol for storing books. Under the terms of the bill we allowed $1,000 for additional steel shelving, and they requested $2,200. We are now giving them under the terms of my amendment the full $2,200 in order that all the steel shelving in this particular room may be purchased at one time. I hope the Committee will agree to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE SERVICE

To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, including not to exceed $5,700 for employees engaged on piecework and work by the day or hour at rates to be fixed by the Librarian, $87,990.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TABER: Page 31, line 9, after the word "Librarian", strike out "$87,990" and insert in lieu thereof "$77,990."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed to strike out that scheme which would provide for digesting bills by the Legislative Reference Service in the Congressional Library. In my opinion that service should be performed by the clerks of the committees of the House, and when a bill comes on the floor the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member should digest for their respective sides the merits of the bill, if it is an important bill. For less important bills the clerks of the committees should do this work. I can see no excuse for having clerks in a lot of these committees unless they do this work. It seems to me it is absolutely unnecessary and a waste of the people's money to provide $10,000 additional for this work, which will destroy the efficiency of the committees and the efficiency of the clerks. I think from the standpoint of legislative assistance, if we are going to have a digest that is dependable, it must come from those who have studied and who are in the habit of studying some particular phase of bills, and the clerks to our committees, if they are going to serve a useful function, are the best people to do that work and to do it right. I hope the Committee will adopt this amendment and prevent our embarking upon a service of this character.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. We have proposed this new service in the hope of being helpful to Members of the House. It is a matter for the House to decide. If it does not care to embark on this activity, the House can settle the question by a vote. We have thought it will be helpful. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] speaks about the possibility that the clerks may perform this service. The clerks of Members and even of committees are not expert in the law or on purely legislative matters. It is proposed to have over there in the Library a very small personnel who will be able to make an accurate digest or syllabus of every public bill when it is introduced, and likewise a little more extended syllabus of a bill when it is reported from the committee, and these digests or syllabi will be delivered automatically once a week to every Member of the House, so that each Member may have this information for his own use and may readily be able to answer correspondents who present inquiries in regard to legislation and particular bills. Then they will have this information in a comprehensive digested form at hand at all times. We all know that when Congress meets there is a flood of bills and that no individual Member can possibly undertake to ascertain the meaning of one-quarter of them. This information will be presented in concise form to every Member for his use as a Member and for his use in answering correspondents. We believe it has the germ of a very good service. It is a very slight outlay. We think it is advisable to undertake it and try it out. If it does not work, at the end of a year we can drop this appropriation out of the bill. We believe it is worth trying, but, as I said before, after all it is a matter for the House to decide and the House can decide by a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 29, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BULWINKLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8021) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. LUDLOW, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VISITING FARMERS

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Capital has been visited this week by more than 4,000 bronze-faced farmers of the Nation, coming from every agricultural State and representing every class of agriculture, and having come upon their own time and at their own expense; and Whereas it is an unprecedented occurrence in that it is the first delegation of such proportions to ever visit the Nation's Capital without seeking special privileges or without having come to oppose or condemn or denounce something; and

Whereas this vast delegation of producers from all parts of our land have come here to say to the President and to the Congress, "We thank you", and to say to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, "We approve of your administration of the laws affecting agriculture and agricultural products"; and

Whereas such voluntary pilgrimage of good will and evidence of cooperation between the producers of our Nation and the officers who make and who execute the laws tends to a better understanding and a better Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States of America expresses its appreciation of the visit of this delegation of farmers who carried an agriculture good-will message to the Nation's Capital and to the Executive and legislative officers of this Government; and further, the House of Representatives expresses its confidence in the agricultural population of this Nation and in the industry to which such population is committed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to its consideration at this time.

THE WAGNER-CONNERY LABOR-DISPUTES BILL

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as part of my remarks a letter which I have written to a constituent upon the subject of the Wagner labor-disputes bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter written by me to a constituent upon the subject of the Wagner-Connery labor-disputes bill:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1935.

Mr. R. E. POWELL,
Care Humble Oil & Refining Co., Baytown, Tex.

DEAR MR. POWELL: Your letter of the 10th instant is received and is welcome and has been read with care and interest concerning the Wagner-Connery labor-disputes bill.

Every vote I have cast here has shown that I would not overtax and never confiscate capital or property. They show that I recognize as fully as any man living that our capitalistic system is the best system ever devised, and, of course, I know that profit is the proper reward and service is the justification of business and industry.

After 12 years of misrule and robbery and pillaging of the public, we found the country bankrupt and ruined when we took charge on March 4, 1933. Our first acts were to save the banks, the railroads, the building-and-loan companies, the insurance companies, and all legitimate big business enterprises—and they were all broke except oil. We have saved 1,000,000 homes and hundreds of thousands of farms from foreclosure. We have voted for and lifted the pay of labor. We have brought producers' prices up above cost.

But no sooner do we get business and industry saved and under way than there is a great centering here in Washington—every hotel is full day in and day out, week in and week out—of the agents and attorneys and lobbyists whose business we saved, trying now to make us stop the new deal so that they can again make peons out of producers and make slaves out of labor.

I wish I could talk it out with you as there is not space or opportunity to write it fully. For one, I rebel at their propaganda that we stop the new deal and again turn the country over to their tender mercies.

If all the management were like the Humble's management, and like you treat your 2,500 employees, then what you say in your letter might be followed. But it is not, Mr. Powell. After 2 weeks' hearings in our Labor Committee, such brutal disregard of the rights of helpless men who work was conclusively proven to exist in the great industrial plants of the North, that I know we must either protect labor or labor would be enslaved completely. Those manufacturers want to make all the money, and at the expense of producer and labor; and I remarked in committee that if big business and intensified industry made brutes of men like that, then I hoped Texas would remain a cow ranch.

In the industrial sections of the country they have ignored section 7 (a) of the N. R. A., and have put forth spurious unions of their own for themselves to deal with, under false construction of 7 (a) by Mr. Richberg. Now they want to kill N. R. A. and kill A. A. A.—after we have started the country up prosperously again—so that they can make peons of labor and peasants of farmers, so that big business, under the dominance of Wall Street, can make even bigger profits at the expense of labor and producers.

For instance, in the 10-year period from 1924 to 1934 four big cigarette makers, like Camel's, Lucky Strike, Chesterfield, and others, while paying the management enormous salaries, and while paying tobacco growers less and less until they were bankrupt, and while paying all taxes and interests and all labor and material and freight and expenses, decreased the pay per hour, let out one-third to one-half of their employees, lengthened the hours of work, and yet paid dividends of $769,000,000. It is pitiable the conditions to which they drove their workers. Contrast that with the beautiful and noble way in which you and the Humble have treated your employees. The automobile industry is equally harsh, and big manufacturing in the East universally so.

If we do not perfect section 7 (a) in these labor bills and enact it, so as to preserve minimum wages, maximum hours, the right of collective bargaining through their own union of their own choosing, so that fraudulent company unions cannot chisel, and the continued abolition of child labor, the new deal might as well never have been started and carried so far toward general success and prosperity; and if the processing tax levied under the A. A. A. is thrown out, as the cotton manufacturers are trying to do, to make for themselves the additional 4.2 cents per pound on raw cotton purchased and processed, denying that benefit to the producer, the cotton producer, the wheat, hog, and corn producers, will again be bankrupt; and thus both labor and producer will have no purchasing power and there would soon be chaos in the country again.

For that reason, my dear friend, I cannot agree with the well-intentioned point of view and recommendation in your welcome letter. I want to fix it so that labor must be treated with human justice by those who will otherwise oppress it, just as you and the Humble do not oppress, and so that producer is not robbed for the benefit of manufacturer or anybody else. Then we will have justice and general prosperity and universal buying power, with consequent happiness in the land. Surely industry itself will vastly profit by this just course, with contented labor and with contented producers and general prosperity, rather than a short period with exorbitant dividends taken out of the blood and sweat of the producer and labor.

Your mind and your heart and my mind and my heart want the same results, which is justice and protection for capital and justice and protection for labor and producer. The difference is that because you and your good money are just I suppose you think industry as a whole are just toward labor and producer, when the indisputable evidence, after studying it for 2 years in its minute details, shows me that the weak must be protected from industry as a whole, for they do oppress it, they do underpay it, they do overwork it, they do turn it out on the streets to starve when they desire, and they do employ their fake company unions as a pretense of a real union to deal with as to wages and hours of labor and working conditions, and do fire men without mercy and unjustly if they do not kneel down and obey.

Mine is an awful responsibility, Mr. Powell. If I could look at matters as a politician, thinking first of myself, I would have far less trouble; but I have to think and feel and act as I have the mind and heart and resolution. And I have given you in substance the reasons why I am going to do all I can to perfect section 7 (a) to safeguard the just rights of labor against the inhuman greed of all too many in industry who exploit labor.

I hope this does not result in any breach between you and me, because I like you and feel friendly toward you, but I must follow the right as I see the right, agreeing when I can agree and differing when I must.

With kind regards and best wishes, sincerely yours,
JOE H. EAGLE.

ALLOTMENT OF WORK-RELIEF FUNDS IN ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, some of the newspapers this morning, in articles concerning the allotment of relief work funds in the total amount of $1,000,000,000 made yesterday by the President upon the recommendation of the Advisory Allotment Board, contained an item to the effect that the Department of the Interior had been allotted $446,500 for an anchorage and 30 miles of road in the newly colonized Matanuska Valley, Alaska.

The statement so made is in part erroneous. Allotments were really set up in the total amount of $446,500 for the construction of roads in that region. One a road to connect the city of Anchorage, Alaska, with the Matanuska Valley, the sum allotted therefor being $326,500, and the other for extending the system of roads already existing in the Matanuska Valley in order to give service to the new settlers in the sum of $120,000.

No money whatsoever was allotted, or is likely to be allotted, for any anchorage or any harbor project in the immediate vicinity of the Matanuska settlement, since there is no need for undertaking any such work.

The city of Anchorage is situated about 36 miles from the lower end of the Matanuska Valley. Several years ago construction work was commenced on a projected road to connect the city of Anchorage with the Valley, and approximately $120,000 has heretofore been spent on this road. Part of this money was contributed by the residents of Anchorage, part by the Territory, and part by the Public Works Administration.

The building of this road has long been under contemplation, and in the year 1927 the Alaska Legislature passed an act appropriating $200,000 for the construction of a road to connect Anchorage with the Matanuska Valley. However, the act was afterward declared invalid for some reason and the money was never directly reappropriated.

Over a period of years in the past approximately 120 miles of roads have been constructed in the Matanuska Valley to connect the principal farms and small settlements in that region. The completion of the road between Anchorage and Matanuska will serve to connect with Anchorage the system of roads already existing in the valley, as well as the new roads which will be built for the settlers recently arriving there. This road is a vital part of the settlement program and, in my opinion, the success of the settlement would be greatly handicapped if the road were not built.

The road has been on the program of the Alaska Road Commission, which is the Federal road-building agency in Alaska for all roads built in the Territory outside of national-forest areas, for a number of years. It is not a new or a strange thing, and I am confident that every person informed about this region believes that the building of the road is not only advisable but really necessary in the development of that part of the Territory and almost equally necessary for the success of the colony just established in the Matanuska Valley. Eventually, I believe this system of roads will be extended to the Willow Creek mining district, and possibly also to the coal mines on Moose Creek.

Moreover, the undertaking of this road work, since it is expected that approximately 500 men will be employed in the work, will materially help to relieve unemployment in that immediate region of Alaska. The project complies with every one of the fundamental policies laid down by the President concerning the use of funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 20, 1935.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution relating to a dairy program that will protect the dairy industry

Whereas the dairy industry, having no control program, is now being handicapped due to the fact that land taken out of production by the various control programs may be used for the growing of dairy feeds; and

Whereas the growing of cattle feeds on such land will give an overproduction of dairy products: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Dairy Department of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration be urged to inaugurate a dairy program which will protect the dairy industry and prevent overproduction by prohibiting the land taken out of production by other crop-control programs from being used for the growing of dairy crops; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, and to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from Clifford Milligan, of Dayton, Tenn., relative to the operation of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration in Dayton and Rhea County, Tenn., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Starlight Youth Branch, American League Against War and Fascism, New York City, N. Mr. NORRIS presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolution concerning cooperation in the President's program

Whereas there is in existence a Nation-wide emergency productive of wide-spread unemployment and disorganization of industry, which has burdened commerce, affected the public welfare, undermined the standards of living, and reduction of living wages; and

Whereas the President and Congress have inaugurated and established a far-reaching reconstruction program to alleviate the sufferings resultant from unemployment, to realign industry, and to correct the maladjustments to our economic life, all for the purpose of bringing about a speedy return of prosperity: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives assembled in regular session, That we appreciate fully this great reconstruction program and are grateful to Congress and to the President for the help afforded the State of Nebraska, especially our farming communities; and

Resolved further, That we are desirous of cooperating to the fullest extent with the President and with Congress in every way; and

Therefore urge upon our Senators to take, as early as possible, final action upon such measures now pending in their honorable body that will bring immediate relief to our Nation's aged, particularly as this legislature is anxiously waiting for such action in order to carry out this State's part in meeting the Federal requirements; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be placed upon our records and a copy of same sent to the President of the United States and copies to the Nebraska Members of the national Congress.

Mr. NORRIS also presented a resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, memorializing Congress to enact the so-called "Nye-Sweeney bill", being the bill (S. 2162) to restore to Congress its constitutional power to issue money and regulate the value thereof; to provide for the orderly distribution of the abundance with which a beneficent Creator has blessed us; to establish and maintain the purchasing power of money at a fixed and equitable level; to restore the values of property to just and equitable levels; to increase the price of agricultural products to a point where they will yield the cost of production plus a fair profit to the farmer; to provide a living and just annual wage which will enable every citizen willing to work and capable of working to maintain and educate his family on an increasing level or standard of living; to repay debts with dollars of equal value; to lift in part the burden of taxation; and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 16th instant, p. 7642, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Boston and vicinity, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the prompt enactment of social-security legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Aerie No. 399 of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, of Marlboro, Mass., favoring the enactment of old-age-pension legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Bay State Division, No. 413, Order of Railway Conductors of America; General Office Lodge, No. 71, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, and sundry citizens, all of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act for 1 year, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of the so-called "Patman bonus bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred resolutions adopted by the General Court of Massachusetts, memorializing Congress in favor of making additional appropriations for use by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for continuing its activities.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of additional appropriations of money for use by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in continuing its activities

Resolved, That the general court hereby records itself in favor of the appropriation by the Congress of the United States of additional funds for use by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, so that said Corporation may continue its activities for the benefit of distressed home owners, and particularly those whose applications for loans from said Corporation were filed and pending when said Corporation ceased making loans; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth forthwith forward copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

TAX ON CIGARETTES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I also present and ask to have printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred resolutions adopted by the General Court of Massachusetts, memorializing Congress for the enactment of legislation to substitute another tax for the discriminatory tax on cigarettes selling at a low price.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions memorializing Congress for the enactment of Federal legislation to substitute another tax for the discriminatory tax on cigarettes selling at a low price

Whereas the imposition of a Federal tax at the same rate on 10-cent cigarettes as is imposed on cigarettes selling at 15 and 20 cents strengthens the power of the tobacco trust, known as "the big four", tends toward monopoly and threatens to eliminate from the market the lower-priced product used by the great majority of consumers, and which is union made under clean and healthful conditions established by collective bargaining in line with the new deal, so called, and comprising 90 percent of the workers in the industry; and

Whereas the fate of the 10-cent cigarette and of a majority of the workers on and of small manufacturers of cigarettes hangs in the balance until this issue is settled: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to repeal the present unfair and discriminatory tax burden and to impose, in lieu of the present tax, levied according to volume, of $3 per thousand cigarettes, or 6 cents per package of 20, regardless of the selling price of the same, a tax of $2.70 per thousand on 10-cent cigarettes, of $3 per thousand on 15-cent cigarettes, and of $3.30 per thousand on higher-priced cigarettes, as provided in pending Federal legislation, the Secretary of the Treasury having recommended such change in tax and having stated that it would protect and maintain Federal revenues; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded forthwith by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts.

FREE SPEECH, FREE ASSEMBLY, AND FREE PRESS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, with the names of the signers, a petition signed by 272 clergymen representing three faiths—Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish—requesting the Senate Committee on the Judiciary to make an investigation as to how far, if at all, the constitutional liberties of free speech, free assembly, and free press are being encroached upon from any source.

There being no objection, the petition, together with the names of the signers, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, the undersigned clergymen of three faiths—Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish—and citizens of all parts of the United States, urge the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States to make an investigation of conditions throughout the country that limit the liberties guaranteed to citizens of the United States under the Constitution. We feel impelled solemnly to warn the Nation against the imminent dangers which threaten our constitutional liberties of free speech, free assembly, and a free press.

We unite in condemning as un-American what appears to be an organized and wide-spread effort to induce both Congress and the several States to pass laws designed further to restrict free speech, free assemblage, and a free press.

Some of the organizations sponsoring this repressive legislation are, no doubt, sincere in their patriotic purpose of defending Americanism, but they appear to be strangely ignorant of this country's historical principles of freedom and are now advocating measures which would in the end tend to destroy the very foundations of the Republic.

Other organizations appear to be moved by a desire to repress demands for economic change on the part of labor and to maintain the special privileges and power which they now enjoy. They wrongly identify the present economic system with those principles of democracy for which this country stands but which have not yet been extended fully to industrial relations and the economic well-being of the masses of our people. They appear to be unaware that the purpose of the Constitution of our country was not to protect the rights and privileges of any single economic class, but—in the words of the preamble—"to promote the general welfare." Our forefathers felt that the only safeguard to liberty for all was freedom of expression. This is the very essence of Americanism.

We are opposed to the use of force and violence. It is for that very reason that we feel impelled to point out that to enact measures which would exclude any political party—no matter what its aims—from the ballot, would have the effect of encouraging violent action on the part of those groups against whom the door to orderly political action had been closed.

Other bills which are being advocated go even further and could be construed in such a way as to restrict the very freedom of the pulpit to speak in the name of conscience against war and those preparations for war which lead to it.

We feel that once the bars set up by the founders of our Nation against restricting free speech are let down, the way will be open for further and further encroachments upon the liberties of our people, until we may be forced to tread the bitter road of dictatorship with its denial of the very fundamentals of American democracy. While the proposed measures are at present ostensibly aimed at extremists, the recent experience of other countries shows that once the civil liberty of the most extreme group has been removed, the rights of organized labor, of liberals, and of the churches have also gone down in rapid succession. Let us beware lest in the name of Americanism, we allow the destruction of our most precious American traditions. Both the Fascists and the Communists deny the rights of free speech in countries which they control, but we should abhor their common practice in this regard and should scorn to adopt their methods of suppression in our free land.

Still more strongly do we condemn those outbursts of violence and lawless suppression of civil liberty by organized vigilantes and armed mobs which have occurred in a number of our States. Such demonstrations are a disgrace to our country and a denial of the very patriotism in whose name these acts have often been committed.

We therefore call upon the people of our respective faiths to arouse themselves at once to these dangers which threaten our American liberties, and to exert their immediate influence as citizens for the preservation and maintenance of the rights and responsibilities of free speech, free assembly, and a free press, and the encouragement of free communication of mind with mind as essential to the discovery of truth and the maintenance of our American form of Government.

SUGAR AND THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, on May 3, 1935, a meeting of farmers and community committeemen was held at Greeley, Colo., with 158 farmers present, representing 2,550 sugar-beet contract signers, 1,222 wheat-contract signers, and 740 corn-hog contract signers of various sugar-beet control associations, the Weld County Wheat Production Control Association, and the Weld County Corn-Hog Control Association.

At the meeting certain resolutions were unanimously adopted in support of the sugar law of May 9, 1934, the production-control programs of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

I ask that these resolutions may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following and as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the sugar markets of the United States have been overwhelmed with the entry of free sugars into the United States from this country's insular possessions; and

Whereas as a result of the offering of these free sugars the price of sugar had reached such a low figure that beet farmers were losing the home markets and were attempting to produce sugar beets at ruinous prices which were far from production costs and parity prices; and

Whereas the Jones-Costigan Act, by means of quotas and processing taxes, guarantees farmers not only the cost of production but parity prices per ton: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the representatives of the Sugar Beet Production Control Association for the factory districts of Weld County approve the Jones-Costigan Act and appeal to Congress to enact such further provisions to the act as will make it more effective and also that the benefits of the Agricultural Adjustment Act through amendments proposed in Congress be extended to other groups of producers.

J. E. HUMPHREY,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Whereas House bill 7160 and Senate bill 2228 propose to provide funds on an annual basis to States to carry out the activities of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, experiment stations, and extension activities; and

Whereas the board of directors of the Weld County Sugar Beet Production Control Association of the Windsor factory district is meeting in Greeley for the purpose of considering the benefits to agriculture of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the proposed above-mentioned bill; and

Whereas the expressed opinion of the members of the board is that the act through its various production-control programs now in effect has and is accomplishing the purpose of the act, but in order that the act may be more effective by the continuation of extension activities: Therefore be it

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Representatives and Senators from Colorado, the Governor of the State of Colorado, members of the State board of agriculture, the National Chamber of Commerce, the Denver Chamber of Commerce, and the Greeley Chamber of Commerce.

J. E. HUMPHREY,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Whereas amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act now pending in Congress propose:

1. To make the act more effective for groups of farmers, including producers of dairy products, vegetables, wool, and other special crops, who otherwise would not be helped.

3. To provide for the coordination of commodity loans and production adjustment programs with a view to safeguarding the interests of both producers and consumers through the ever-normal granary plan.

4. To protect consumers against unwarranted price increases by processors and handlers of farm products; and

Whereas we, the members of the Weld County Corn-Hog Production Control Association, the Weld County Wheat Production Control Association, and the Weld County Sugar Beet Control Association, in meeting in Greeley for the purpose of considering the benefits to agriculture of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the proposed amendments; and

Whereas the expressed opinion of the members of the several associations is that the act, through its various production-control programs now in effect and marketing agreements already approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, has accomplished the purposes intended, but that in order for other groups of producers to be eligible to participate in the benefits of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and also to make the act more effective: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge Congress to speedily approve the amendments as proposed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and petition our representatives in Congress to work for the early adoption of the amendments; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Colorado Representatives in Congress, the Governor of the State of Colorado, and members of the State board of agriculture, also the National Chamber of Commerce, Denver Chamber of Commerce, the Greeley Chamber of Commerce, Greeley, Colo.

R. I. SHAKLEE,
Secretary-Treasurer.

ALLEGED USE OF MEXICAN LABOR IN MICHIGAN BEET FIELDS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there have recently, within the last 2 or 3 weeks, been recurrent stories about the use of Mexican labor in the Michigan beet fields. The subject is of deep importance, and there is no truth whatever in these recurrent tales. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Isabella Sugar Co., of Mount Pleasant, Mich., completely refuting the entire story.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ISABELLA SUGAR CO.,
Mount Pleasant, Mich., May 16, 1935.

It is refreshing to have some one submit a direct inquiry asking for actual details in connection with the recent publicity given the hiring of Mexican labor in Michigan beet fields. Apparently this was not the purpose of those responsible for the glaring publicity which was given to the unfortunate accident involving a truck load of laborers who were migrating to Michigan to obtain work in the Michigan beet fields. A most ridiculous interview was picked up from some irresponsible source shortly after the accident, although 100 percent wrong as to facts.

In this purported interview our company was credited with the most astounding activities, such as engaging in the importation of Mexicans and Indians, paying $15 per head to have them smuggled into this country, arranging for their transportation, and even retaining an attorney to look after our interests in the matter of the accident itself, every word of which was of course totally and completely untrue.

We deny every detail of the statement that was made, as we knew nothing whatever of the accident nor of the people involved. They affected surprise to learn that the truck load of laborers were evidently a group of Mexicans living in Texas who had no doubt been recruited by some labor leader who made a business of bringing laborers to Michigan about this time every year. These leaders promise to secure work for the laborers in the beet fields, with the understanding that those who obtained work would pay them something for getting jobs for them. This we presumed to be the situation with that group, and subsequent developments disclosed that such was exactly the case. It was proved that our company was not involved and that all of the group were American citizens, most of them born in Texas, who had just as much right to go from one State to another to seek employment as I have, as you have, or as the President of the United States has. To my knowledge, however, the Associated Press had made no attempt to broadcast this information after it was disclosed.

Because we fully realized the damaging effect that the widespread publishing of this unfortunate misinformation might have upon the beet-sugar industry, we insisted that the United States Immigration authorities and the State welfare authorities send representatives immediately into this area to investigate the whole labor situation in our beet fields and obtain the true facts first hand. In response to this request three investigators were sent up here from the Immigration and welfare departments at Lansing. After spending 2 days driving out among our growers and personally interviewing them, and after questioning practically all the laborers in this area of Mexican descent who are employed by our beet growers, they failed to find even one who was not a resident of this county or who had not a perfect right to be here and to hold the job he had. They found no aliens, to our knowledge.

Further than this, the welfare investigation revealed the hitherto unpublished fact that our growers had already arranged to hire every available worker on the welfare roll in Isabella County who could and would work, and had taken every available laborer in this whole area whom they could find unemployed and who was willing to work in the beet fields, with the result that the sum total of the whole group available in this county was sufficient to care for only about 4,000 acres of beets out of a planted acreage of 15,300 acres. They found also that the balance of the workers required were being recruited from Detroit, Pontiac, Port Huron, and every place in Michigan where help was known to be available. This is the manner in which labor has been assembled for the past 25 or 30 years. They discovered that a good many people migrate up here from other States every year, knowing that this work is here and that they can obtain jobs if they are willing to work. Out of about 1,500 laborers required by our growers to take care of their beets this year, it was revealed that approximately 200 or so migrated up here from Texas, most of whom had been here previously and no doubt went directly back to the same farms they had worked on before. The investigators found that this group of Mexicans which figured in the accident was part of the group which made up this estimated number of 200.

So that is all there is to this whole matter concerning which so much has been said, and concerning which so much misinformation has been broadcast throughout the country. But the strangest part of it is that there has been no broadcasting of the true facts which were revealed as a result of the investigation that was made.

Sincerely yours,

ISABELLA SUGAR CO.,
By H. A. VALLEZ,
President and General Manager.

PROPAGATION OF UNAMERICAN DOCTRINES

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it be read, printed, and properly referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 140), as follows:

Whereas the press carries an extended report showing that communistic and socialistic doctrines are being spread among the members of the Civilian Conservation Corps camps, and that newspapers are being published in these camps, reflecting favorable comment on such doctrine; and

Whereas it is authoritatively reported that communistic and socialistic doctrines are being taught by various instructors in various sections of the country, by teachers and instructors whose salaries are being paid from the Federal Emergency Relief funds; and

Whereas there is a growing tendency in various bureaus and departments of the Government, including the Department of Education, to further socialistic and communistic teachings and instruction: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a special committee is hereby authorized to be appointed by the President of the Senate and directed to make an investigation as to whether or not public officials are permitting the use of public funds for such purposes as heretofore suggested; whether or not they are in sympathy with the teaching of such doctrine; and whether or not Federal funds are being used for the publication of such various subversive papers and pamphlets; and whether or not such instructions and publications seek for their purpose to discredit our form of government and seek to substitute another form of government therefor.

That said committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the result of its findings, with its recommendation, together with suitable legislation remedial of said condition.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Iowa and to the Chair, in view of the terms of the resolution, that probably it should go to the Committee on Education and Labor. The Committee on Appropriations does not legislate. It merely considers appropriations.

Mr. DICKINSON. My reason for suggesting that it go to the Committee on Appropriations was that the committee has already received some data touching upon the subject. If the Democratic leader thinks it should go to the Committee on Education and Labor, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

BACKERS OF THE UNITED STATES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial from the latest issue of Labor on the National Chamber of Commerce and its backers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NORRIS subsequently said: Mr. President, I am informed that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] had printed in the RECORD a few days ago the same editorial which I have this morning asked unanimous consent to have printed. Therefore I withdraw my request.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS—SPEECH BY SENATOR ASHURST

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an address, opposing the censorship of the press, delivered by myself in 1917.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am opposed to a censorship of the press as we have come to know that expression, and I oppose it upon the ground of public policy and upon the ground of constitutionality. I shall discuss the subject, reviewing both aspects of the same as they present themselves to me; that is, from the standpoint of public policy and from the standpoint of its constitutionality.

Press censorships have invariably brought unhappy and in many instances disastrous results. The evil that a censorship creates is more malignant than the evil it seeks to avoid and conceal. If, during the ensuing war, the press should be censored and information as to the progress of the war should go to the public filtered through a censor, we would soon be living in a vapor of suspicion, a cloud of misinformation, a miasma of rumor.

A censorship of the press results in the diffusion and spread of misinformation and idle tales. Under a censorship sensational stories fly apparently on the wings of the wind. The ordinary citizen is practically helpless and knows not what or whom to believe. I do not mean to say that the press is always accurate in its gathering and presentation of facts, or always correct in its interpretation of facts, but in the main it attempts to be correct and seldom is willfully and wantonly unjust. A censorship proposed to be established with the intention and for the purpose of preventing our enemies from obtaining information as to the position and movement of our troops and fleets and the location of munition factories, machine shops, and details of coast defenses would, and no doubt should, meet with general approval.

The people composing the United States Government are now just about to enter upon a stupendous struggle. Events of world-wide importance are following each other so rapidly that they tread upon each other's heels; and sufficient events are transpiring each day to make volumes for the historian of the future.

I wish first to present my view of the censorship in respect to its being an unconstitutional statute as proposed.

The first amendment to the Federal Constitution reads as follows:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; * * *"

Everyone here knows what the word "abridging" means. I need not pause to consider or discuss the meaning of "abridgment."

What does "freedom of the press" mean? It is amazing to note the amount of loose talk—not in the Senate, but throughout the country and in the newspapers—as to what is "freedom of the press" as used in the Constitution of the United States. The average citizen of this Republic who is not a lawyer, from a constitutional standpoint, believes that "freedom of the press" means the right to publish his sentiments just as he pleases. In a large sense that may be true; but in a legalistic sense, and from a constitutional standpoint, that is not entirely accurate. "Freedom of the press" means simply, solely, and only the right to be free from a precensorship—the right to print and publish and have a judicial tribunal by due process of law declare after publication thereof whether or not the article was libelous, obscene, or improper. In other words, under the Constitution as amended by amendment no. 1, "freedom of the press" means that the citizen may publish whatever he sees fit and not be subjected to pains and penalties because he did not consult the censor before publishing. The citizen is left to publish what he pleases, and must take his chances before a court of his country as to whether or not he has published anything libelous or anything that may bring any human being into disrepute or ridicule, or whether he has published anything of a treasonable or obscene nature.

Now, to discover what this phrase "freedom of the press" means, we resort to that method to which lawyers have ever resorted, viz: What was the meaning of the phrase "freedom of the press" when the Constitution of the United States was adopted? When the first amendment was adopted, what did those who adopted the amendment and what did the lawyers of that day say "freedom of the press" meant? What did the reports and the courts of the time say "freedom of the press" meant?

Mr. President, I believe that Sir William Blackstone is a good authority as to what is the common law of England; and the common law of England has been in force in this country since we have been a Nation. It was brought to these shores by the migration hither of our ancestors. This book of Blackstone's Commentaries was written before the adoption of the first amendment, so it is presumed that those who adopted the amendment adopted it with the construction which Blackstone put upon its language and which the common law gave it. I read now from volume 4 of Wendell's Blackstone's Commentaries, page 151, where that great commentator says:

"In this and the other instances which we have lately considered, where blasphemous, immoral, treasonable, schismatical, seditious, or scandalous libels are punished by the English law, some with a greater, other with a less degree of severity, the liberty of the press, properly understood, is by no means infringed or violated. The liberty of the press is, indeed, essential to the nature of a free state; but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications."

Let me read that again: "But this" what? Freedom of the press "consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matter when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequences of his own temerity."

Senators will observe that these words are not the "wild shoutings of some demagogue on the hustings, seeking to arouse public prejudice and get votes." They are the words and the language of the great writer whose works we all study when we attempt to become lawyers. He says: "To subject the press to restrictive power of a licenser, as was formerly done, both before and since the revolution" referring to the English revolution of 1688 "is to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudices of one man and make him the arbitrary and infallible judge of all controversial points in learning, religion, and government. But to punish (as the law does at present)" what law? The common law of England "any dangerous or offensive writings, which, when published, shall, on a fair and impartial trial, be adjudged to be of a pernicious tendency, is necessary for the preservation of peace and good order, of government and religion, the only solid foundations of civil liberty. Thus the will of individuals is still left free; the abuse only of that free will is the object of legal punishment. Neither is any restraint hereby laid upon freedom of thought or inquiry; liberty of private sentiment is still left; the disseminating or making public of bad sentiments, destructive of the ends of society, is the crime which society corrects. A man (says a fine writer on this subject) may be allowed to keep poisons in his closet, but not publicly to vend them as cordials. And to this we may add that the only plausible argument heretofore used for restraining the just freedom of the press, 'that it was necessary to prevent the daily abuse of it', will entirely lose its force when it is shown (by a seasonable exertion of the laws) that the press cannot be abused to any bad purpose without incurring a suitable punishment; whereas it never can be used to any good one when under the control of an inspector. So true will it be found that to censure the licentiousness is to maintain the liberty of the press."

Now, Mr. President, advert to this bill, we find in lines 19, 20, 21, and 22, of page 8, the offensive language. We find there the language which, even though Senators should admit it might apparently be for the common good, offends the Constitution, because the same reads as follows: "Whoever, in time of war" now comes the matter obnoxious to the Constitution "in violation of reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the President, which he is hereby authorized to make and promulgate." It sets up a censor to whom you must go to have your writings visaed or O. K'd, or you are guilty of a crime; and that, in my judgment, is unconstitutional. All the commentators who wrote before the adoption of our Federal Constitution, and nearly all of them who wrote since, agree that "freedom of the press" means freedom from the restraints of a censor; means the liberty and right to publish whatever you wish; but you take chances of punishment in the courts of your country for the violation of the laws of libel and slander.

In 1803 a man named Croswell was tried in the courts of New York for libeling Thomas Jefferson. Croswell printed a scandalous publication. He was arrested, tried, and convicted before one of the nisi prius courts of New York. He took an appeal to the supreme court of the State, the court of last resort in the State at that time being designated the supreme court. The case came before the supreme court, and upon the supreme bench was Chancellor Kent. One of the attorneys, in fact the leading attorney, for the defendant Croswell was Alexander Hamilton. I think that Alexander Hamilton as a constitutional lawyer will compare favorably with some of the lawyers of the Senate. I think we may concede that Alexander Hamilton knew something as to what the Constitution meant. I have here the case, which is reported in Johnson's Cases, third volume, at page 355, et sequitur. I will not pause to read the whole case, but will say that the prosecution urged that under the common law "the greater the truth the greater the libel", and that the defendant thereby was not permitted to prove the truth of his publication.

The question of censorship was discussed, and Hamilton in his argument in February 1804 at Albany—by the way, Hamilton's last great legal argument—pointed out that there was on the part of the attorneys for the prosecution a misconception as to what was the common law. Some lawyers, for instance Lord Mansfield and Lord Raymond, had insisted that the common-law doctrine, "the greater the truth the greater the libel", was a part of the common law. Hamilton pointed out to the satisfaction of the court, and all American lawyers have taken the same view, that "the greater the truth the greater the libel" was part of the "star-chamber rule", which, under the rule of the Stuarts, was injected into the common law and was not the common law.

Hamilton's view has been the view of all the courts of this country. The Legislature of New York in the succeeding year (1805) enacted a law which provided substantially that the truth may be given to the jury in all cases of libel and slander where it is published for good motives and for justifiable ends. Hamilton was of opinion that a censorship violates the liberty of the press, and freedom from censorship means the liberty of the press.

Now, Mr. President, we are not wholly in the dark in our country as to what censorship may mean.

I shall here include in the Record some authorities I have compiled from Words and Phrases (vol. 5, p. 4131, et seq.):

"Liberty of the press", as used in the provision of the Federal Constitution guaranteeing the liberty of the press, etc., means a right in the conduct of a newspaper to print whatever he chooses, without any previous license, but subject to be held responsible therefor to exactly the same extent that anyone else would be responsible for the publication (Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va., 158, 182; 31 Am. Rep., 757; Negley v. Farrow, 60 Md. 158, 175; 45 Am. Rep., 715; Jones v. Townsend's administratrix, 21 Fla. 431, 450; 53 Am. Rep. 676; Upton v. Hume, 33 Pac. 810, 812; 24 Or., 420; 21 L. R. A. 493; 41 Am. St. Rep. 863; Fitzpatrick v. Daily States Pub. Co., South., 173, 179; 48 La. Ann. 1116; Commonwealth v. Buckingham (Mass.) Thacher, Cr. Cas. 29, 39)."

"The liberty of the press was said by Blackstone to consist 'in laying no previous restraints upon publication, and not in freedom from censure for a criminal matter when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public. To forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequences of his own temerity' (Morton v. State, 3 Tex. App. 510, 516 (citing 4 Bl. Comm., side p. 152))."

"In its broadest sense 'freedom of the press' includes not only exemption from censorship but security against laws enacted by the legislative department of the Government or measures resorted to by either of the branches for the purpose of stifling just criticism or muzzling public opinion. It will not apply to a contract for the sale of a newspaper, whereby it was agreed that the seller would not edit, print, or conduct a newspaper, or be connected with one in the State without consent of the purchaser (Cowan v. Fairbrother, 24 S. E. 212, 215; 118 N. C. 406)."

"Freedom of the press" does not mean "a press wholly beyond the reach of the law, for this would be emphatically Pandora's box, the source of every evil. The founders of our governments were too wise and too just ever to have intended by the freedom of the press a right to circulate falsehood as well as truth, or that the press should be the lawful vehicle of malicious defamation, or an engine for evil and designing men to cherish for malicious purposes sedition, irreligion, and impurity. I adopt in this case as perfectly correct the comprehensive and accurate definition of one of the counsel at the bar (General Hamilton) that the liberty of the press consists in the right to publish with impunity truth, with good motives and for justifiable ends, whether it respects government, magistracy, or individuals" (People v. Crosswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 337, 393; State v. Meyers, 21 Wkly. Law Bul. 302; 10 Ohio Dec. 238).

"The constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech and liberty of the press were designed to secure constitutional immunity for the expression of opinion; but that does not mean unrestrained license, nor does it confer the right upon the editor of the newspapers to write or publish whatever he may choose, no matter how false, malicious, or injurious it may be, without full responsibility for the damage it may cause (Fitzpatrick v. Daily States Pub. Co., 20 South. 173, 179; 48 La. Ann. 1116)."

It is a popular thing to say that this must be put through as a "war measure."

Mr. President, this is America, not another country. We forget something of the genius of the American people, if we believe we can censor their sources of information. We must not think for a moment that the Great War in which we are about to engage is going to be carried through successfully by confusing the people or denying them information to which they are entitled.

During the Civil War feeling ran high and censorship was attempted. Indeed, not only was the censorship attempted, but General Burnside seized and suppressed an edition of the Chicago Times, alleging that it was publishing matter treasonable and against the public safety. The edition was stopped, but in the loyal State of Illinois the feeling of the people was so great that the legislature of the State passed a resolution denouncing the act of General Burnside for stopping the edition of the Times, and Lyman Trumbull and Isaac N. Arnold, Lincoln's confidential advisers, urged him to revoke the order at once, and Lincoln revoked it. Not even in the tense and critical periods of our country did the American freemen permit the hands of military authorities to be laid upon the ark of freedom.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator stated, if I understood him correctly, that some people attempted to justify the censorship on the ground that it was a war measure. I wish to ask the Senator if, in his opinion, Congress has any greater power in time of war than it has in time of peace?

Mr. ASHURST. Congress has no greater power in time of war than in time of peace.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator, because the question not only arises now but, in my opinion, will continue to arise as other measures unusual and drastic may be proposed, Does the fact that Congress under the Constitution may declare war give any power to anybody to repeal or in any way conflict with the restraints and limitations and guaranties of the Constitution itself?

Mr. ASHURST. None whatever.

The State of Illinois during the Civil War may be fairly counted to have been a loyal State, and I am able to imagine the flame of indignation that rolled over the State when General Burnside attempted with his censorship to stop the edition of the Chicago Times, and that wise man, who countenance seemed seared with the plowshare of sorrow, at once directed Mr. Stanton, the Secretary of War, to revoke the order stopping the issue of the Chicago Times. I will read a copy of the order. It was subjoined as a note to a long letter, but is dated "War Department, Washington, June 1, 1863." Note the date June 1. It was only 30 days anterior to the Battle of Gettysburg, the critical period of our country's history. "Maj. Gen. A. E. Burnside, commanding department of the Ohio. General: * * * Here is a long letter, and then comes the postscript: 'P. S. Since writing the above letter, the President has been informed that you have suppressed the publication or circulation of the Chicago Times in your department. He directs me to say that, in his judgment, it would be better for you to take an early occasion to revoke that order.' Here is wisdom: 'The irritation produced by such act is, in his'—the President's—"opinion, likely to do more harm than the publication would be. The Government approves of your motives and desires to give you cordial and efficient support. But while military movements are left to your judgment, upon administrative questions, such as the arrest of civilians and the suppression of newspapers, not requiring immediate action, the President desires to be previously consulted. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War."

Mr. KING. The Senator was referring to the act of Mr. Lincoln. Will he permit me to call his attention to an order which Mr. Lincoln did promulgate and which, contrary to the statement of the Senator, was the basis of the action of General Burnside, rather than the statute to which the Senator referred?

Mr. ASHURST. I would be very glad to see that; it may have escaped me in my researches.

Mr. KING. This is an order which was promulgated July 8, 1861: "Henceforward the telegraph will convey no dispatches concerning the operations of the Army not permitted by the commanding general, Winfield Scott. The above order is confirmed."

"SIMON CAMERON."

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator, but I have that before me and I have reflected upon it.

Mr. KING. Just a little further, if the Senator will pardon me, the second order, dated August 7, 1861, is as follows:

"By the fifty-seventh article of the act of Congress entitled 'An act for establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States' approved April 10, 1860, holding correspondence with, or giving intelligence to, the enemy, either directly or indirectly, is made punishable by death, or such other punishment as shall be ordered by the sentence of a court martial. Public safety requires strict enforcement of this article. It is therefore ordered that all correspondence and communication, verbally, or by writing, printing, or telegraphing, respecting operations of the Army or military movements on land or water, or respecting the troops, camps, arsenals, intrenchments, or military affairs within the several military districts, by which intelligence shall be directly or indirectly given to the enemy without the authority and sanction of the major general in command, be, and the same are, absolutely prohibited, and from and after the date of this order persons violating the same will be proceeded against under the fifty-seventh article of war."

"SIMON CAMERON."

"Approved:

"A. LINCOLN."

Does not the Senator know that under that order not only was the paper in Chicago suppressed, but numerous other newspapers were suppressed and men were arrested and charged with sedition and various other offenses?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct. Not only, Mr. President, as the Senator well said, was the Chicago Times seized and the edition suppressed, but editions of the New York World were seized and suppressed, I believe.

In war the strong man wins, and my desire and solicitude—and I think I may be pardoned if I say I believe it is a patriotic solicitude—is that America will win the war and will sustain the Constitution and sustain every constitutional right possible. Between winning the war and giving up the Constitution, I would give up the Constitution, but in my judgment the time has not arrived when the citizen is called upon to give up his constitutional rights.

Now, I am going to read for a moment from the fourth volume of Rhodes' History of the United States, referring to General Burnside's order. I read from page 253:

"Burnside was induced to further acts of folly."

After describing some acts committed with which the writer from whom I quote does not agree:

"He issued an order announcing that 'the publication or circulation of books containing sentiments of a disloyal tendency comes clearly within reach of General Orders, No. 38, and those who offend in this manner will be dealt with accordingly.' June 1 he promulgated General Order No. 84. The circulation of the New York World, it said, 'is calculated to exert a pernicious and treasonable influence, and is therefore prohibited in this department.' * * * On account of the repeated expression of disloyal and incendiary sentiments the publication of the newspaper known as the Chicago Times is hereby suppressed."

And the author concludes with the pregnant sentence:

"Strange pronouncements were these to apply to the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, where there was no war, where the courts were open, where the people were living under the American Constitution and English law. Fortunately men bred in liberty do not easily forget their lessons."

I said in opening of my remarks that every attempt on the part of President Lincoln or Mr. Stanton, the then Secretary of War, to set up a censorship of the press brought a reaction which created much damage and discontent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Did the Senator state the name of the author from which he read?

Mr. ASHURST. Rhodes' History of the United States, volume IV, 1862-64.

The only person who has had his civil rights affected in the United States by the declaration of war is the soldier, who patriotically gives up for a short period by virtue of his enlistment some of his civil rights; but as to all others no civil right whatever is suspended.

I secured a book the other day which I had never seen before, although I had heard of the author, for he was a correspondent of the New York Herald and the Washington agent of the Associated Press during the Civil War. His name was L. A. Gobright. He tells about a censor, a young man, who had his office in the National Hotel here—now a historic building, historic not only because the censor had his office there but historic because one of our greatest American tribunes, Henry Clay, died there. This author, telling about the difficulty he had in getting his dispatches through respecting the situation to New York, recites the dispatch, and then says:

"This dispatch had, like all others, to undergo censorship. The censor at the time was a very young man, who, appreciating the importance of his position I should think he would appreciate the importance of his position when every newspaper correspondent had to go to him and ask him whether or not he could send out his dispatch to his newspaper 'put on airs' I do not know that the Senate understands what that expression means, but I do 'and assumed an undue degree of gravity. He had a small room in the National Hotel, high up badly lighted stairs' 'badly lighted stairs' synchronizes with 'censorship' dark-chamber proceedings 'and at first somewhat difficult to find. There he had on his table scissors of various sizes, a full rack of pens, several inkstands, a dozen or more of lead pencils of different colors—black and blue' I presume they were mostly blue 'a pot of muclage, half a ream of paper, and other properties thought by him to be essential to his high office. Well, I handed the dispatch to the young man, Mr. Holland, in the office, directing him to give it to the censor and to be particular in watching what this mighty little man did with it. When he returned he informed me that the censor, without fully reading the dispatch, stuck it into his capacious pocket, which answered the purpose of a wastebasket."

Then the author goes on to recite more experiences, but I shall not weary the Senate telling about the difficulty of getting dispatches through. I will, however, read from page 322 another instance of what the author calls "censorial caution and astuteness." He says: "Passing up Pennsylvania Avenue on a Saturday night, I happened to meet one of General Wool's staff. My friend had just arrived from Frederick, Md., and had in his pocket an official communication from his chief to the Secretary of War. He informed that there was much alarm in western Maryland, Lee and his army having invaded that State. He told me no more, because he had not yet ascertained the particulars. I immediately went to the telegraph office to 'send off' the fact of the invasion 'to 'send off' meant to dispatch his matter 'making not more than 20 lines. The censor—not the young man who had vetoed my former communication but a man at that time well known to many persons in New York and elsewhere—looked at my dispatch, then said: 'It can't go.' 'Why not?' 'Because it gives information to the enemy.' 'Colonel, do you suppose the enemy does not know what he himself is doing? And, besides, is it not important that the people in Pennsylvania and New York should know of their danger? Should they be kept in ignorance on so vital a question?' I continued my interrogatories. Although the censor had not the reputation of being a very wise man, he was impressed a little with my arguments, and, by the way of compromise, agreed to forward my dispatch with the qualification of the one which, he said, he had sent to his wife. That qualification was, 'It is said that', etc. Thus the positive announcement was turned into a mere rumor which the public could believe or not. No better bargain could be made; and I, of course, was forced to submit."

Having now read some extracts showing the workings of a censorship and its ridiculousness in this city during the War between the States in a great Government where free people are accustomed to indulge in the luxury of reflection, I will give attention to the expression from the censor of the press in England, and I believe the person whom I shall now quote was the last censor in England until the present year.

Sir Roger L'Estrange in May 1680, in first exercising his authority as licenser and censor of the press, and in explaining the attitude of the ruling classes, among other things, said:

"A newspaper makes the multitude too familiar with the actions and councils of their superiors and gives them (the multitude) not only an itch but a kind of colorable right and license to be meddling with the Government."

Now, Mr. President, it is said that republics never learn by experience. We are now called upon to avail ourselves of the lessons taught to us by the British Empire. No man can say who won the war for Great Britain, because it has not been won as yet; but I am able to name the man who has prevented Great Britain from being defeated. The man who prevented Great Britain from being defeated in this war was not the distinguished Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, who did us the honor to address us yesterday. The man who saved Great Britain was not David Lloyd George; not that distinguished statesman, Herbert Henry Asquith; not even Sir John Jellicoe; nor was it Churchill. But the man who saved the British Empire was none other than Alfred Charles Harmsworth, known to heraldy as Lord Northcliffe. He made nine visits to the British lines. He discovered that the shells made in England would only reach one-third of the distance they were guaranteed to reach; that inferior powder was being used, and that thieving contractors were palming off upon the Government, shells of one-third of the potentiality they were guaranteed to have. In spite of censorship, in the face of a court martial, Alfred Charles Harmsworth published to Great Britain and to the world those facts that a censorship sought to conceal, and, in my judgment, those publications saved his Government from disaster.

So, Mr. President, we may pass our statutes, and say to the press that we will filter out the news to the people through some one man; but the press of this country, if it be patriotic, as I believe it is, will publish the facts, censorship or no censorship, if an attempt should be made to feed our troops embalmed beef and set up typhoid fever camps, such as were set up in the War with Spain. Do you think the press of this country would be performing a patriotic duty if it sat silent, cowed by a censorship, when grafting contractors were palming off on the Government paper shoes and embalmed beef and shells that would not explode and would carry but one-third of the distance they were intended to go? No. There would be a hundred Alfred Charles Harmsworths, who might not be lords in one sense, but would be lords in another. They would come to the rescue of their country and would publish the facts that an incompetent War College or bureaucratic commander might—I do not say would, but might—see fit to suppress. Human nature is human nature. It is our duty as Senators to see to it that no defects or blunders are concealed, but that they are laid before the American people, so that they may at least know the facts in the case and aid the officials in correcting them.

So, Mr. President, I am opposed to censorship. A golden stream of billions of dollars is soon going to proceed from out the Treasury of the United States, raised by taxes laid upon the people. We may want to discuss how and when and by whom that is to be spent. We do not know what we might want to say about it. We do not know what the papers might want to say about it; but in making this speech I wish to be understood as not in the slightest degree reflecting upon the integrity or the capability of those Cabinet ministers now in charge of our affairs.

I believe I can say, without that offensive flattery, that the Cabinet today measures up just as high and is just as pure and as patriotic as any Cabinet in the history of our Government. But do you claim that they are infallible and unable to make a mistake? If they be the wise men I think they are, if they be the patriotic men I believe them to be, they will welcome a disclosure so startling as that which was made by Lord Northcliffe, should like facts exist, regarding the shortage and inferiority of the shells that were furnished to the British Government in the latter part of 1914 and during the early part of the year 1915.

We are going to make, in my judgment, many mistakes in this war, because we are human beings. We only learn by mistakes; and unless the mistakes are discovered and exposed to the public, how will we learn? Our War College and our generals will probably be in command of more men than they have ever before assembled together even on paper. They will be called upon to perform duties requiring high efficiency.

I know there are men in the world like some ancient rulers, who always beheaded those who brought bad news; but, Mr. President, there is some iron and blood in the American people. They can hear bad news without flinching.

The privileges which the English-speaking people hold to be of inestimable value, to wit, suffrage—based upon patriotism and integrity instead of upon property—a free press, and freedom of religion, have not been easily acquired or easily maintained. The contest for a free and untrammelled press has been just as keen and intense as the contest for a free ballot.

In England, until the expiration of the licensing act, May 3, 1695, it was by no means certain that the publication of a newspaper was not illegal. The court of star chamber delivered an opinion that it was unlawful to publish without license, and, indeed, near the close of the reign of Charles II the judges pronounced that it was a misdemeanor at common law to publish any news of a political nature without the express approval of the licensors of the King. Even John Milton's Paradise Lost narrowly escaped severe mutilation and with difficulty obtained "leave to print" from the King's licensors.

Article I of the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States was a rampart reared for the protection of the American people against those persons who believed that Republican governments were dangerous delusions, and for the security of the people against legislative, executive, and judicial usurpations, just as the Bill of Rights and the Great Charter were reared by the English people for their own protection against the encroachments of the royal prerogative.

Congress passed the act of July 14, 1798, which declared it to be a crime to publish any false scandalous article concerning Congress or the President, and making it unlawful to stir up sedition against the United States. The manifest purpose of this sedition law was to shield the Federal Government from damaging criticism, and the sedition law was of a transient nature limited to short duration and expired by effluxion of time on March 4, 1801.

The constitutionality of the sedition law was vigorously assailed with great ability and earnestness and was defended with equal vigor. This sedition law was impugned as being directly opposed to the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States and as wholly inconsistent with the rights of citizens and the liberty of the press. It never came before the United States Supreme Court, but Mr. Vice President John C. Calhoun, writing in August 1832, said that from the date of the formation of the Constitution in 1787 down to 1832 only one question of a political character had been settled in the public opinion, and that that question was the unconstitutionality of the sedition law.

It is difficult to estimate the number of prosecutions conducted under this sedition law, but sufficient it is to observe that each prosecution still further served to swell the tide of indignation against it and its authors, and the heat of popular resentment against the sedition law was undoubtedly one of the features of the campaign which promoted the triumph of Thomas Jefferson and the defeat of John Adams in 1800.

We must not forget that in many of the governments of antiquity liberty degenerated into license, and that with many of the ancient rulers the word "liberty" became an excuse or pretext for measures which transformed liberty into license and destroyed the very things which made liberty valuable. Indeed, the history of the world furnishes us with many painful and shocking examples of men who have spoken rapturously and sometimes with flaming eloquence of liberty and patriotism, but who simply used such speeches as a disguise or mask to conceal the fact that they were subverting true liberty.

We in this age who are not restrained to establish and publish a newspaper or print our sentiments therein seem to think these rights were born with us, are inherent in us, and seemingly it never occurs to us that our patriotic ancestors gave up their liberty, shed their blood, and sacrificed their lives in order that we might enjoy privileges which we of today accept as a matter of course, but which mean very much to people who value true freedom. American citizenship is an inheritance which has been achieved and maintained only by virtue of stupendous sacrifices that have been made by those who have gone before to secure for us this inestimably valuable boon.

The United States is just entering upon a struggle of unparalleled proportions against the most perfectly organized and powerful nation in the world. Such a situation, of course, calls for sacrifice from every individual citizen of this Republic. In responding to the duties incumbent upon us in this posture of affairs the soldier stands foremost and his sacrifice is the greatest. He will be called upon, if necessary, to give up much that is dear to him—his home, freedom of speech and action, his prospect of gainful occupation for a time, and perhaps his life. The soldier exacts no conditions, but loyally gives himself to his country as represented by the constituted authorities placed over him, and although the soldier yields up his civic rights entirely for the good of his country, he is none the less a citizen. He simply waives his rights temporarily to give greater efficiency to his efforts and justly looks forward to the time when the authority of government will again restore the exercise of civil rights he has so patriotically laid down.

The duties of the citizen not in the battle line are of a more peaceful and not so exacting a character, but every citizen is none the less a soldier; he is either a soldier of the shop, a soldier of the soil, a soldier of the train, a soldier of the farm or factory, and it well becomes the citizen not in the battle line to appreciate the grandeur and magnitude of the devotion of his fellow citizens in the field and to prove that he, the citizen not in the battle line, is also a soldier called upon to make some sacrifices, but that his country's demand upon him is relatively small when compared to the sacrifices that may be called for from the soldier. Hence, of course, the citizen not in the battle line must and should be willing to give up a part of the liberty he exercises in normal times and imitate, so far as possible, the loyal and patriotic example of the soldier in the field. The citizen will be unfair to the soldier as well as unfaithful to the country if while enjoying the fruits of freedom he were unwilling to give up a portion of the privilege which the soldier resigns for the common good.

We must admit that freedom of discussion as to the movements of the Army and Navy and the location of munition factories and powder plants, which would be perfectly innocent and harmless in time of peace, may be insidious treason and strike at the root of military power in time of war. Hence a statute should be enacted laying heavy penalties upon those persons who publish any information concerning the location, number, and movement of troops and fleets, the location and operation of munition factories, powder plants, fertilizers, and defenses; but let the statute be enacted in accordance with the Constitution; allow the offending person to be indicted, tried by a jury of the vicinage; let the question of the guilt or innocence of the person be tried according to law; make penalties as heavy as may be thought necessary—subject the defendant to rigorous and extreme punishment—but do this in the manner provided by the Constitution.

If it be wise to require the citizen in civil life to give up his great right to publish his sentiments and views and to forego for the common good his right to have accurate information as to the state of war, let the citizen be denied such right and privilege in accordance with the methods prescribed by our Federal Constitution.

THE RADIO IN RELATION TO EDUCATION—ADDRESS BY ANNING S. PRALL

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very able and instructive address delivered by Hon. Anning S. Prall, Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, before the Fifth Annual Assembly of the Council on Radio in Education and the Sixth Annual Ohio Radio Education Institute, at Columbus, Ohio, May 6, 1935.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the outset let it be understood that I am not an educator, nor am I by any means an expert in the art of radiobroadcasting. As I understood it, for a long period of time the educational groups of the country and the broadcasting industry have worked diligently, though unsuccessfully, to develop a plan whereby the facilities of broadcasting might profitably be used for educational purposes.

Having no official connection with the educators or the broadcasters it may be safe to assume that my place in this picture—and that of the Federal Communications Commission as well—is somewhere in between the two groups. You have my assurance now that we are ready to cooperate fully with you and to contribute as far as possible to the final and complete development of a definite, practical, and workable plan for the extension, expansion, and modernizing of education by means of radio broadcasting. That there is a fertile field for such modern methods in this direction is unquestioned, that a time more opportune to put it into effect has never presented itself, and that the universal demand for a broader use of radio for educational purposes increases as time goes on and as modern mechanical improvements mark the progress of the possibilities of radio and make its application to greater educational uses possible.

In addressing you on the influence of the radio upon education, there are two important aspects I would have you consider. The first is concerned with radio and its educational implications upon the large mass of our people, living through the problems of their everyday life under our democratic institutions. The second aspect has to do with radio and those educational values that will aid the school in reaching fuller and more adequate modern objectives.

The great founders of our Government recognized, from the very beginning, the supreme importance of education in a democracy such as ours. They appreciated that, where the people themselves directly determine governmental policies and elect the representatives who are to carry them out, the quality of community life will not rise above the educational level of the average citizen, his intelligence, his understanding, his ideals, and the wisdom of his decisions.

If education were important in those early days of town-hall meetings, when we were but 3,000,000 people, living along the Atlantic coast, when communities were relatively sufficient unto themselves, and when voting power was restricted to the few, how much more today is education significant. Fortyfold have we grown in population. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, the busy descendants of many nations have developed a wide diversity of resources, have built up a broad variety of industries. Widely scattered though we are, we have become closely interdependent and necessary to one another. The dust storms beyond the Mississippi leave their withering trace within the kitchen of the housewife in the East; the destructive floods that work havoc with the cotton fields of the South spell idleness to the millhand of New England. Never before in our history has there been so much need for that broader education so essential to a democracy, which shows itself in the good will of its citizens—their clear thinking, their understanding, their tolerance, their social sensitiveness to the needs of others, and their social responsiveness that will make for the upbuilding of our national life. When you consider further that in these days of universal suffrage these important educational values have to be the possession not merely of the limited few but of practically all, it must be evident that no narrow conception of educational objectives or methods will meet our modern needs.

We point with pride to the tremendous growth in the number of those who attend our public elementary schools, to the great decrease in illiteracy, to the increased registration in our secondary schools, colleges, and universities as evidence of our loyalty to democratic traditions. But our hopes for tomorrow must be built on educational foundations far broader and far more secure. For a century and more education has been closely—too closely for our national welfare—limited to the schools; the school has been identified too exclusively with the scholar, and the scholar with the teacher and the book. We have trusted too narrowly to the three R's, and particularly to the printed symbol, to develop the thinking, social-minded, understanding citizen who is to take an active part in the solution of the many complex problems that confront us as a nation. We have overlooked the many who are not scholastic. We have left almost entirely out of the picture that large multitude of men and women beyond the compulsory school years, who must find their learning in the everyday experiences of life.

It is only within comparatively recent times that forward-looking educators have insisted that we must consider the educative process, in fact as well as in theory, to be life-long, extending far beyond the school years, going backward into infancy and forward into adolescence and adulthood. Fortunately there has come to us, as if to meet this broader need, a voice vibrant with the personality of the living teacher, the voice of radio. It speaks to all: to the mother busy with her household tasks; to the worker pausing for his noonday meal; to the young, to the old; to the solitary recluse, to the family circle; to the rich, to the poor; to the scholar, to the unlettered; in remote mountain hamlet, in crowded city tenement; everywhere radio sends alike its friendly human greeting.

I would compare it in its educational influence with the press, but the press falls far short in universality of circulation; it lacks the directness of appeal; the press depends upon the printed symbol and falls short in the variety of radio's avenues of expression. Whatever the human interests may be, be they civic, political, religious, social, musical, dramatic, literary, current news, sports—everywhere radio brings us relaxation, growth, enrichment, recreation in the best sense of the term. It enlarges our circle of acquaintances to include the President himself; it broadens our sympathy for fellow citizens in remote parts of our country; it enlightens our understanding of important public questions and clarifies our thinking in relation to them; it is an immediate aid in helping us reach decisions. Who would appraise the educational value of radio to the citizens of this great Republic? It has raised the cultural level of a nation by making the best in music and the literary arts an influence in every home. It has made of California a next-door neighbor of Maine. On numerous public occasions of national importance it has given us back the effectiveness of the old town-hall forum; it has brought one hundred million within the magic spell of the speaker's voice.

If such is the magnificent educational service of radio to a nation out of school, radio promises almost equally significant aid to the school itself in its search for those larger, modern citizenship objectives already referred to. Quite generally throughout our country the school is trying to break away from its over-emphasis of the traditional three R's. It is accepting more and more as its legitimate responsibility the so-called "cardinal" objectives concerned with health, worthy use of leisure time, vocational guidance, worthy home and community membership, increased emphasis on the creative arts.

Scan the daily programs of our broadcasting stations and see how closely these cardinal school objectives are paralleled by the numbers broadcast over the radio. Many a radio program reads like a page from the curriculum of a progressive school. This should not surprise us, for the school and radio as institutions have much in common. Both must needs study their clientele, must know and appeal to their interests; both build success upon activity and personality; both seek vital life relationships; both are at their best when they pulsate with human interest. I would not have you infer that I exalt the radio above the school, for, after all, education is much more than a listening process. But there are times when appreciative and discriminating listening is appropriate, even within school hours. Since radio can afford to put on the air only the ablest talent and outstanding authorities, we have the assurance of something worth listening to. The school does well to tune in directly; it is doing so more and more. Many a teacher will tell you that in this way her pupils have learned to love good music, have become interested in important civic questions and current news items, and have later discussed them with profit.

There are those who show concern because the schools have not made more general use during school time of the truly remarkable educational opportunities so generously provided. I would assure them that it is not a matter of pure obstinacy on the part of school people of failure to know and to appreciate. School curricula and time schedules are not yet sufficiently flexible to permit the ready and easy use of radio programs. That so many schools have surmounted these obstacles is a tribute not only to an appreciation of the high quality of the service but also to the ingenuity of school administrators.

My experience with schoolmen over a long period of years convinces me that they do genuinely appreciate the value of educational radio service within school hours and that they will increasingly find the way to secure for their students those great radio influences that make for better human relationships; that give the school greater relevancy to life outside; and that contribute toward an enriched curriculum. For the excellent quality of the educational programs and for the very helpful manuals provided by our broadcasters the schools are deeply grateful.

But whether the school tunes in or not, it still has the fundamental obligation of recognizing radio as an important recreational and educational factor in the out-of-school life of the pupil. The modern teacher uses these outside radio contacts as dynamic factors in the classroom proceedings. Songs, chorals, instrumental and orchestral music, current news items, civic discussions, dramatic moments in history, journeys in geography, drama, literature, science, and a thousand and one matters of human interest relate themselves quite naturally to the activities of the modern classroom. Interesting student reports and fruitful discussions arise from them. The wise teacher uses them as the basis for developing standards of taste in listening to the best in radio offerings.

In the field of parental education, especially as it relates to the health, the bringing up, and vocational guidance of children, the radio is peculiarly able to reinforce and extend the efforts of the school. Radio programs bear eloquent witness to the all-compelling interest of parents in their children; they speak with the highest authority; they bring the influence of the school directly into the home. The better understanding and more intelligent parenthood will inevitably lead to the increased effectiveness of the educational product of the school. It remains for the school in turn, through constructive criticism, to aid in improving the quality of this radio service.

Such, then, are the educational values that radio makes possible to the school, to the home, and to the citizenry of these United States—understanding, tolerance, good will, a cheerful cultured life, social sensitiveness, and social responsiveness to broad human needs.

At the educational conference arranged by the Federal Communications Commission, to begin in Washington on May 15 next, divergent views for harnessing education with radio will be presented for consideration. Let us do our share to bring to a successful conclusion the work of this conference. It is very apparent to me that educational groups anxious to support a practical plan, having the sympathetic cooperation of the broadcasting industry—plus the full and complete backing of the governmental agency which I represent today, cannot fail in this effort to offer the people of our country a real demonstration of education by radio by means simple, certain, and successful.

DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER—ADDRESS BY JOHN DICKINSON

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a very informing and illuminating address was delivered by the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Hon. John Dickinson, before the American Law

Institute, lately assembled at Washington, D. C., setting forth some features of government, and particularly the meaning of certain measures. I have obtained the estimate of cost from the Public Printer as required by the rules of the Joint Committee on Printing. I request that the address be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In every age there is no more important task than to preserve the great central principles and substantial forms of free government as we have inherited them from our fathers, against the temptation to abandon them for the purpose of more readily dealing with temporary emergencies. Those who devote themselves to emphasizing the importance of this task, lest perchance we forget, do a good work and deserve our sincerest gratitude.

When, however, we talk of preserving the central principles and the substantial forms of our heritage of free government, there are two words which we must not ignore—the word "central" and the word "substantial." What we must preserve are the principles that are basic and fundamental rather than manifestations that are transitory—the forms which go to the heart of our liberties, and not mere elaborations and conventions that may be nonessential.

We all of us know how in the history of religious great basic truths tend, with the passage of time, to be elaborated and congealed into rigid systems of abstract dogma which, as they become more and more logical and systematic, are more and more certain to break down under the impact and pressure of a changing world, and in their collapse to weaken and discredit the abiding truths of which they are but the casual vestments.

It is our duty to see that this does not occur in the case of the principles of free government—that those principles do not become so identified with unduly systematic constitutional theories that as the theories cease to fit the working necessities of government, discredit will be brought unnecessarily upon the principles we have at heart.

I believe this word of caution especially necessary in current discussions of the very real and pressing problems connected with the delegation of legislative power. The practice of delegation is not new. Professor Comer has unearthed 19 instances, some of them highly important, from the first volume of the statutes of the United States, enacted during Washington's administration, when the conduct of the Federal Government was largely directed by men who had sat in the convention which framed our Federal Constitution (John P. Comer, Legislative Functions of National Administrative Authorities, pp. 52 ff.). One of these acts, enacted in 1794, went so far as to authorize the President, when Congress was not in session, and, to quote the statute, "whenever in his opinion the public safety shall so require, to lay an embargo on all ships and vessels in the ports of the United States under such regulations as the circumstances may require, and to continue or revoke the same whenever he shall think proper" (1 Stat. 372). An earlier act (Act of 1789, 1 Stat. 28) authorized the President by such regulations as he might prescribe to control all resident citizens of potential enemy countries. By still another act, the President was empowered to establish the methods for determining duties on goods whose cost was stated in depressed foreign currencies (1 Stat. 673). With the passage of time, the practice of delegation has been steadily extended. Today it has reached a point where the constitutionality of the whole procedure has suddenly come to be challenged as never before.

From a practical point of view and from the standpoint of what is feasible in the administration of government, it seems perfectly clear that if we are to have anything like the volume of regulatory legislation now upon the statute books—and I do not now refer simply or mainly to the so-called "new deal" legislation but to the type of legislation which has been increasingly enacted for the past quarter of a century by the States as well as the Federal Government—it is entirely beyond the mere physical capacity of a single legislative body, like Congress or a State legislature, to formulate this legislation in such completeness of detail as to exclude the necessity for a very wide power of supplementary rule making by the agency charged with administering the legislation. A single legislative body could not physically, even if it were wise for it to make the attempt, write all the details of regulation in these numerous and highly specialized fields of administration into the form of statutes.

Of course, there are those who challenge the political and economic wisdom of much or all of this regulation. That is not, however, the question which I am discussing. Even if the field of regulation were drastically cut down, it would still remain true that as population increases, and as human relationships become closer and more complex, a single legislative body could not in its corporate capacity be the source of every detailed regulatory rule applied to the Government of the Nation or even of a single State. The thing would be impossible. It was felt to be impossible, even at the beginning of our Federal Government, as is indicated by the early statutes to which I referred a moment ago.

If it was impossible then, it is obviously impossible today. Accordingly, however much out of sympathy we may be with some of the types of regulation which operate through delegated powers, our constitutional objections to that legislation, if the Constitution is to be a workable instrument of Government and not a formulation of abstract theory, must rest on some other ground than merely that the legislation requires delegation in order to administer it. If we erect the constitutional principle of the separation of powers into such a rigid logical dogma as to exclude delegation as malum in se, we may preserve the symmetry of a theory, but, as was the case with another famous body of doctrine in a different field, at the cost of converting it into a "one-horse shay", which some fine morning, when we need it most, is certain to collapse at the touch of events.

The retort is sometimes made that it is all very well to defend legislative delegation in the abstract, but that it cannot be defended as it actually operates. Of course, none of us likes some of the apparently inevitable incidents of bureaucracy. We are often irritated, and properly so, by what for the time being at least gall us as the carelessness, the indifference to lawful rights, the high-handed assumption of power on the part of Government officials dressed in a little brief authority, and minded to make the most of it. We dissent from their constructions of the law, we resent their ever-present purpose to stretch the law, and we cast the burden of our resentment upon Executive power as such. To be sure, we are not always more charitable in our attitude toward the legislative department, but when our minds are turned on our grievances against bureaucrats, legislative wisdom, and disinterestedness, suddenly take on an altogether new and roseate coloring. Nor as lawyers do we always refrain from grumbling at the decisions at least of our nisi prius courts. It does not occur to us, however, to conclude that the courts should be deprived of the powers with whose exercise we are dissatisfied. We reserve that judgment exclusively for executive agencies.

I suggest that this is an emotional, rather than a rational, approach to the problem. It is one which is due in large part, I believe, to an attitude inherited from the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries when the executive was the Crown, a hereditary organ not chosen by any process of popular election and still claiming to rule by inherent right rather than by delegation of authority from the people. In the American Colonies there was the additional fact that the executive in the person of the colonial governor represented in most colonies the alien power of the mother country, 3,000 miles away, in opposition to the will of the local legislators. It was primarily for these reasons that the struggle for liberty in that period of our history took on the form of a struggle against the executive, rather than because of anything inherently hostile to liberty in the nature of executive power. However, the result was to create in the popular reading of history a bias against the executive branch as such, and it has always remained easy to rouse Americans who pride themselves on some historical knowledge to a distrust of any increase whatever in the powers or responsibilities of the executive department, even though that department is, and under our constitutional system has long been, as fully representative and as responsible to the electorate as is the legislature, and even though it has been made fully dependent on the legislature for many of its powers and all its funds. Identification of executive power under our Constitution with the position of an English King, like Charles the First, or James the Second, and an attitude towards executive power based on such identification, represent a misleading perversion of historical knowledge.

If, in fact, delegation to executive agencies is essential to the working of modern government, the problem is how to remove, or at least minimize, the evils attendant on it, rather than to kick against the pricks and demand the impossible in its abolition. Assuming that we do not like certain types of regulatory legislation, let us squarely and honestly meet that question on the merits and not mask our real objective by a flank assault upon the principle of the delegation of power, which has a far wider importance. Let us, in short, not seek to limit the applicability of an essential governmental device because that seems to afford a possible means of defeating some of the ends for which the device happens to be currently used.

It is true that the courts, while uniformly upholding instances of legislative delegation in the past, have not commonly referred to it directly as such, but have spoken of it instead as "filling in the details", "determining the circumstances under which the legislation shall apply", "exercising discretion to interpret a statute", "exercising discretion within the circle of the statute", and by other similar forms of words. Recently, however, in the Norwegian Nitrogen case (288 U. S. 294 at 305) the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Cardozo, admitted frankly that "what is done by the Tariff Commission and the President in changing the tariff rates to conform to the new conditions is in substance a delegation, though a permissible one, of the legislative process."

The form of words matters after all relatively little. It goes to the more or less academic question of whether we shall call all rule-making which has legal effect "legislation", or whether we shall limit the term "legislation" to the initial phase of the process, which must obviously be performed by the legislature itself. The vital question of substance is whether, admitting, as the courts have in the past always admitted, the validity of the process, the constitution surrounds that process with safeguards adequate to minimize the abuses to which like all exercises of human power it is subject, and if so, what those safeguards are and how far they extend.

There are at least three broad groups of possible safeguards through which the exercise of rule-making power by administrative agencies might conceivably be kept from impinging too oppressively upon lawful private interests. One is judicial insistence that the administrative rule shall be confined within the scope of the broader rule laid down by the legislative body and to that end that the legislative rule or standard shall be expressed with sufficient clarity to determine whether the administrative rule transcends it; another is the requirement of notice and hearing; and, thirdly, there is the requirement of such action by the administrative body as to enable the courts, and private individuals as well, to know what the rule is and to determine whether or not it is in conformity with the statutory standard.

When an individual resists the application to him of an administrative rule made under delegated legislative authority, our courts will always, unlike the English courts, examine whether the statute provides a sufficient guide for the administrative authority and whether the exercise of that authority conforms to the guide. This is so well established as to be elementary. Two results follow. Either on the one hand the statute as a whole may be invalidated for failure to provide a sufficient legislative standard or, on the other hand, the particular rule or regulation under attack may be invalidated as not properly conforming to the legislative standard.

Up to the present no statute which undertook to provide a standard at all has ever been held invalid by the United States Supreme Court for want of sufficiency of the standard, although some of the statutory standards upheld have been of the broadest and loosest kind. Thus statutes have been upheld which conferred administrative authority to "establish uniform standards of purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of tea" (29 Stat. 604, Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 471); to "designate the standard height of drawbars for freight cars and fix a maximum variation from such standard height" (27 Stat. 281, St. Louis, etc., Ry. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281); to "prohibit the showing of moving-picture films unless such films are in the judgment and discretion of the board of a moral, educational, or amusing and harmless character" (103 Ohio Laws 399, Mutual Film Corp. v. Ohio Industrial Comm., 236 U. S. 230); to establish reasonable and nondiscriminatory rates (24 Stat. 379); to authorize in special cases, after investigation, exemptions from the long-haul and short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act (36 Stat. 539, 547, Intermountain Rate cases, 234 U. S. 476); to establish divisions of joint rates between carriers after giving "due consideration to the efficiency with which the carriers are operated, the amount of revenue required to pay their expenses, taxes, and a fair return on their property, and the importance to the public of the transportation services of such carriers" (41 Stat. 486, New England Divisions case, 261 U. S. 184). These legislative grants of authority have left the widest measure of discretion to the administrative agency as to the type of specific prohibitions or mandates through which to execute them. A general authority to prohibit moving pictures not of a moral, educational, or harmless character given, for example, no clue as to the particular theory of harmlessness or morality whose standard is to be accepted, although there is, of course, more than one such theory.

Turning from the moral to the economic field, the same thing is true of the provisions of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (38 Stat. 719), which declare unfair methods of competition unlawful and authorize the Commission to prevent persons from using such methods by the issue of its cease and desist orders.

A somewhat different method of expressing the legislative intent was employed in the forest reserve acts (26 Stat. 1103, 30 Stat. 36, 33 Stat. 628) involved in the leading case of United States v. Grimaud (220 U. S. 506). That method was for the legislature to express certain purposes—namely, the protection of the forest, the maintenance of favorable water flows, and the furnishing of a continuous supply of timber to citizens of the United States. The administrative agency was then authorized to make rules and regulations appropriate for the accomplishment of these purposes. Obviously, such a form of enactment leaves the administrative agency free within the limits of what is reasonable and appropriate to choose the means of accomplishing the statutory purposes.

No doubt the reason why our courts have so far taken this liberal attitude toward broad forms of expression of the legislative standard they reserve to themselves is that the power, whenever they choose to exercise it, of interpreting that standard and making their own interpretation of it prevail as the standard to which administrative action must conform. This latter point is well illustrated, for example, by the ruling of the Supreme Court in connection with section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act to the effect that the meaning of the term "unfair competition", as used in that section, is always in the last analysis a question of law for determination by the court (Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421 at 427).

It is perhaps this control by the courts of the ultimate meaning of the legislative standard which has also made them willing to accept not merely standards couched in broad language but also those which are expressed merely as a group of diverse guiding factors or considerations, like those, for example, of the Interstate Commerce Act, which deal with the division of joint rates, and provide that the division shall be based upon the efficiency of the different carriers, their ability to earn a return, and the importance of their respective services (New England Divisions case, 261 U. S. 184). Although these variant considerations may possibly point in divergent directions in a given case, and although the statute supplies no formula for combining them, nevertheless the same thing is true of some of the standards evolved by the courts for their own guidance, and they have apparently regarded the legislature as in substance posing to the administrative body for solution an intelligible problem with reasonably clear outlines. It is no doubt the same approach which has also led them to regard as sufficient a mere listing of legislative purposes as in the Grimaud case, with authority to the administrative officer to find and apply reasonably appropriate means of accomplishing those purposes.

In short, on the basis of the cases it seems fair to say by way of summary that the substantial test of the sufficiency of a legislative standard is nothing more nor less than its sufficiency to give to the courts an adequate instrument of control over the administrative agency. If, in other words, the legislature has either issued a mandate to the administrative body, or posed a problem for the administrative body, or stated a purpose for the administrative body to carry out, and has expressed that mandate or problem or purpose in sufficiently clear language to enable the courts to say whether the administrative body is working along the lines that the legislature intended, or, on the other hand, is doing something that the legislature did not intend it to do, that is the test of the sufficiency of the standard. It is not, in other words, necessary for the legislature to give instructions in the statute exactly how the administrative body is to act, or even whether it is to solve a problem in one way rather than another, provided that the legislature marks out the problem for solution from the general field of legislative action and commits its solution to the administrative agency so distinctly as to enable the courts to tell whether the administrative agency is overstepping its delegated function. This seems clearly established by the cases in the fields of legislation affecting health, morals, and safety. There would seem no reason why, so far, at least, as the validity of delegation is concerned, any different rule should apply in the field of economic regulation, and, in fact, no different rule has been applied in the field of rate regulation, the only type of economic regulation where the question has so far been passed upon.

Of course, it would clearly be invalid for the legislature to do no more than commit to the administrative body the solution of the general problem of the community's economic welfare. It must particularize sufficiently to mark out a field within which the delegated authority can be confined by the courts on the basis of the doctrine of the reasonableness and appropriateness of means to ends. And, finally, of course, exercises of administrative authority within the delegated sphere are obviously subject to the same limitations of due process as statutory enactments themselves would be.

The frank recognition of this liberal rule which the cases have hitherto applied to the sufficiency of the statutory standard of delegation carries of itself no threat to the interests of the individual from bureaucratic abuses. That threat, if threat there be, comes from other sources.

The principal reason why our law has in the main insisted on particularity of expression in the provisions of statutes is in order that the individual to whom those statutes may be applied may know in advance the legal consequences of contemplated conduct. This is, of course, as essential in the case of statutes which are applied through administrative regulations as it is in the case of other statutes. However, the very purpose of an administrative regulation is to give greater clarity and particularity to the broad statutory provisions. Accordingly, any supposed vagueness in the statutory standard is cured for the benefit of the individual by the more detailed provisions of the regulations.

It was with this thought that Chief Justice Taft pointed out in one of his opinions that a much less degree of particularity is required in statutes delegating administrative authority than in the case of an ordinary criminal statute.

Of course, the contention here advanced presupposes that the rules and regulations issued to implement a statute will be given as wide and full publicity as would be given to a statute. The danger lies not in any possible vagueness in the statute but rather in obscure and casual and covert regulations sought to be applied without ever having been given publicity or made available to those whose conduct is affected. This is a type of bureaucratic abuse of the most objectionable character. More than a year ago I had the privilege of being a member of a group of Government lawyers who felt that with the growth of administrative powers during the last quarter century, the time was long overdue for a more effective and widely available medium of publicity for administrative rules and regulations. Any failure to give proper publicity to such rules and regulations is seldom the result of deliberate intent, but almost always of the pressure of business upon Government agencies suddenly charged with a volume of new duties which they are not yet organized to meet. What is needed, accordingly, is some regular established channel of publicity which will function as part of the normal everyday routine of government, and, happily, such a medium is on the way to establishment.

A second source of danger to the individual from administrative rules and regulations lies in the possible unfairness or unreasonableness of those rules and regulations.

Here, of course, as I have already said, the ordinary constitutional guaranties under the fifth and fourteenth amendments are as applicable as they are to a statute. After all, what the individual is entitled to is a rule of law that is not unjust or oppressive, and not necessarily to a rule that in all its details has come to the direct personal attention and had the benefit of the personal judgment of the actual individuals who constitute a quorum of a legislative body, so long as it has at least been issued at the behest of such a body. What is rather needed is to provide a proper procedure for ultimately determining in the courts whether the rule is arbitrary and a proper procedure for framing the rule to insure, so far as possible, that it will be the result of knowledge and deliberation. The charge is frequently made against administrative regulations that they are something cooked up in a corner, remote from the light of day. In order to prevent the conditions which might give color to such a charge, most of the recently adopted Federal statutes are careful to provide expressly for public hearings preliminary to the promulgation of regulations.

It has, of course, never been held that such hearings are constitutionally necessary, any more than in the case of legislative enactments. A possible exception might be thought to be the case of rate-fixing orders by the Interstate Commerce Commission and Public Service Commission, but rate-fixing orders constitute a special case. Such orders were held legislative in the well-known Prentiss case (211 U. S. 210) and in spite of the strong ruling to the contrary in the Wilcox case in New York (194 N. Y. 383), the Prentiss case is almost everywhere followed.

In consequence, rate-fixing orders occupy technically the position of interpretive or implementing regulations, reducing to detail the statutory mandate of reasonableness or nondiscrimination in public-utility charges. None the less, it is established that to meet the test of constitutionality a rate-fixing order must be based upon a quasi-judicial hearing and record, with a right of subsequent court review to determine whether the facts reasonably support the order, and with a reserved power in the courts nation in public-utility charges. None the less, it is established facts bearing on the question of confiscation (Ohio Valley Water Company v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U. S. 287). In other words, although a rate-fixing order is said to be, and for certain purposes is, treated as an exercise of delegated legislative power, and although one court has even gone so far as to speak of a public-utility commission as belonging to the legislative, rather than the executive, branch of the Government, such an order is at the same time from the standpoint of notice and hearing treated substantially as a quasi-judicial administrative determination. I once suggested that an obvious reason for this result is that while the order, so far as it affects all future shippers indifferently, lays down a general rule and so is legislative, at the same time it has a definitely quasi-judicial element in that it directly affects the rights of a specific carrier or group of carriers, and is binding upon them immediately. If it is this judicial element in rate-fixing orders which accounts for the requirement of notice and hearing, we can see why the rule regarding such orders has never been held a precedent for other types of interpretive regulations which like all legislative acts require a factual basis but from which this quasi-judicial element is lacking.

Certainly there are many types of executive regulations where the requirement of a hearing would add nothing to the protection of private rights and would simply further encumber and delay the process of administration, giving rise to added complaints. The matter would seem to be rather one for legislative policy than for constitutional requirement. Furthermore, in few cases could they be properly quasi-judicial hearings, if for no other reason than because of the multitude of parties possibly affected and, therefore, having an interest. Cross-examination and mutual inspection of documents would under such circumstances be impossible. As Mr. Justice Holmes said in a passage recently quoted with approval by the Supreme Court, "There must be a limit to individual arguments in such matters if government is to go on" (Bimetal Co. v. Colorado, 239 U. S. 441 at 445, quoted in Norwegian Nitrogen Co. v. U. S., 288 U. S. 294 at 308).

The question remains as to the provisions of proper facilities for adequate court review of rules and regulations attacked as oppressive. On such review the issue, in the case of statutes no less than regulations, is more and more coming to be one of facts. It may be suggested that an administrative agency would stand in a better position to defend one of its regulations on the facts if the regulation had been promulgated after a hearing and on the basis of something in the nature of a record. I have just put before you some of the difficulties connected with making such a hearing an absolute constitutional requirement. The suggestion has accordingly been advanced that in the absence of such a hearing and record, any presumption of validity of the order should at least be excluded.

To this proposal the same objection would seem to apply as to the constitutional requirement of a hearing. The difficulty is that while we might feel that it would be justified in the case of some of the newer agencies, it clearly would not and could not be applied to other agencies, as for example, the taxing authorities, and the authorities administering pure food laws and quarantine laws, where the danger of oppressiveness is equally great and where the only difference is one of relative novelty. Under these circumstances, to treat the newer agencies on a different basis from the older ones would tend to bring still further confusion into a field of constitutional law already sadly troubled.

After all, the field where the individual most needs judicial protection against possible oppression by bureaucrats is the field of quasi-judicial application of administrative authority to his particular case. The dangers are not so much those of the application of possibly unwise policies, for as to wisdom in matters of policy, opinions differ, and no particular department of the Government can be said a priori to have a monopoly of wisdom, but rather the danger lies in the possibility of hasty and careless and high-handed procedure, in a refusal by officials to hear the facts, or arbitrary revocations of orders, or decisions based upon inadequate investigation. Wherever such administrative arbitrariness can be shown, our existing rules of constitutional law supply full opportunity for the aggrieved individual to raise the issue and claim protection, in the court proceedings incidental to any attempt to enforce an administrative order against him.

This is the place to try out the question of administrative arbitrariness and not in the abstract consideration of what administrative delegation may possibly lead to. Summing up all that I have said, it comes substantially to this: that we should not undertake to declare the whole method of administrative delegation unconstitutional or even a whole statute unconstitutional because under a statute embodying such delegation the possibility of evil exists. There are ample means, and if they are not ample, they should be amplified, for aggrieved individuals to seek redress of actual grievances without our attempting to protect them so far in advance as to necessitate the elimination of a necessary instrumentality of modern government.

Of course, life would be simpler and law would be simpler today if we could go back to the simple conditions of our fathers, to the old farm with the maple trees, and the sap bucket, and the gristmill with its water wheel by the brookside. Then no questions, or perhaps only a few, as to separation and delegation of constitutional powers would trouble us. I know a distinguished member of the bar of a conservative cast of mind who recently admitted in private conversation that he doubted whether the nice distinctions of constitutional theory which he has devoted his life to drawing could survive in a world of mass production, automobiles, and hydroelectric power. But then he went on to say that for his part he wondered whether mass production and automobiles and hydroelectric power were worth the symmetry of constitutional theory that they are costing us. For his part he did not think they were. Unfortunately, we are not free to choose.

Nature and the tide of events are making the choice for us, and if our Constitution is to be a living thing, if it is not to be hard and brittle and crack under the strain of actuality, then we must recognize that it is to be interpreted in no spirit of formal logic but as a vital, growing framework for a government capable of ministering to the needs of a nation of 150,000,000 people.

BOARD OF SHORTHAND REPORTING

The bill (S. 1453) to create a Board of Shorthand Reporting and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CONNALLY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 354, the bill (S. 1453) to create a Board of Shorthand Reporting and for other purposes. I believe the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator make an explanation as to the necessity for the measure?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to returning to Order of Business 354? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the measure involves no expense on the part of the Government. It simply proposes to establish a board for the examination of shorthand reporters who do reporting work for the Interstate Commerce Commission and other departments of the Government. It involves no charge whatever on the Treasury.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator the modus operandi of the commission when it shall be created? For instance, it is apparently to affect many of the agencies of the Government. Shorthand reporters are located in different parts of the United States from Maine to California. Is the board to be ambulatory? How is the board to determine the qualifications of persons who may be residing in the respective and various States? It seems to me it would impose a great deal of expense.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is applicable only to those who do Federal Government work. It has no application to others.

Mr. KING. I understand that.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not required that the Government or governmental agencies shall employ the shorthand reporters who are examined.

Mr. KING. I inquire again of my able friend. In the case of an investigation by the Federal Trade Commission or by the Veterans' Bureau or by the Interstate Commerce Commission or by any other governmental agency, what would happen? The Board of Tax Appeals, for instance, has been hearing a case in Pittsburgh for some time where the services of attorneys and shorthand reporters have been required. The Senator knows that the Board of Tax Appeals has been holding sessions in all parts of the United States. I am wondering how we are to deal with such a situation and obtain the necessary reportorial skill in such cases, and whether the commission is to be ambulatory and visit all parts of the United States? It might involve holding up the business of the Government unduly.

Mr. CONNALLY. The bill has no reference whatever to the employment of the shorthand reporters. It simply sets up a board so shorthand reporters may secure a certificate that they are qualified as Federal shorthand reporters. That is all the particular bill does. There is another bill, which is different, and for which I am not asking consideration at this time. The examinations provided by the bill to which I am referring may be held at any point in the country. The board or commission would only sit where there is a sufficient number of applicants to justify the board going there. The Government would not pay the expense. The expense would be defrayed by the applicants who file their applications for the certificates and pay a fee for the examination. All the board would do would be to issue or decline, as the case may be, to issue a certificate of proficiency to reporters who are to be determined by them to be capable of performing reportorial work for the various governmental agencies.

Mr. KING. I wish the Senator would let the bill go over today, and I shall look into it further.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

VETERINARY CORPS OF THE REGULAR ARMY

The bill (S. 363) to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah what is his objection to the bill? May I explain the purpose of it?

Mr. KING. I withhold my objection temporarily to enable the Senator to make an explanation.

Mr. CAREY. The purpose of the bill is to grant to officers of the Veterinary Corps of the Army who served in the Quartermaster Corps the same privileges that such officers have who served in the Cavalry and Artillery. When the Veterinary Corps was created the Congress gave those veterinary surgeons who served in the Cavalry and Artillery credit for such service, but those who served in the Quartermaster Corps were not given the same credit. The purpose of the bill is to accord to them the same treatment which was accorded to those who were in the other branches of the service. There are very few of them, and it will cost the Government less than $1,000 a year.

Mr. KING. I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 363) to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment adding a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of promotion, longevity pay, and retirement there shall be credited to officers of the Veterinary Corps, and former officers of the Veterinary Corps now on the retired list, all full-time service rendered by them as veterinarians in the Quartermaster Department, Cavalry, or Field Artillery: Provided, That no back pay or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, there is on the calendar Order of Business No. 422, being Senate bill 477, providing for the appointment of a number of judges. That bill has been passed; but it was understood in the committee that a motion would be made to recommit Calendar No. 422, being Senate bill 477, to provide for the appointment of 2 additional judges for the southern district of New York and 2 additional judges for the southern district of California; and I move that that bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION, N. MEX.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2213) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 5, line 11, after the word "south", to insert "1 mile, fence east 1 mile, fence south", so as to make the phrase read:

Fence south 1 mile, fence east 1 mile, fence south to place of beginning.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is interested in this particular piece of legislation. I do not see him on the floor at the moment, and, accordingly, I ask that the bill be temporarily passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. HATCH subsequently said: Mr. President, I was unavoidably detained from the Senate when Senate bill 2213, Calendar No. 452, was reached. I ask unanimous consent to recur to that bill for the purpose of making a motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senate will recur to the bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2213) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment of the committee has been agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, there has been considerable conflict in my State concerning this bill. I have been informed that the Indian Bureau and the citizens of the area affected have agreed on a substitute measure. I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

All lands of the Cibola National Forest within the above defined boundaries are also hereby eliminated from said forest and permanently added to the Navajo Reservation. All valid rights and claims of individuals initiated prior to approval hereof under the public land laws or by purchase involving any lands within said boundaries shall not be affected by this act.

SEC. 2. The State of New Mexico may relinquish to the United States in favor of the Navajo Indians such tracts of school or other State-owned lands, surveyed or unsurveyed, within the reservation boundary defined by section 1 of this act as it may see fit, reserving, however, to said State such rights as it may now possess to any and all minerals underlying State lands so relinquished; and said State shall have the right to make selections in lieu thereof equal in value to those relinquished, from the vacant, unreserved, nonmineral public lands contiguous or noncontiguously located within the State of New Mexico. Such lieu selections shall be made in the same manner as is provided for in the Enabling Act pertaining to said State, except as to the payment of fees or commissions, which are hereby waived.

SEC. 3. The provisions in the act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. 1225-1239), authorizing the acceptance of relinquishments by the Secretary of the Interior, including Indian allotment selections for the purpose of effecting exchanges and consolidations of privately owned lands within San Juan, McKinley, and Valencia Counties, N. Mex., be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to apply to lands within Socorro, Bernalillo, and Sandoval Counties, N. Mex.: Provided, That in determining the values and areas of lieu lands to which private landowners and the State of New Mexico are entitled under the said act of March 3, 1921, as hereby amended, the value of improvements privately owned or owned by the State on lands to be conveyed or relinquished to the United States for Indian benefit shall be taken into consideration and, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, full credit in the form of lands may be allowed therefor. All areas within the above-defined reservation boundaries heretofore and hereafter consolidated in the Government under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1921, as hereby amended, shall be held for the exclusive tribal use and benefit of the Navajo Indians.

In consideration of the foregoing reservation additions, no applications made by Navajo Indians for allotments on the public domain under section 4 of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 388; U. S. C. title 25, sec. 334), or Indian homesteads under the act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. 96; U. S. C. title 43, sec. 190), shall be allowed for lands in the above-mentioned counties, unless filed prior to July 8, 1931.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of purchasing privately owned lands, together with the improvements thereon, within or without the boundaries above defined, and also within the areas in San Juan County, Utah, added to the Navajo Indian Reservation by the act of March 1, 1933 (47 Stat. 1418), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $482,136.22, which sum shall be reimbursable from funds accruing to the Navajo tribal funds, as and when such funds accrue, and shall remain available until expended: Provided, That title to the land so purchased may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be taken for the surface only: Provided further, That said funds may be used in purchasing improvements of lessees on leased State school land within the said boundaries, provided the State of New Mexico agrees to the assignment of said leases to the Navajo Tribe of Indians on a renewable and preferential basis, and provided the legislature of said State enacts such laws as may be necessary to avail itself of the exchange provisions contained in section 2 of this act, and disclaims any right, title, or interest in and to any improvements on said lands. SEC. 5. Individuals owning lands and improvements within the above boundary extension shall be compensated for their holdings and improvements at a just figure. In the event an agreement as to values cannot be amicably reached by interested parties, then an appraising committee shall be appointed, consisting of three men, one representing the Department of the Interior, one representing the owner of the property, these two representatives selecting a third member. However, in the event that the Interior Department and property owner representatives cannot agree on the third member, such third member shall be appointed by the county commissioners of the respective counties involved and the report of the committee so created shall be final. Also the non-Indian owners of land and improvements within the extension shall, after they are paid for their land and improvements, have 3 months within which to vacate.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Interior is directed to make rules and regulations to restrict the number of livestock grazed on the entire Navajo Indian Reservation to the safe carrying capacity of the ranges, and to promulgate such other rules and regulations as may be necessary to protect the ranges from deterioration, to check the erosion of the soil, and to make possible the restoration of vegetative cover on the ranges.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. KING. Mr. President, in view of the proposed radical change—I assume it is not an ordinary change—I should like to ask the Senator whether the bill ought not to go back to the committee.

MR. HATCH. I was about to suggest that the bill be printed and go back on the calendar. I do not think it is necessary to have it returned to the committee, but I think it should be printed and go over until Senators can familiarize themselves with it.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will retain its place on the calendar.

RELIGIOUS PERIODICALS INCLUDED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1439) amending the postal laws to include as second-class matter religious periodicals publishing local information, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments, on page 1, line 9, before the word "information", to strike out the word "local", and after the word "information", to insert the word "locally", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection "Fourth" of section 14 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1879, is amended by inserting after the words "public character", the words "or for the dissemination of information locally by religious organizations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill amending the postal laws to include as second-class matter religious periodicals publishing information locally."

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, during my temporary absence from the Senate Chamber Senate bill 1439, Calendar No. 477, was favorably acted upon. An amendment was adopted which destroys the purpose of the bill. I have conferred with the Chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and desire to have the amendment eliminated. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the votes whereby the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed may be reconsidered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the votes by which Senate bill 1439 was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. Without objection, the votes will be reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. Now I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. I now ask that the committee amendment be rejected and that the bill be passed as originally drafted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title was rejected.

ARAPAHOE AND CHEYENNE INDIAN CLAIMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1504) authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] explain the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the bill merely authorizes the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to go into the Court of Claims to present a claim which they feel they have against the United States.

Mr. KING. Is there any objection from the Interior Department?

Mr. WHEELER. No; none whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the words "time or", to strike out "of any settlement heretofore directed by any act of Congress" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "statute of limitations"; and on page 2, line 1, after the word "agreement", to strike out the word "understanding", so as to make the section read:

That jurisdiction, be and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal in the usual and prescribed manner to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statute of limitations, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render final judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims, not heretofore finally determined by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States, arising under or growing out of any agreement, Executive order, treaty, or act of Congress with or affecting the land or other rights of the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indian Tribes or bands thereof residing in the States of Wyoming, Montana, and Oklahoma, against the United States: Provided, That if the said tribes or any band thereof claim any interest in the lands, moneys, or other property involved in any proceedings already instituted and pending in the Court of Claims, such tribe or band thereof may file an intervening petition therein and be made parties thereto, with all the rights and privileges as if original parties to such proceedings, including the right to have judgment for any sum or sums found due such intervenors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 18, after the word "limitation", to strike out the words "or prior acts of Congress"; on page 3, line 10, after the word "agreements", to strike out the word "understanding"; on the same page, line 15, after the words "United States", to strike out "that the said Indians may be fully and fairly compensated for all lands conveyed and all rights surrendered to the United States: Provided, That if the Court of Claims shall determine that the United States, under the provisions of any treaty, agreement, understanding, or Executive order, by a mistake of fact or duress, obtained title to or the cession of any lands of the said Indians for an inadequate consideration, or if the said court shall determine that the United States obtained cession of said lands from said Indians without obtaining their consent as required by former treaty stipulations, or if the said court shall determine that the United States disposed of any portion of the lands, the title and occupancy of which by long possession had been acknowledged by the other Indian tribes and officials of the United States for the benefit of any other tribe or band of Indians without compensation to the said Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, the damages shall be confined to the reasonable value of such lands at the time of such appropriation"; on page 5, line 6, after the word "documents", to strike out the words "affidavits on file in the Interior Department"; in line 8, after the words "evidence and", to strike out the words "all such records shall be available" and to insert the words "the departments of the Government shall give access"; and in line 11, after the word "Indians", to insert the words "to such records", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to the court hereunder, it shall determine the rights hereunder, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, as upon a fair arbitration and award, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statutes of limitation; and any payment which may have been made upon such claims shall not operate as an estoppel but may be pleased as a set-off, and the United States shall be entitled and allowed credit for all sums, including gratuities, if properly chargeable in such proceedings, paid to or expended for the benefit of such tribes or bands of said Indians. The claim or claims of each of said tribes or bands of Indians may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment and consolidation in proper cases. Such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party or parties plaintiff and the United States party defendant; and any nation, tribe, or band of Indians the court may deem necessary to the final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein by order of the court.

The petitioner shall set forth the facts upon which the said claim or claims are based and the law, treaties, agreements, Executive orders, act of Congress, or wrongful actions of the United States under and upon which recovery is sought, it being the intent of this act to give the Court of Claims full and complete jurisdiction to determine all legal and equitable rights of the said Indians against the United States: Provided, however, That if any claim or claims are asserted against the United States for minerals mined and removed by white persons without authority and in trespass from lands reserved to the said Indians prior to the time the same were ceded to the United States, and the said Indians have not been compensated therefor, the Court of Claims is authorized and empowered to base any judgment entered for such minerals at one-eighth of the value of the minimum amount shown to have been so mined and removed in trespass, and this provision shall not be construed as creating any right of a legal or equitable nature but shall authorize the said Indians to present their claims in this respect to the Court of Claims for adjudication as such claims may exist under treaties or agreements with the United States.

The petition shall be signed and verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract or contracts with said Indians and approved in accordance with existing law: Provided, That any and all such claims against the United States shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed herein in the Court of Claims within 5 years of the date of this act.

Official letters, papers, documents, or other public records or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys for the said tribes or bands of Indians to such records.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 626) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include hops as a basic agricultural commodity was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to have the bill go over to enable me to prepare and offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2481) to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous-coal resources of the United States and to establish a national bituminous-coal reserve; to provide for the general welfare; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) for the adjustment and settlement of losses sustained by the cooperative marketing associations was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. FRAZIER. This is a joint resolution similar to one which passed the Senate in the last session of Congress. It provides simply that the cooperative wheat and cotton organizations, which feel they lost money under the Farm Board by withholding their products from the market at the request of the Farm Board shall be given the right to go before the Farm Credit Administration and have adjustments made, out of the funds which are now available under the law, if the Farm Credit Administration feels there are adjustments due them. I can see no objection to the bill. The cooperative wheat and cotton organizations feel that they lost money because they cooperated with the Farm Board set up by the Congress of the United States, and consider that they are entitled to have a day in court to go before the Farm Board Administration.

Mr. KING. I must insist upon my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1460) to fix standards for till baskets, climax baskets, round stave baskets, market baskets, drums, hampers, cartons, crates, boxes, barrels, and other containers for fruits or vegetables, to consolidate existing laws on this subject, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 12) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution, which has just come over from the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. STEIWER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon objects.

JAMES TAYLOR, DECEASED CHEROKEE INDIAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2306) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the heirs of James Taylor, deceased Cherokee Indian, for the value of certain lands now held by the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments, on page 4, line 7, after the word "authorized", to strike out "and directed", and in line 8, after the word "fees", to strike out "to the extent of 20" and insert "in an amount not to exceed 10", so as to make the bill read:

*Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, both legal and equitable, notwithstanding any statutes of limitations, to hear, determine, and render final judgment upon the claim of the heirs of James Taylor, a deceased Cherokee Indian, named in his last will and testament dated the 7th day of October 1905 (codicil dated Jan. 7, 1907), as recorded in the office of the clerk of the superior court of Cherokee County, State of North Carolina, in book of wills, page 139, and the following, against the United States for the value of certain lands, including the value of all timber and other property taken therefrom, and appropriated to the use and benefit of the United States since the 15th day of March 1869, and for the value of the use of such lands and other property by the United States since said date, March 15, 1869, and for attorney's fees. The lands referred to are in the State of North Carolina and were the subject matter in Congressional Case No. 1344, James Taylor v. The United States (H. Doc. 187, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), described in a letter to the Secretary of the Interior dated May 5, 1933, signed by H. A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture (S. Rept. No. 875, 73d Cong., 2d sess., p. 6), and are now under administration by the United States as a part of the Nantahala National Forest.*

Sec. 2. The Court of Claims shall consider the findings of fact reported to the House of Representatives, as found by said court in Congressional Case No. 1344, James Taylor v. The United States (H. Doc. 187, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), as evidence in any suit filed and prosecuted hereunder; but additional evidence and testimony may be submitted by the claimant heirs or by the United States. Records, deeds, correspondence, or other papers recorded or on file in any department of the United States Government or of the State of North Carolina, or certified copies thereof, may be used as evidence; and the departments of the Government shall give access to and permit inspection of any such records, deeds, correspondence, or other papers, by the claimant heirs of James Taylor or by their attorney in the preparation and prosecution of any suit filed under the authority of this act. It is the intention of this act that the said claim of the heirs of James Taylor against the United States shall be heard and finally determined on its merits and on the basis of justice and equity to both parties, and the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to exercise unrestricted discretion to that end.

Sec. 3. Any suit filed hereunder shall make the heirs of James Taylor party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and the petition shall be verified by one of the heirs named in the will mentioned in section 1 of this act, or by the attorney representing said heirs, or representing one of them for and on behalf of all of them, and no other verification shall be necessary. Petition hereunder shall be filed within 1 year from the date of approval of this act with right of amendment at any time before final judgment. The case shall be advanced on the court's docket for hearing; and the court shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit any or all persons or corporations deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of all questions and matters involved.

Sec. 4. Upon the final determination of any suit filed hereunder the Court of Claims is authorized to allow attorney's fees in an amount not to exceed 10 percent on the total amount of the judgment which may be rendered in favor of plaintiff, if any, to be paid by the United States in addition thereto, and the same shall be made a part of the court's decree.

Sec. 5. In the event judgment shall be rendered in favor of the plaintiff heirs of James Taylor, and when the money shall have been appropriated to pay the same it shall be paid to the said heirs, respectively, or to their respective legal representatives, or to the duly appointed and then acting administrator or executor of the estate of James Taylor, deceased, such payment to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That before making such payment the Secretary of the Treasury shall have delivered to him by the said heirs, or by a duly appointed and acting administrator or executor of the estate of James Taylor, deceased, a conveyance to the United States of all the right, title, and interest of said heirs in and to the lands referred to in this act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I assume this bill merely confers jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon a claim, in the usual form.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. This claim has been through the Court of Claims. It was thereafter found that the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims under the former bill was not explicit. The bill was reintroduced and went to the Indian Affairs Committee; but inasmuch as it deals with national-park lands the Indian Affairs Committee asked that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry considered the measure, and the Department of Agriculture recommended its favorable consideration, so the committee likewise recommended its favorable consideration. The bill simply puts the question before the Court of Claims for further adjudication.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING, WOLF POINT, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1523) to provide funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont., in the construction or improvement of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district no. 45, town of Wolf Point, county of Roosevelt, Mont., for construction, extension, and betterment of the public high-school building at Wolf Point, Mont.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so authorized shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district, and that accommodations in said enlarged building to the extent of one-half its capacity shall be available for Indian children from the Fort Peck Reservation: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this appears to be an appropriation from the Federal Treasury. I ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who introduced the bill, to explain it, and state the justification for it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, this bill provides for an appropriation out of the Public Treasury of $50,000 to cooperate with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont.; and the following bill, Senate bill 1528, makes an appropriation of $25,000 for similar cooperation with the public-school board at Poplar, Mont. Both of these towns are located on an Indian reservation, and the great bulk of their land is exempt from taxation because it is held by the Government of the United States in trust for the Indians.

A large number of the pupils attending these public schools are Indians; and these bills propose to appropriate $50,000 in one instance and $25,000 in the other in order to add to the public schools so as to make room for the Indian children who wish to attend these public schools. Unless this additional building shall be constructed there simply will not be room for the Indian children in the schools.

In addition to that, let me say that the Government at the present time has entered upon the policy of closing down many of the boarding schools. Formerly the Indian children were taken away from their homes and sent to boarding schools at very great cost to the Government of the United States. The Department has found that by building local schools in cooperation with the public-school authorities they can take care of the Indian children cheaper, and they can take care of them better, and the results are much more satisfactory to the Indian children and to the white people in the communities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not wish to object to the Senator's bills, but I am curious about a fact, as to which I should like to have his observations. I notice that in all of these instances it is noted in the committee report that these expenditures are contrary to the President's financial program and have not been approved by the Bureau of the Budget. I wish to inquire whether any effort is made to procure the approval of the Budget Bureau, or whether it is impossible to proceed with this type of project except in defiance of the Budget Bureau.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that, as he will observe, both of these bills have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior. He simply reports that when he referred the bills to the Bureau of the Budget that Bureau reported that the bills were not in accord with the financial policy of the President. I have never taken up the subject with the Bureau of the Budget, and we never have done so in the case of any of these bills. As a matter of fact, I imagine that most of these school buildings will be built from Public Works funds, although I am not sure about that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator state the number of Indian pupils who will have access to this school and who will likely attend it?

Mr. WHEELER. The report says:

This legislation is necessary to relieve an overcrowded situation in the public schools of Wolf Point, due to the increasing number of Indian children in attendance. Of the 350 children in the elementary grades, 85 are Indians; of 29 high-school pupils, 15 are Indians. There is also a rural school under the Wolf Point school board with 30 Indian pupils, a total of 136 Indian children in the Wolf Point system—an increase of over 30 percent since last year.

Mr. ROBINSON. It occurred to me that this might be a very good way to have a school building constructed at Federal expense.

Mr. WHEELER. I am familiar with Wolf Point situation. There is a very fine public-school building there, built at local expense. It is one of the finest, most up-to-date buildings to be found in a small community; but it is necessary to add to it if the Indian children are to be taken in.

Mr. ROBINSON. Do the Indians wish to attend the white schools?

Mr. WHEELER. Absolutely. In some States the white people have objected to the Indian children going to the white schools. In Montana, however, the white people have welcomed the Indian children to the public schools; and it has been found that they have become much better citizens, and have mingled better with the white children, and have been much better fitted for their work in after life.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that these appropriations, instead of being charged to the Federal Treasury, should be charged to the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Senator knows that the appropriations of that bureau have increased from some ten or fifteen million dollars a few years ago until they reached the rather stupendous sum of $38,000,000 2 or 3 years ago. In view of the fact that the Indians have some funds, some land, and that part of one of the general appropriation bills is devoted exclusively to the consideration of items of appropriation charged against the Indians, it seems to me these appropriations ought to be charged to the Bureau of Indian Affairs rather than to the General Treasury.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not wish to be facetious, but let me say to the Senator from Utah that I understand he objected to these two bills the last time they were reached on the calendar, but, nevertheless, a bill identical with this for the State of Utah passed without objection.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator that the only reason that was done was because the Senator from Montana and others were having these school buildings erected. The building to which I refer is almost exclusively for the Indians, and I believe it should be charged to the Indian account.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not care whether it should be charged to the Indian account or not; it all comes out of the Treasury of the United States.

I desire to say that the policy which is being carried out by the Government at the present time with reference to the Indian children is, in my judgment, the very best policy that could possibly be adopted by the Government.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. Heretofore the Indian children have been taken away from their families, sent three or four hundred miles away, and put in boarding schools, with the result that they were never fitted to go back on the reservations and resume their life there. I hope the present policy will be continued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING, POPLAR, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1528) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Poplar, Mont., in the construction or improvement of public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$25,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $25,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district no. 9, town of Poplar, Mont.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so authorized shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said school district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district and that accommodations in said enlarged building to the extent of one-half its capacity shall be available for Indian children from the Fort Peck Reservation: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to make persons charged with crimes and offenses competent witnesses in United States and territorial courts", approved March 16, 1878 (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 632), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is the same as Calendar 612, House bill 6723.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire whether, when these Alaskan municipal bills were under consideration, there was not some understanding with the Senator from Washington that one of the bills should be permitted to go through, and that the others should be held upon the calendar. That was my understanding, although I am not very clear about the matter. I will ask the colleague of the senior Senator from Washington if he so understands the matter.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the understanding referred to was with my colleague [Mr. BONE], who is unavoidably detained, and not with me. I suggest that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

NOME, ALASKA, PUBLIC WORKS AND BOND ISSUE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the same as Order of Business 611, being House bill 5707, which will be substituted, without objection, for the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5707) to ratify and confirm the corporate existence of the city of Nome, Alaska, and to authorize it to undertake certain municipal public works, including the construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvement of its sewers and drains, fire-fighting system, streets and alleys, sidewalks, curbs and gutters, and a municipal building, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JOSEPH Y. UNDERWOOD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2616) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Y. Underwood, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$282,075" and to insert in lieu thereof "$10,000", and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert C. Underwood, of Brooklyn, N. Y., as executor of the estate of Joseph Y. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $10,000, in full satisfaction of all claims of such estate against the United States arising out of services rendered by such Joseph Y. Underwood in effecting the sale of 15 wooden vessels in June 1919 and of 11 wooden vessels in January 1920 by the United States Shipping Board to the Nacirema Steamship Corporation: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let this bill go over.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. This matter came before the Committee on Claims, and I do not believe we have ever given more serious consideration to any claim than we gave to this one. It was under consideration last year.

The Shipping Board was authorized, by an order of the President, to sell certain ships after the war. A contract was made with Mr. Underwood, who was a ship broker in New York, and he sold ships to the amount of $11,000,000. He thought he had a contract to receive 1½-percent commission, but later the question was raised that the contract was not in writing or that there was some defect in it, and the case went to the Court of Claims, and because of that fact it was held that the contract was not valid.

In going into the matter we found that while Mr. Underwood sold $11,000,000 worth of ships, only six or seven hundred thousand dollars was paid into the Treasury, and after mature and lengthy consideration we reached the conclusion that the claimant ought to have his 1½-percent commission based on what the Government actually collected, which amounted, in round figures, to $10,000. So we cut the amount from $285,000 to $10,000.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

tribution thereof, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 576, being House bill 6323. I did not know the calendar was to be called this morning. That is a bill reported from the Committee on the Library and it passed without amendment. Since it was reported the State Department has suggested an amendment to the bill which I do not happen to have in my desk, but I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which that bill was passed be reconsidered and that the bill be returned to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The bill will be returned to the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may ask the privilege of having the bill considered later.

Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever."

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 317) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judges of said district.

Sec. 2. In the event a vacancy occurs in the office of the district judge now senior in date of commission in said district, and who was appointed under the act of September 14, 1922, such vacancy, and succeeding vacancies in the same office, shall be filled without further action by Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee this morning had this measure under consideration, as well as another measure which calls for the appointment of a judge of the Circuit Court for the Ninth Circuit. It was understood that I was to ask for the consideration of the bill, with the amendment to which I have just referred, and if the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] would offer the amendment I should be very glad to receive it, and then ask for the passage of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on page 1, line 8, after the word "district", I move to insert the words "and one additional judge of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Ninth Judicial Circuit, by and with the advice of the Senate."

I should like to say in this respect, supplementing the expressions of the Senator from Utah, that both of these provisions are approved by the Department of Justice.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I understand, the Senator refers to the United States circuit court?

Mr. KING. Yes; the Circuit Court for the Ninth Circuit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment of 2 additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, 1 additional judge for the Circuit Court, Ninth Judicial Circuit, and for other purposes."

The bill (S. 2608) to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should be glad to receive an explanation of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] introduced the bill, and reported it from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether this is not for the payment of claimants who ought to have been paid, if they are entitled to anything, under a bill heretofore enacted, by the terms of which a board was set up for the purpose of passing upon the claims and determining those which had merit?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the bill was introduced by me by request, and I prefer to read the report before discussing it.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ELECTION PROCEDURE

The bill (S. 2655) to define the election procedure under the act of June 18, 1934, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there should be an explanation of this bill. It is favorably recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DUFFY. Let it go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it may go over, in the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MARY SKY NECKLACE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1696) for the relief of Mary Sky Necklace, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$351.08" and to insert in lieu thereof "$314.43", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the county of Bon Homme, S. Dak., the sum of $314.43 in full settlement of taxes assessed against lots 10 and 11, block 42, in the city of Springfield, S. Dak., purchased for, and with trust funds of, Mary Sky Necklace, or Mrs. Amos H. Necklace, said property having been purchased with the understanding on her part that the said property would be non-taxable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 381) for the relief of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians located in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 7, before the word "for", to insert the words "as to claim for principal sum"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "Confederated", to strike out the words "Bands of Ute Indians, as a trust fund to be added to the trust fund of said Indians created by the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 934), to bear interest at 4 percent per annum from the dates of said Executive orders, respectively, and to be subject to disposal in accordance with existing law; and the Secretary of the Interior shall have jurisdiction to determine, fix, and pay out of the said sum a reasonable amount for attorneys' fees based on a quantum meruit, not to exceed 10 percent of the sum accruing to the credit of the Indians hereunder for services rendered, and all necessary and proper expenses, as provided for in two contracts made by respective bands of said Indians with their attorneys, as approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on July 7, 1928, or assignments thereof in whole or in part and approved in accordance with existing law on or about May 28, 1929" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Bands of Ute Indians in the proportions specified by the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat. L. 199), to bear interest at 4 percent per annum and from the date of the passage of this act, but without prejudice to the claim of said Indians for 4 percent interest on said sum from the dates of said Executive orders, respectively"; and on page 3, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay, out of said appropriation when made, such fees and expenses as the Secretary of the Interior may deem reasonable, on a quantum meruit basis, for services rendered by attorneys or agents having approved or heretofore approved contracts with said Indians, or approved assignments thereof, not to exceed, however, a total of 10 percent of the amount appropriated hereunder, as follows:

(1) A contract with Southern Ute Band and the Ute Mountain Band approved July 7, 1928, a partial assignment of which was approved on May 28, 1929.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $161,400 be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for payment to the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in full compensation as to claim for principal sum for 64,560 acres of land in western Colorado, taken from the said Indians by the United States and set aside as a naval oil reserve by Executive orders, dated December 6, 1916, and September 27, 1924; said sum to be placed on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in the proportions specified by the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat. L. 199), to bear interest at 4 percent per annum and from the date of the passage of this act, but without prejudice to the claim of said Indians for 4 percent interest on said sum from the dates of said Executive orders, respectively.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay, out of said appropriation when made, such fees and expenses as the Secretary of the Interior may deem reasonable, on a quantum meruit basis, for services rendered by attorneys or agents having approved or heretofore approved contracts with said Indians, or approved assignments thereof, not to exceed, however, a total of 10 percent of the amount appropriated hereunder, as follows:

(1) A contract with Southern Ute Band and the Ute Mountain Band approved July 7, 1928, a partial assignment of which was approved on May 28, 1929.

(2) A contract with the Uintah and White River Bands approved on October 8, 1932, an assignment of which was approved on February 13, 1935.

(3) A contract with the Uncompahgre Band approved October 8, 1932, an assignment of which was approved on February 13, 1935.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS FOR INDIANS

The bill (S. 1697) providing old-age pensions for Indian citizens of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. This is a bill apparently of very great importance, and I suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CLAIMS OF CROW INDIANS OF MONTANA

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 96, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 9, to strike out "90 days" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "1 year", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the claims of the Crow Tribe of Indians and any band thereof under the said Jurisdictional Act approved July 3, 1926, shall be reviewed on the whole record by the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal from the Court of Claims, anything in the Judicial Code or amendments thereto notwithstanding: Provided, That said appeal shall be perfected by either party to the controversy within 1 year from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Montana explain the joint resolution?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, this measure is for the purpose of carrying out what was thought to be the intention of Congress when it passed the Crow Claim Act, which provided that either the Government or the tribe of Crow Indians should have the right to appeal from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Subsequently, on February 13, 1925, Congress passed the Judicial Code, governing general reviews by the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court interpreted that as meaning that an appeal could not be taken from the Court of Claims. However, in the Colgate case, decided on November 4, 1929, the Supreme Court held as follows:

Unless the language of a special act conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to adjudicate a particular claim, and providing for review of its judgment by the Supreme Court, makes it clear that such review is to be by technical appeal, it will be presumed that review by the ordinary mode of certiorari is intended, though the act itself may speak of an "appeal."

Clearly both sides felt that they had the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the decision of the Court of Claims in the Crow case. The pending bill simply provides for giving to the Supreme Court of the United States the right on appeal from the Court of Claims to review that case.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator says its purpose is to give the Supreme Court the right to review the case?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas by the Special Jurisdictional Act approved July 3, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 807), the claims of the Crow Tribe of Indians of Montana and any band thereof against the United States were referred to the Court of Claims "with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States", it being the intention that both parties should have a right of appeal to the Supreme Court; and

Whereas the Supreme Court has since decided that notwithstanding such a provision there is no right of appeal, in view of the Judicial Code, as amended, unless the Jurisdictional Act specifically provides that the Supreme Court shall review a cause on appeal, anything in the Judicial Code to the contrary notwithstanding.

CONSTRUCTION CHARGES ON INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1637) to extend further the operation of an act of Congress approved January 26, 1933 (47 Stat. 776), entitled "An act relating to the deferment and adjustment of construction charges for the years 1931 and 1932 on Indian irrigation projects", which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "calendar", to strike out "years 1934 and 1935" and to insert in lieu thereof "year 1934"; and on the same page, line 8, after the numerals "1933", insert "and the said

Secretary is authorized to extend to such water users on Indian irrigation projects for the calendar year 1935, similar relief to that authorized to be extended to water users on reclamation projects", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to extend to water users on Indian irrigation projects during the calendar year 1934 like relief to that provided in the acts of January 26, 1933 (47 Stat. 776), and March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1427), applicable to the calendar years 1931, 1932, and 1933, and the said Secretary is authorized to extend to such water users on Indian irrigation projects for the calendar year 1935, similar relief to that authorized to be extended to water users on reclamation projects.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS RESIDING IN OREGON

The bill (S. 2097) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine claims of certain bands or tribes of Indians residing in the State of Oregon, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. May I ask the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] whether there is a treaty which creates an obligation which would warrant this matter being referred to the Court of Claims?

Mr. STEIWER. I beg the Senator's pardon. My attention was distracted for the moment and I did not hear his question.

Mr. KING. I was wondering if there is a treaty under the terms of which the Indians are warranted in appealing to the Court of Claims or to the Government for relief.

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. KING. Has there been any controversy growing out of their contention? That is to say, has it been admitted by the Indian Bureau or by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. STEIWER. The matter has been under negotiation for some time. I am not thoroughly familiar with the facts in this case, but I think, like all controversies of this kind, the matter is in dispute between the Indians and the Department.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to add a statement voluntarily. The Secretary of the Interior has made a very exhaustive study covering a good many years with regard to controversies existing between these Indians. There is a very voluminous and well-considered opinion favoring the proposed legislation. However, there is an adverse report from the Director of the Budget, who makes reports of this kind, that they do not conform to the economy plans of the Government, but there can be no doubt that the claims rest upon treaty provisions and the controversy has been long and stubbornly considered.

Mr. KING. The statement of its not being in harmony with the economy program does not appeal to me very much in view of the tremendous appropriations which are being made, which are in violation of any proper economy program.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 2, page 3, line 4, after the word "gratuities", to strike out "if properly chargeable"; on the same page, line 18, after the word "claims", to strike out "and who are"; on page 4, line 3, after the word "within", to strike out "ten" and to insert "five"; and at the end of the section to insert "Provided further, That the Siletz and the Grande Ronde Tribes of Indians, if they so prefer, may each employ not more than one attorney or firm of attorneys to represent their respective tribal interests", so as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts hereunder, they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statutes of limitation; and any payment which may have been made upon any such claim shall not operate as an estoppel but may be pleaded as a set-off, and the United States shall be allowed to plead and shall receive credit for all sums, including gratuities paid to or expended for the benefit of either of said tribes or bands of Indians. The claim or claims of each tribe or band may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment and consolidation in proper cases. Such action shall make the petitioner or petitioner's party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant; and any tribe or band the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein by order of the court.

The petition shall set forth all the facts upon which the claims are based and the laws, treaties, agreements, Executive orders under and upon which recovery is sought, and shall be signed and verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with said Indians approved in accordance with existing law. A copy of the petition in such suit shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice designated by him, shall appear and defend the interests of the United States: Provided, That any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within 5 years from the date of the approval of this act. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall allow the attorney or attorneys access to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be proper: Provided further, That the Siletz and the Grand Ronde Tribes of Indians, if they so prefer, may each employ not more than one attorney or firm of attorneys to represent their respective tribal interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 19, after the word "Indians", to strike out "; and if not otherwise paid, the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid", so as to make the section read:

Sec. 3. Upon final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery, based upon actual services rendered, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the suit or suits, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by said tribes or bands of Indians out of any sum or sums found to be due said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 5, line 6, after the word "homes", to insert a comma and the words "and no part of such proceeds shall ever be used for per capita payments", so as to make the section read:

Sec. 4. The proceeds of all amounts, if any, recovered for said Indians, less attorneys' fees and expenses, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians decreed by said court to be entitled thereto, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the date of the original judgment or decree, and thereafter shall be subject to appropriation by Congress for educational, health, industrial, and other purposes for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of lands and building of homes, and no part of such proceeds shall ever be used for per capita payments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1943) to prescribe the procedure and practice in condemnation proceedings brought by the United States of America, including acquisition of title and the taking of possession under declarations of taking was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this bill proposes to regulate procedure in condemnation proceedings. I should like to have a statement as to the necessity for the legislation and the changes which are proposed to be made by the bill in the existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator who introduced the bill does not appear to be in the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ANNUAL REPORTS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The bill (H. R. 4005) to amend section 21 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the time of making the annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. This bill simply provides for changing the time of filing the annual report of the Commission. Under the present law, such reports have to be filed in December. The pending bill provides that the report shall be made on or before the 3d of January of each year.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 21 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "The Commission shall, on or before the 3d day of January of each year, make a report which shall be transmitted to Congress and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports transmitted to Congress."

DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY OF FEDERAL AVIATION COMMISSION

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) making final disposition of records, files, and other property of the Federal Aviation Commission, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, line 11, after the words "available to", to insert "June 1, 1935, to", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That inasmuch as the temporary Federal Aviation Commission authorized by the Seventy-third Congress (S. 3170, Public Document No. 308) "for the purpose of making an immediate study and survey, and to report to Congress not later than February 1, 1935, its recommendations of a broad policy covering all phases of aviation and the relation of the United States thereto. * * *", has completed its studies and made its report to Congress, that the said Federal Aviation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to close its records, files, and accounts at the earliest possible date and not later than June 1, 1935, and to deliver all such records, files, and other property to the Interstate Commerce Commission for the use and benefit of the Interstate Commerce Commission and/or other Government agencies that may be concerned with the Federal control or supervision of aviation and/or other transportation facilities.

Pending the time that final disposition is made of the records and files they shall be open to Members of Congress and personnel will be available to June 1, 1935, to furnish information relative to the records and findings of the Commission and to appear before interested congressional committees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCORPORATION OF AMERICAN NATIONAL THEATER AND ACADEMY

The bill (S. 2642) to incorporate the American National Theater and Academy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it has been the rule for some time in the Committee on the Judiciary not to grant charters for private activities, and, I may add, I see no justification or authority for the Federal Government to grant charters of the character embraced in this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is really a public one. There are a number of citizens interested in the cultural development of our country who are asking to incorporate into a nonprofit corporation, having no capital stock, merely for the purpose, as the bill itself says, of—

The stimulation of public interest in the drama as an art belonging both to the theater and to literature and thereby to be enjoyed both on the stage and in the study.

I think it is one of the most worthy purposes of a semi-public nature that could possibly be presented to us. I request the Senator to withhold his objection. There is a unanimity of opinion throughout the country on the part of all those who are interested in the theater as well as in literature that the proposed incorporation will have a very important place in our cultural development. It is gratifying to have so many people willing to join in the unselfish, worthy purpose to stimulate an interest in the drama.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, no one, of course, could object to the purposes which are sought. If these persons desired, they could obtain a charter under the laws of the State of New York or under the laws of any State of the Union.

Mr. WAGNER. This very same thing has been done before, I may say to the Senator. The American Academy of Arts is incorporated by Congress. There are a number of instances of organizations of this character which are really in the nature of a public institution. They have done a great public service. This is an enterprise similar to others as to which action has been taken by Congress similar to that which is now sought, they having been incorporated by acts of Congress, and Congress, I am sure, never has regretted having done so. I am deeply interested in this proposition, and I hope, unless the Senator has some conscientious objection, that he will not press his objection to the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think I am as solicitous for the carrying forward of the purposes of this organization as is the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure of that.

Mr. KING. I think the purposes are entirely worthy. But the Committee on the Judiciary several years ago, in view of the number of applications which were being made for special charters from the Federal Government, took the position that they would not grant any more charters, or, at any rate, that that committee would not report in favor of any such bills which were not purely of a public character affecting organizations which were necessary to carry on the activities of the Government itself. In view of that fact and in view of the further fact that personally I do not think it is constitutional for the Federal Government to grant such charters, and until the Judiciary Committee takes cognizance of this matter—and I shall bring it to their attention at their regular meeting next Monday—I ask the Senator from New York not to press the bill. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. WAGNER. The committee reported on the bill. I might call the Senator's attention to the fact that the bill provides for a report to Congress of all the activities of the Corporation each year. I wish the Senator would read the names of the incorporators. I am sure that it is a worthy cause. It is for a public purpose and will be treated as a public purpose. I think the persons who are enumerated deserve public commendation for the unselfish efforts which they are willing to undertake.

Mr. KING. I join with the Senator in his commendation.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator withdraw his objection?

Mr. KING. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2027) to regulate commerce in petroleum, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The bill (S. 2652) to authorize the President to attach certain possessions of the United States to internal revenue collection districts for the purpose of collecting processing taxes was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I observe the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is not in the Chamber. I think a statement should be made with regard to that measure. As the chairman is not present, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 212) to liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest by establishing an efficient credit system, through the use of the Farm Credit Administration, the Federal Reserve Banking System, and creating a Board of Agriculture to supervise the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1476) to provide for unemployment relief through development of mineral resources; to assist the development of privately-owned mineral claims; to provide for the development of emergency and deficiency minerals; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Gillotti, who was a member of Battery D, Seventy-sixth Regiment United States Field Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 4th day of November 1924: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

HARRY B. WALMSLEY

The bill (H. R. 2192) for the relief of Harry B. Walmsley was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Harry B. Walmsley, formerly in the Medical Department, First Cavalry, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have received a full honorable discharge from the military service of the United States on July 9, 1926: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

SALE OF PROPERTY UNDER ORDER OF UNITED STATES COURTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2688) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "following", to strike out "or by receivers or conservators of national banking associations" and insert "or by receivers or conservators of banks, appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893 (ch. 225, 27 Stat. 751, as amended; U. S. C., title 28, secs. 847, 848, and 849), be, and they hereby are, amended by inserting before the period at the end of each of said sections 1, 2, and 3 the following: "or by receivers or conservators of banks, appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire what is the effect and purpose of this bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few weeks ago, pursuant to the request of the Department of Justice, a bill was reported which permitted the sale by the Federal courts of property in the hands of receivers. The property could be sold at one sale, though it was in different jurisdictions. It was deemed very important that that should be done. At that particular time a number of properties in which the Government was interested were in the hands of receivers and sales were ordered, some of them growing out of the so-called "Doheny or petroleum company cases." It was necessary that the legislation be passed at as early a date as possible. In the measure, however, through inadvertence, the Department in drawing the bill included a provision which would interfere with the liquidation of banks which were under the control of the Treasury Department. That Department sent down a measure for the purpose of rectifying that mistake and taking such banks out from under the operation of the former bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6723) to authorize the incorporated town of Valdez, Alaska, to construct a public-school building and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $50,000; and to authorize said town to accept grants of money to aid it in financing any public works, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6085) to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including the filling, grading, and paving of streets and sidewalks, the construction and improvement of sewers, and construction of necessary bridges and viaducts in connection with the same, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000 was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I also ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BRONZE GRAVE MARKERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1454) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish bronze markers for certain graves, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That, notwithstanding any provision of existing law, the Secretary of War is authorized to furnish a flat or upright marker for the grave of any deceased person, for which the Secretary of War is authorized to furnish a marker or headstone, of such durable material as authorized by existing law, type, design, dimensions, and cost as conforms to standards to be established by the Secretary of War in compliance with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall furnish the upright stone marker, authorized by section 4877 of the Revised Statutes, for cemeteries under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION ACT

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 112) extending the effective date of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933 was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in the absence of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I should like to have the joint resolution considered. The railroad companies themselves are opposed to the extension of the office of the coordinator, but this is one of the measures which, I understand, the administration is desirous of having passed at this session of Congress. Likewise the railroad brotherhoods are all anxious to have it passed, and, if I cannot have it taken up under the call of the calendar for unobjected bills, I will move to take it up at a later time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator I am not familiar with all the provisions of the bill, but the Senator from Delaware, who is interested in it, is unable to be present at this time and requested me to make the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

TERMS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION MEMBERS

The bill (H. R. 4751) to amend section 24 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended with respect to the terms of office of members of the Interstate Commerce Commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me explain to the Senator that this bill merely provides that the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall hold office until their successors are appointed and qualified.

Mr. McCARRAN. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That", to strike out "section 24 of"; in line 4, after the word "inserting", to insert "at the end of section 11 and"; in line 5, before the word "section", to strike out "such" and after the word "section" to insert the figures "24"; and in line 8, after the word "successor", to strike out "has qualified; except that he shall not so continue to serve after the end of the next regular session of Congress, or, in the event that his successor is not nominated on or before the fifteenth day of such regular session after such fifteenth day" and insert "is appointed and shall have qualified", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end of section 11 and immediately preceding the last sentence of section 24 a new sentence as follows: "Upon the expiration of his term of office a Commissioner shall continue to serve until his successor is appointed and shall have qualified."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend sections 11 and 24 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the terms of office of members of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am requested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], on his behalf, and also on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], to ask that that bill go over without prejudice in order that certain changes and amendments may be prepared.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 65) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Virginia, at or near the north end of Hog Island, Northampton County, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 2015) for a Coast Guard station at the eastern entrance to Cape Cod Canal, Mass., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I also ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3975) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Georgia, at or near Sea Island Beach, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. GEORGE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask permission to recur to Calendar No. 622, being the bill (H. R. 3975) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Georgia, at or near Sea Island Beach. When the bill was reached on the calendar the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected, but has consented to withdraw his objection. Therefore I ask consideration of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 3975) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Georgia, at or near Sea Island Beach, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Georgia, at or near Sea Island Beach, at such point as the Commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend.

STATISTICAL STUDIES BY COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

The bill (H. R. 5444) to authorize the Department of Commerce to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Department of Commerce be, and hereby is, authorized, within the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce, upon the written request of any person, firm, or corporation, to make special statistical studies relating to foreign trade, domestic trade, and other economic matters falling within the province of the Department of Commerce; to prepare from its records special statistical compilations; and to furnish transcripts of its studies, tables, and and other records, upon the payment of the actual cost of such work by the person, firm, or corporation requesting it.

SEC. 2. All moneys hereafter received by the Department of Commerce in payment of the cost of such work shall be deposited in a special account to be administered under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce. These moneys may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce, and notwithstanding any other provision of law, for the ordinary expenses incidental to the work and/or to secure in connection therewith the special services of persons who are neither officers nor employees of the United States.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act; and the Secretary of Commerce shall make a report to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, giving a detailed statement showing (1) the name of every person, firm, or corporation for whom work has been performed under the authority of this statute; (2) the nature of the services rendered to him; (3) the price charged for these services by the Department of Commerce; and (4) the manner in which the moneys received were deposited or used.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7205) to amend the Ship Mortgage Act, 1920, otherwise known as "section 30" of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, approved June 5, 1920, to allow the benefits of said act to be enjoyed by owners of certain vessels of the United States of less than 200 gross tons.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS IN THE PHILIPPINES

The bill (S. 2278) authorizing the construction of buildings for the United States High Commissioner to the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maine whether this bill has received the consideration at the hands of the committee and what is the necessity for it?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there was a hearing held on this bill before the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs. In view of the close relations now existing between this country and the Philippines, and the relations which it is anticipated will exist in the future, the Bureau of Insular Affairs have made this suggestion. The proposal is endorsed by the Secretary of War, it has the approval of the State Department, and the committee was given to understand that the authorization was not in conflict with the President's financial program.

The bill authorizes the acquisition of land and the building of suitable residential and office quarters for such representatives of the United States as may now be in the Philippines and as will be there in the years before us. It is merely an authorization, and not an appropriation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In view of the vast land values which the United States is presenting to the new government of the Philippine Islands, does the Senator assert that it is necessary for us now to buy land upon which to erect our own buildings in the islands?

Mr. WHITE. That was the statement made to the committee; but beyond that I have no knowledge. There was a break-down of these estimated expenditures presented to the committee, and I may say that the action of the committee in reporting the bill was unanimous.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How much of the break-down is for land?

Mr. WHITE. For the purchase and preparation of land the total is $185,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being the unfinished business, the bill will be passed over.

EXTENSION OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE FACILITIES TO NONENLISTED PERSONNEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2625) to extend the facilities of the Public Health Service to seamen on Government vessels not in the Military or Naval Establishment, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "entitled", to insert "Cadets on State school ships shall also be entitled to the same medical relief as is herein granted to seamen", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter seamen not enlisted or commissioned in the Military or Naval Establishments, who are not now entitled by virtue of any law to medical relief by the Public Health Service, shall, when employed on vessels of the United States Government of more than 5 tons' burden and on State school ships, be entitled to medical relief by the Public Health Service in the same manner and to the same extent as seamen employed on registered, enrolled, and licensed vessels are entitled. Cadets on State school ships shall also be entitled to the same medical relief as is herein granted to seamen.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington for an explanation, and at the same time to assign reasons, because, obviously, there must be reasons for the Federal Government undertaking this activity.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, this bill proposes to extend to nonenlisted seamen on boats operated by the Government the same right to medical service at the hands of the Public Health Service as the enlisted personnel now enjoy.

I call the attention of the Senate to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to the effect that:

The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service informs me that the additional cost of the proposed service would not be great and will not require an increase in the annual appropriation to the Public Health Service.

I view of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury states that it will not involve any additional cost, and will simply extend to seamen who may be injured or who may become sick while they are employed on certain vessels the same rights so far as medical service is concerned that the enlisted personnel and the commissioned personnel on such boats are entitled to receive, I think the measure should be passed.

Mr. KING. May I inquire upon what Government boats would they be employed?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. For example, a Coast Guard boat may have a man working in the boiler room who, if he were enlisted, would be entitled to the services of the Public Health Service, but because he is not enlisted, being simply an employed seaman, he is not entitled to such services. The Bureau of Fisheries, for example, owns many boats and sends several of them to Alaska during various portions of the year. The Coast and Geodetic Survey has boats which it also sends out. All the enlisted personnel on such boats are entitled to the facilities of the Public Health Service, but the employed personnel who are not enlisted are not so entitled.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether he believes that boats which have been leased from the Government or from the Shipping Board would come within the terms of the bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I feel satisfied they would not come within its terms.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the Federal Government is not responsible for employees upon vessels which are operated by private corporations who perhaps have leased them from the Government.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am sure that they are not included.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, VERMONT

The bill (S. 2681) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near West Swanton, Vt., and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Board of Public Works of the State of Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Lake Champlain at or near West Swanton, Vt.", approved June 18, 1934, is amended by striking out the word "twenty-five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

SEC. 2. The times for commencing and completing the construction of such bridge are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 18, 1935.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

DEFINITION, REGISTRATION, AND REGULATION OF LOBBYISTS

The bill (S. 2512) to define lobbyists, to require registration of lobbyists, and provide regulation therefor was announced as next in order.

Mr. BYRD. Over.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I should like to explain the bill, and I ask the Senator from Virginia to withhold his objection until I may explain it.

Mr. BYRD. Very well.

Mr. BLACK. The bill as originally written has been given consideration by the full Judiciary Committee. It was first given consideration, I may say to the Senator, by a subcommittee. They had hearings on the bill. It was later presented to the full Judiciary Committee. The entire Judiciary Committee met three or four times and considered the bill. As a result of the consideration by the full Judiciary Committee, the bill was amended so as to read as it is now before the Senate.

The change, in effect, was this: The bill as originally written was entitled "A bill to define lobbyists, to require registration of lobbyists, and to provide regulation thereof." The bill has now been amended so as to strike from it that title, and it simply requires those engaged in the business of seeking to influence legislation or to influence the making of Government contracts, where they are seeking to do that for pay or for a consideration, to register either with the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate, or, in the case of an effort to influence contracts, to register with the Federal Trade Commission.

There is no definition in the bill as it is now written. It is no more and no less, as now written, than a provision of law which would require the registration of those engaged, for pay or other consideration, in the business of seeking to influence legislation or contracts.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I misunderstood the clerk and thought he was reporting another bill. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the Senator, but I desire to complete my explanation in any event.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I shall ask that the bill go over.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to complete my explanation so the Senator may understand the bill fully, and it may be he will not then object.

The bill requires at the same time registration occurs a statement as to the salary or compensation to be paid the person engaged in the business of seeking to influence legislation or contracts. So far as I know, there is no objection anywhere to a bill of this type. There was some objection, I may state, to the definition of "lobbyists." There were some who stated that the things defined were of such nature that under the Constitution people who had a right to present their petitions to the Congress might be precluded or deterred, and therefore it was felt by some who did not desire the name of "lobbyist" to be attached to all those who sought to influence legislation or contracts that there should be an amendment so that it should include only those who did such things for pay or consideration.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, there were Senators also who felt that the term "lobbyist" might attach some odium to those who were legitimately and lawfully presenting their petitions to Congress. However, those objections have been removed by the amendments of the committee.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. The word "lobbyists" does not appear in the bill at all. The bill is in line with statutes or laws which have been enacted in several of the States, which require the information to be given at the beginning of the year, and in monthly reports with reference to expenses.

I am sure if the Senator from Pennsylvania would read the bill as it is now drafted he would not see fit to interpose an objection.

Mr. GUFFEY. I shall read the bill and study it, but at this time I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

W. K. RICHARDSON

The resolution (S. Res. 119) remanding the claim of W. K. Richardson covered by Senate Joint Resolution 35, to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the resolution.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the resolution has been pending before the Senate for several years. It involves a claim by Mr. Richardson for infringement of a patent which became very useful in the Government service. He feels that he is entitled to compensation for the use of his patent. The Committee on Military Affairs had the bill under consideration for some time and feel that the proper place to arrive at a fair conclusion as to the value of the patent or the use which the Government has had of it would be through the Court of Claims.

Mr. KING. I notice from a very hasty glance at the report that there has been a trial or hearing. It seems to me if there has been an adjudication of the claim and the statute of limitations in the meantime has run, though I do not know that it has, we ought not to reopen the case unless there are very strong reasons for so doing.

Mr. CAPPER. There are good reasons, in the opinion of the committee, why the matter should have another hearing in the Court of Claims. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] made the report and is quite familiar with the case.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the resolution received rather careful consideration by a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs and then by the full committee. The committee were of the opinion that, while the gentleman had had a trial before the Court of Claims, there was a very serious question as to whether or not, upon the very technical record, the facts had been correctly found and the conclusions of law upon the facts correctly stated. While there has been a hearing and the findings against him, there seemed to the committee to be some merit in the claim of this gentleman.

On the record, or that portion of it which we had before us, it seemed that the Court of Claims had perhaps been in error in its finding of fact and in its conclusions of law, and that he was entitled to have the court again take up the record as it was originally made in that court, reconsider that record, and determine whether or not a different conclusion might not be reached.

Mr. KING. If the claimant believed an injustice had been done by the Court of Claims—and I might add by way of parenthesis that the Court of Claims is very liberal in the consideration of matters brought before it—why did he not avail himself of an appeal or a motion for reconsideration?

Mr. MINTON. He did those things; in fact, he went further. While he did not take an appeal, I believe he made an effort to take the case to the Supreme Court on certiorari, which was denied by the Supreme Court. As the Senator well knows that does not mean much in point of law. The Supreme Court, as I understand, does not very often consider a case on certiorari from the Court of Claims. The claimant did all those things.

Notwithstanding the steps taken by him the committee still feels that the man rendered a real service to his country; that the Government profited materially by the patent which he had and which the Government used; that the record seemed to indicate that the Court of Claims had very likely reached the wrong conclusion on the facts of record; and that at least the claimant is entitled to have the court take another look at the record which was made in that court, with a view to determining whether or not a different conclusion might not be reached.

Mr. KING. I shall withdraw the objection, but I want to state at this time that I regard this procedure as a very unfortunate precedent. After claims have been preferred against the Government and the Government has provided ample tribunals and ample opportunity for those tribunals to hear these matters, and after they have investigated and rendered their decisions as courts, if Congress is to review them and send the cases back again we will have numerous appeals made to us to reverse the decisions which the courts have rendered. I am afraid the adoption of the resolution will establish a very dangerous precedent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection the resolution was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the case of W. K. Richardson against the United States, No. A-200, be, and hereby is, remanded to the United States Court of Claims, with complete authority, the statute of limitations or rules of procedure to the contrary notwithstanding, to hear and consider questions of law and fact complained of in the motion for a new trial, made January 28, 1931. Said hearing shall be upon the report and finding of facts of the Commissioner and the testimony taken at the former trial of the case, with and under the stipulation that the amount for which suit was originally brought be reduced to 3 percent of the amount claimed in said suit. Such suit shall be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims and promptly placed on the trial calendar. This reference is made under section 151 of the Judicial Code.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING, VALDEZ, ALASKA

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to recur to Calendar No. 548, Senate bill 2315. This bill is identical with Calendar No. 612, House bill 6723. The Delegate from Alaska came to see me about these bills, and is willing that the amount may be reduced to $30,000 instead of $50,000. With that amendment, I am perfectly willing that the proposed legislation shall pass.

I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the House bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6723) to authorize the incorporated town of Valdez, Alaska, to construct a public-school building and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $50,000; and to authorize said town to accept grants of money to aid it in financing any public works.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 1, line 6, I move to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$30,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the incorporated town of Valdez, Alaska, to construct a public-school building and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $30,000; and to authorize said town to accept grants of money to aid it in financing any public works."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2315 will be indefinitely postponed.

MUNICIPAL PUBLIC WORKS, PETERSBURG, ALASKA

Mr. McKELLAR. Now I ask to recur to Calendar No. 550, Senate bill 2316. That is identical with Calendar No. 613, House bill 6085.

These also are Alaskan bills. I told the Delegate from Alaska that an amendment to reduce the amount to $35,000 would be satisfactory in that case. I ask to have the House bill considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6085) to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including the filling, grading, and paving of streets and sidewalks, the construction and improvement of sewers, and construction of necessary bridges and viaducts in connection with the same, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 2, line 3, after the words "sum of", I move to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$35,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including the filling, grading, and paving of streets and sidewalks, the construction and improvement of sewers, and construction of necessary bridges and viaducts in connection with the same, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $35,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2316 will be indefinitely postponed.

BONDS OF MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENTS IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in this group of bills is Calendar No. 547, Senate bill 1227, to authorize the issuance and sale to the United States of certain bonds of municipal governments in Puerto Rico, and for other purposes. I objected to the consideration of that bill, and I desire to have the RECORD show why I objected. I shall continue to object until the Secretary of Agriculture responds to the resolution of the Senate, agreed to on April 9, asking for official information as to what the plans are in connection with the sugar development of Puerto Rico.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator think the Department have any plans? If they have any plans on that subject, it is the first time. I am surprised at the Senator. I would not hold up legislation for a little thing like that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am told unofficially they have plans to spend $103,000,000, and I should like to know something about them.

Mr. LONG. Of course, if they have plans to spend the money, that is one thing, but does the Senator think they have plans as to what they are going to do with the money? They never have had. If the Senator holds up this bill, he is going to keep all this beneficent work from being done.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Louisiana will agree with me that when the Senate asked the Secretary of Agriculture for a report on April 9, we ought to have it by this time in May. I impute no discourtesy to the Secretary. I know he is very busy. He has expeditiously responded to other Senate resolutions for which I have been responsible. I make no point of the long delay in answering this particular resolution. I only state that this particular report should and must come to the Senate before we proceed with basic Puerto Rican legislation.

RELIEF OF DISBURSING OFFICERS OF ARMY AND NAVY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1561) to provide relief for disbursing officers of the Army in certain cases, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Army", to insert "or Navy"; in line 6, after the word "funds", to insert "not to exceed an amount equal to one one-hundredth of 1 percent of the total disbursements made by such disbursing officer under any one bond for deficiencies as distinguished from physical losses"; on page 2, line 3, after the word "have", to insert "previously"; in line 4, after the word "without", to strike out "fault or negligence" and insert "fault, negligence, or criminality"; in line 6, after the words "Provided further", to strike out "That the determination by the Secretary of War of the aforesaid questions shall be conclusive upon the General Accounting Office" and insert "That the second paragraph of the title 'Pay, miscellaneous' of the act of July 11, 1919 (41

Stat. 132), is hereby repealed"; and in line 13, after the word "War", to insert "and the Secretary of the Navy", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office shall relieve any disbursing officer of the Army or Navy charged with responsibility on account of loss or deficiency while in the line of his duty, of Government funds, not to exceed an amount equal to one one-hundredth of 1 percent of the total disbursements made by such disbursing officer under any one bond for deficiencies as distinguished from physical losses, vouchers, records, or papers, in his charge, where such loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on the part of said officer: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall have previously determined that the officer was in the line of his duty, and the loss or deficiency occurred without fault, negligence, or criminality on his part: Provided further, That the second paragraph of the title "Pay, miscellaneous" of the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat. 132), is hereby repealed: And provided further, That all cases of relief granted under this authority during any fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide relief for disbursing officers of the Army or Navy in certain cases."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1138) for the relief of Art Metal Construction Co. with respect to the maintenance of suit against the United States for the recovery of any income or profits taxes paid to the United States for the calendar year 1918 in excess of the amount of taxes lawfully due for such period was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

KELLY FIELD MILITARY RESERVATION, TEX.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2727) to authorize the acquisition of land for military purposes in Bexar County, Tex., for use as an addition to Kelly Field Military Reservation, and to settle certain claims in connection therewith, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, approximately 5.45 acres of land located in Bexar County, Tex., at and adjoining a portion of the north boundary of the Kelly Field Military Reservation, for use as an addition to Kelly Field, and the sum of $2,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum shall remain available until expended: Provided, That the sum hereby authorized to be appropriated shall also be available for settlement of any claims against the United States for occupancy of the lands to be acquired.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who introduced it.

Mr. KING. In view of the large area which is in Kelly Field, may I ask the Senator from Texas whether there is any necessity for purchasing additional land there?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this is a strip of land about 20 feet wide running along one side of the reservation, on which there is a drainage ditch essential to the protection of the field from impounded water. The land was under lease before we bought the field. When the field was bought, by some oversight this strip of 5.45 acres was not included.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EIGHTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF MILITARY MEDICINE AND PHARMACY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) to provide for participation by the United States in the Eighth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy to be held at Brussels, Belgium, in June 1935, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. May the presiding officer explain the provisions of a measure? The joint resolution which has just been reached on the calendar was reported by the present presiding officer, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution was introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is present.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, this joint resolution was recommended by the President and by the Secretary of State. It simply makes an appropriation for the attendance of representatives of the military surgeons of the United States at a conference which is to be held in Brussels this year. It is a very important conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, of course this joint resolution is a mere authorization of money. After that it will be necessary to come before the Appropriations Committee and have an appropriation made. The Appropriations Committee not long ago instructed me to look into these authorization measures before their passage; and I hope the Senator from New York will let the joint resolution go over until the next call of the calendar.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, an identical measure has already passed the House of Representatives. This conference is to be one of unusual importance. It will deal with medical and surgical problems. The President of the United States and the Secretary of State have deemed this particular conference sufficiently important that we should be represented, and both have recommended that this appropriation be made. It is not the ordinary junket trip of which we occasionally read.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice in the report that the first subject to be considered is:

Principles of organization and functioning of the medical service in mountain warfare (Rumania-Italy).

I am not so sure that we are greatly interested in that. I hope we never shall be interested in that warfare.

The next subject is:

Determination of the aptitude of the land, sea, and air forces for various specialties (Rumania-Italy).

Mr. WAGNER. Where is the Senator reading from?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am reading from page 3 of the report. The next subject is:

Results of abdominal wounds (Rumania-United States).

The next is:

Researches directed toward the standardization of methods of analysis of foods and beverages used for soldiers' subsistence (Rumania-Czechoslovakia).

Front bucco-dental care (Rumania-Lithuania).

Comparative study of the functions of administrative medical services in the various land, sea, and air forces (Rumania-Chile).

Under these circumstances it seems to me we should send officers of a different kind. I believe the joint resolution provides for sending officers of the Treasury Department. I should think those things ought to be considered by our military officers.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. As asserted by the Senator from New York, a similar measure has passed the House of Representatives, and is now on the calendar. If action is to be taken on the subject the House joint resolution should be acted upon, as it is identical with the other.

I will state, however, that the committee had before it Surgeon General Cumming and several other medical officers. They stated that the committee representing the United States would be made up of a surgeon from the Army, a surgeon from the Navy, a surgeon from the marines, and a surgeon from the Public Health Service, so each of the four departments is to be fairly represented.

If the Senator from Tennessee could have heard the statement of Surgeon General Cumming, who has attended many of these conferences, I think he would be convinced, as was the entire Foreign Relations Committee, that attendance at conferences dealing with the science of surgery, particularly relating to wounds incurred in war, which are so frequent, is really a great aid to the surgical department of each of the participating governments; and the conference is to be participated in, as I say, not only by representatives of the Navy, the Army, and the marines, but also by a representative of the Public Health Service of our Government. As the Senator from Tennessee has read, each one of the governments is assigned a certain scientific surgical operation to explain, and on this occasion our Government has been allocated a very important discussion on one of these subjects. The appropriation, I think, is only $8,000.

Personally, in listening to General Cumming and the other officers, I was very much impressed, and I think the other members of the committee were impressed. The report was unanimous.

In the first place, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 249 be substituted for the Senate joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) to provide for participation by the United States in the Eighth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy to be held at Brussels, Belgium, in June 1935.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Eighth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy to be held at Brussels, Belgium, in 1935, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses; purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and maps; stationery, official cards; printing and binding; entertainment; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified.

Sec. 2. The funds made available under this authorization shall be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 108 will be indefinitely postponed.

FACILITIES FOR RECREATIONAL PURPOSES

The bill (S. 738) to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over without prejudice. I was on the committee which had hearings on the measure, and I am in sympathy with the purposes of the bill, but I think it should be amended, and I should like to talk with the chairman of the committee about it.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

GREEN LAKE FISH CULTURAL STATION, MAINE

The bill (S. 1148) to authorize the transfer of the Green Lake Fish Cultural Station in Hancock County, Maine, as an addition to the Acadia National Park was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior as an addition to the Acadia National Park, established under the act of February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. 1178), and acts supplemental thereto, all that tract of land containing 820 acres, more or less, with improvements thereon if any, comprising the abandoned Green Lake Fish Cultural Station, in Hancock County, Maine, said tract being no longer needed for fish-cultural purposes: Provided, That such action shall be in full recognition of any outstanding lease affecting said land.

DISTRICT COURT OF ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 157) to amend section 5296 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5296 of the United States Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 641) is amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "The District Court of the Territory of Alaska shall be deemed a court of the United States, and the commissioners appointed by the judges of the said District Court of the Territory of Alaska under the provisions of title I, chapter 1, section 6, of the act of June 6, 1900 (31 Stat. L., 323, 324), shall be deemed commissioners of a United States court, within the intent and meaning of this section."

DISTRICT COURTS FOR ALASKA AND VIRGIN ISLANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6114) to amend section 128 of the Judicial Code, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "proceedings", to strike out the words "and in the district court for the Canal Zone in the cases and mode prescribed in the act approved September 21, 1922, amending prior laws relating to the Canal Zone" and insert the words "and in the district court of the Canal Zone in the cases and modes prescribed in sections 61 and 62, title 7, Canal Zone Code (48 Stat. 1122)", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph "Third" of subsection (a) of section 128 of the Judicial Code, as amended (43 Stat. 936; U. S. C., title 28, sec. 225 (a)), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Third. In the district courts for Alaska or any division thereof, and for the Virgin Islands, in all civil cases, wherein the Constitution or a statute or treaty of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder is involved; in all other civil cases wherein the value in controversy, exclusive of interest and costs, exceeds $1,000; in all criminal cases, and in all habeas corpus proceedings; and in the district court for the Canal Zone in the cases and mode prescribed in the act approved September 21, 1922, amending prior laws relating to the Canal Zone and in the district court of the Canal Zone in the cases and modes prescribed in sections 61 and 62, title 7, Canal Zone Code (48 Stat. 1122)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2462) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Worley, Idaho, in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children in the town of Worley and county of Kootenai, Idaho, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WHITE HOUSE POLICE FORCE

The bill (H. R. 6654) to increase the White House Police Force, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEASING OF INDIAN LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2638) to amend the law governing the leasing of unallotted Indian lands for mining purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter unallotted lands within any Indian reservation or lands owned by any tribe, troupe, or band of Indians under Federal jurisdiction may be leased by authority of the tribal council speaking for such Indians for not to exceed 10 years for mining purposes, subject to approval of the Secretary of the Interior and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That such unallotted Indian lands, other than lands of any of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Reservation, subject to lease under the provisions hereof, may be leased at public auction by the Secretary of the Interior with the consent of the tribal council speaking for such Indians, for oil and/or gas mining purposes for a period not to exceed 10 years and as much longer thereafter as oil and/or gas shall be found in paying quantities, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: And provided further, That the foregoing provisions shall not be construed to restrict the power of tribes, organized and incorporated under sections 16 and 17 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), to lease lands for mining purposes for the terms provided in this act and in accordance with the provisions of any constitution and charter adopted under the act of June 18, 1934.

Sec. 2. That section 26 of the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. 31), as amended by the act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. 1231), and December 16, 1926 (44 Stat. 922-923), and any other acts inconsistent herewith, are hereby repealed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior on the theory that the present law as to leasing Indian lands within Indian reservations is not ample.

The bill proposes to authorize the tribal councils in the various Indian reservations to be considered, and to require their consent before the Secretary shall lease the Indian lands for mining purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it make the leasing of lands more difficult?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It gives them the right to lease more lands so that the Indians can have more income. That is the purpose of the proposed legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it meet with the Senator's approval? Was there any difference in the committee about it?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; there was not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, for a number of years past there has been some complaint that the Indians have been partly despoiled of their property by reason of improvident leases having been made, that the white people have gone into their lands and obtained leases and exploited the Indians.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The purpose of the proposed legislation is to prevent the leasing of lands unless the tribal councils representing the Indian tribes shall be consulted and their consent given. That is one of the regulations required by the proposed legislation. The Department is for the bill, I will say to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe it is wise and just to the Indians?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There are no Indian reservations in my State, and the Senators present representing the States which contain Indian reservations are for the bill, and taking their recommendation, I have no objection to it. I am not prepared to state as to the effect of the bill, but no objection has been registered with the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that the present is a very poor time, to say the least, for leasing lands of this kind? It seems to me that now is a very bad time for anybody to lease his land for a definite period of time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill provides for the leasing of lands for oil and gas development. For example, in the Apache Indian Reservation there is a large outcropping of iron ore. Under existing law the Department cannot lease that land for the development of the iron ore. It is estimated that there are 15,000 tons of iron ore under the Indian reservation, and under the regulations and the law the Government can only lease where the iron ore can be seen. Of course it is thought the iron ore extends some distance back under the land, but there is no provision for leasing the land where the ore is not outcropping.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are there any applicants for leases at this time who desire to develop iron ore? During a depression is the worst time for the leasing of land.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have no means of knowing whether there are applications pending or not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator allow this bill to go over and give us time to look into it a little further?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The bill (S. 2656) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant concessions on reservoir sites and other lands in connection with Indian irrigation projects, and to lease the lands in such reserves for agricultural grazing, or other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this would follow the same course taken by the other bill. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

REGENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NEW MEXICO

The Senate proceeding to consider the bill (S. 2247) directing the conveyance of certain lands to the regents of the University of New Mexico, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "quitclaim deed" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "patent", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey by patent to the regents of the University of New Mexico, for archaeological purposes, that part of the unappropriated lands belonging to the United States located in fractional section 30, township 13 north, range 4 east, New Mexico principal meridian; but if such university fails to use such lands for the purposes herein provided, or attempts to alienate such lands, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESERVATIONS OF TIMBER, MINERALS, OR EASEMENTS

The bill (S. 1066) to extend the provisions of section 2 of the act of February 28, 1925, authorizing reservations of timber, minerals, or easements to exchanges of lands in the State of New Mexico under the act of February 14, 1923, and the act of February 7, 1929, was announced as next in order, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2 of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1090; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 486), authorizing reservations by either party to an exchange under the act of Congress approved March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 485), are hereby extended and made applicable to exchanges of lands under the acts of Congress approved February 14, 1923 (42 Stat. 1245), and February 7, 1929 (45 Stat. 1154), which authorize the United States to acquire privately owned lands situated within certain townships in the Lincoln National Forest in the State of New Mexico, by exchanging therefor an equal value of unreserved and unappropriated public lands within said State.

Mr. WHEELER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, does the Senator desire to have an explanation?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. The bill relates to certain lands which have been sought by the Department of Agriculture for some time to round out its holdings in the Lincoln National Forest in New Mexico. Under the deed which the owner of the land acquired from the State of New Mexico the mineral rights were reserved. The Government could not, under existing law, accept a conveyance of land where there was a reservation of mineral rights. The bill permits the exchange, and corrects that defect in the law.

Mr. WHEELER. I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT M'FARLAND

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 165) for the relief of Robert McFarland, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws, or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, their widows, children, and dependent relatives, Robert McFarland shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a corporal, Company B, Fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, on August 7, 1865: Provided, That no pension, back pay, nor bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his objection so that I may make a brief statement?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. This is a worthy case for relief. The claimant is a very old veteran, who served 3½ years in active service, and was discharged dishonorably on a technical charge.

He seems to have had a first enlistment for 3 years, and then he reenlisted, and on account of his record was immediately made a corporal. Soon afterward he was directed to arrest a certain number of soldiers who were mutinous in their behavior. He undertook, as the record shows, to make the arrest, but, on account of failure to make the arrest and to report that he was unable to do so, he was court-martialed, punished, and dishonorably discharged.

The record contains affidavits of several of his comrades testifying that he was unjustly punished in this regard. It seems to be a suitable case for relief of a man who served his country for a long period of time faithfully and well.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the report of Maj. Gen. James F. McKinley does not give any extenuating circumstances which would call for the enactment of a measure of this character. It states that the man was charged with being guilty of mutinous conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline, that he was found guilty and sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the service, with loss of pay, and so on.

Mr. AUSTIN. The evidence tended to show that the character of this mutinous conduct was failure to obey a command to arrest a number of soldiers who felt that they ought not to be kept in the service for the second period. Of course, if we accept the reports of the War Department in these cases, then there will never be any relief granted.

We do not undertake to review courts martial. We only examine into the question of whether the case is worthy of relief in view of extenuating circumstances, and it is noticeable that in the communication from the Adjutant General the only statement is that it is beyond the power of the War Department to grant this relief, but following that is a significant comment, "This soldier had combat service." That is not customary in these cases. It is placed there doubtless in the nature of such a recommendation as the War Department can make in such a case.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that in the vast majority of these cases, where applications are made for reinstatement or for pensions, the applications are heard ex parte, there is no testimony, as a rule, other than the testimony of the applicant himself, and the report in this case does not indicate anything with respect to the facts.

I withdraw the objection, in view of the Senator's statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES WILSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 245) for the relief of Charles Wilson, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after "1931", to insert the words "as a private, Headquarters Company, First Battalion, Fifty-third Regiment United States Infantry", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws, or of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Charles Wilson shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on October 27, 1931, as a private, Headquarters Company, First Battalion, Fifty-third Regiment United States Infantry: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

The bill (S. 2536) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] permit an inquiry regarding this bill?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I have received a number of communications both for and against suspending the annual assessment work. Many of the unemployed insist that measures of this character are solely in the interest of large corporations, which in many instances, as the Senator knows, hold groups of claims.

Personally, I have not been very much in favor of relieving the owners of mining claims of assessment work, because, as the Senator knows, the assessment work of $100 per claim per annum would afford considerable employment for the unemployed.

Mr. HATCH. I quite appreciate what the Senator from Utah says, and I will say that objections such as he has mentioned have been sent to me from my State. However, the vast majority of the requests which have come to me have asked for the passage of this bill. The bill is identical with one passed last year, and it does protect against the thing the Senator from Utah has in mind. The bill as it was drawn has that protection in it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Department recommend its passage? I see no report indicating that it does.

Mr. HATCH. I do not think the Department has recommended it. I cannot say as to that; but the committee did consider the bill quite carefully, and recommended it.

I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to these provisions in the bill:

That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 lode-mining claims held by the same person, nor to more than 12 lode-mining claims held by the same partnership, association, or corporation: And provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 placer-mining claims not to exceed 120 acres (in all) held by the same person, nor to more than 12 placer-mining claims not to exceed 240 acres (in all) held by the same partnership, association, or corporation.

The bill as drawn, I submit, is so framed as to protect against that which the Senator from Utah has suggested and to give protection to the small operator rather than to the large operator. I beg the Senator from Utah not to object at this time. The time is very short before the present extension of time expires, and we might not have another call of the calendar when we could consider the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I understand the bill was not sent to the department. I understand the usual procedure is to submit such measures to the department.

Mr. HATCH. I am not on the committee, and I cannot say whether it was or was not referred to the Department. I do not see any report from the Department.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think the bill had better go over, and I ask that it be passed over.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator understand that the present extension of time will expire very soon?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to have the bill go over until I can ascertain whether it has been submitted to the Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RIGHTFUL HEIRS OF TIWASTEWIN OR ANNA

The bill (S. 2533) for the relief of the rightful heirs Tiwastewin or Anna was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] convinced that this is a proper bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this bill provides for finally settling up an old estate which was undertaken to be settled some 15 or 20 years ago, since which time the Department has discovered that some heirs were left out and some were overpaid.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amount involved is $559.95. Is the Senator certain the rightful heirs have been located?

Mr. FRAZIER. The Department say they have been. I think the bill is meritorious.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the words "Lucy Pan or", to strike out "Istasapa" and to insert in lieu thereof "Istaosapa"; on page 2, line 6, after the words "Lucy Pan or", to strike out "Istasapa" and to insert in lieu thereof "Istaosapa"; on the same page, line 8, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$279.99" and to insert in lieu thereof "$559.95", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ignatius Court, Simon Court, Anna Jackson, Abraham Heduta, Louisa Heduta, Thomas Pan or Zitkana, George Pan or Heraka, Lucy Pan or Istaosapa and Sarah Pan or Assinna, the rightful heirs of Tiwastewin or Anna, deceased allottee no. 473 of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Tribe, North Dakota, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to existing law, the sum of $93.33 to said Ignatius Court, the sum of $93.33 to the said Simon Court, the sum of $93.33 to said Anna Jackson, the sum of $46.66 to said Abraham Heduta, the sum of $46.66 to said Louisa Heduta, the sum of $46.66 to said Thomas Pan or Zitkana, the sum of $46.66 to said George Pan or Heraka, the sum of $46.66 to said Lucy Pan or Istaosapa, and the sum of $46.66 to said Sarah Pan or Assinna, total sum not to exceed the sum of $559.95: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may deposit the said sums to the credit of the said heirs and handle in the same manner as other individual Indian moneys: Provided further, That not to exceed 5 percent of these amounts shall be paid to any attorney or attorneys for services rendered in this matter: And provided further, That should the persons herein named be not living upon the date of the passage of this act the said sum shall be credited to and become a part of his or her estate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the rightful heirs of Tiwastewin or Anna."

PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

The bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am surprised that anyone should object to this bill; but I desire to serve notice now—

Mr. McKELLAR. We have not time to consider the bill in the 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. WHEELER. I think it probably could pass in less time than that; but I desire to give notice now that when the three-A bill, so called, shall have been disposed of I will move to take up Senate bill 2796, the so-called "public-utility holding companies" bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Why does the Senator propose to wait until the three-A bill is disposed of?

Mr. WHEELER. If I may answer the Senator, I will say that I should like to take it up before the "three A" bill is disposed of.

Mr. SMITH. Which the Senator cannot do.

Mr. WHEELER. Which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] says he will not permit me to do, and I respect his age. Consequently, I do not urge that it be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Montana really does not want to take up this bill today, of course?

Mr. WHEELER. I should be glad to take it up now and dispose of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. In 7 minutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

GRAND HAVEN LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 4239) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey to the city of Grand Haven, Mich., certain portions of the Grand Haven Lighthouse Reservation, Mich., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF INTERSTATE RAILROADS AND AFFILIATES

The resolution (S. Res. 71) authorizing an investigation of interstate railroads and affiliates with respect to financing, reorganizations, mergers, and certain other matters, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is this not a more or less important resolution, Mr. President?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; it is.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wonder if we have time enough to consider the resolution?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there will be any objection. Let me say to the Senator that the Committee on Interstate Commerce held hearings on this resolution, and called before them Chairman Jones of the R. F. C., Coordinator Eastman, and Commissioner Mahaffie of the I. C. C., who stated they were in favor of the resolution.

The resolution was reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce and subsequently was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which committee likewise held hearings, and called before it Coordinator Eastman and Chairman Kennedy, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and finally reported the resolution with some amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we not pass over the resolution for today so that I may have an opportunity to examine it, and the Senator may bring it up out of order later on?

Mr. WHEELER. This resolution has been before both the Committee on Interstate Commerce and the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I hope the Senator will not urge that it be passed over. Both committees have held hearings on the resolution, and it has been amended by both committees, which finally agreed upon the resolution and reported it favorably.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, What is the necessity for the adoption of this resolution? We have the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has accurate knowledge of the condition of the railroads.

Mr. WHEELER. The difficulty is that the Interstate Commerce Commission does not have such information.

Mr. KING. They have spent enough money to obtain it.

Mr. WHEELER. Under the law at the present time, as has been testified by members of the Commission, there is certain information which the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot obtain. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that we intend to work with the Commission, and the Commission, as a matter of fact, will do practically all this work, but it is necessary to have this resolution adopted in order to reach some of the railroads' affiliates and holding companies. The testimony taken before the committee relative to railroad reorganizations and receiverships shows that there has really been a scandalous situation in the case of two or three of the railroads, particularly the Frisco System, the Van Sweringen System, and some of the others; and it is absolutely necessary that the committee and the Interstate Commerce Commission have this information in order to properly pass upon legislation.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether or not such an investigation would unduly depreciate the value of holdings of bona fide stockholders and bondholders?

Mr. WHEELER. Not in the slightest. On the other hand, in my judgment, it will have a beneficial effect, because it will show the roads which are doing an honest, clean business, and will only go into the evils of those roads which are notoriously bad at the present time. It cannot hurt their credit either, because, as Coordinator Eastman said, the only credit most roads have at the present time is with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. KING. Were holders of stocks and bonds heard when the matter was under consideration by the committee?

Mr. WHEELER. Several witnesses representing security holders were heard. They favored the investigation. The investors cannot be hurt.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, why cannot the Interstate Commerce Commission do this work now?

Mr. WHEELER. I just stated that it is impossible for them to get some of the information that is necessary under the provisions of this resolution. We held hearings both before the Interstate Commerce Committee and the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and the resolution was amended by both committees. I hope the Senator will not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. WHEELER on February 4, 1935, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment, and from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with additional amendments.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 4, after the word "financing", to strike out "refinancing"; in line 5, after the word "reorganizations", to strike out "and adjustments, consolidation"; in line 6, after the word "dispositions", to strike out "receiverships and bankruptcies" and to insert in lieu thereof "insolvency"; in line 7, after the word "credit", to strike out "arrangements and activities"; in line 8, after the word "activities", to strike out "dividend or other"; in line 9, after the word "policies", to strike out the comma and the words "corporate management and control, voting trusts, trusts under indentures and similar instruments and other agency and depository arrangements, management, service, equipment, and supply contracts and arrangements"; on page 3, line 1, after the word "relationship", to strike out the words "and transactions, and matters and practices related to any of the foregoing or related to the protection of Government funds, investors, or railroad credit"; on the same page, line 5, after the words "affiliates, and", to strike out the word "railroad"; on the same page, after line 12, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to obtain such facts as the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other Government agencies may have, and to secure the assistance of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other Government agencies in the investigation hereby authorized. The member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, heretofore designated by the President as Federal Coordinator of Transportation under the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, is hereby authorized and directed to select the railroads to be included in the investigation.

And on page 4, line 14, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make, and to report to the Senate the results of, a thorough and complete investigation of the financing, reorganizations, mergers, acquisitions and dispositions, insolvency, credit, securities operations and activities, financial policies, and intercorporate relationships—in respect of interstate railroads, railroad holding companies, railroad affiliates, and subsidiaries—any corporation or person which is or has been affiliated with any of the foregoing, banking, legal, engineering, accounting, and other professional corporations, persons, or groups occupying a fiduciary or contractual position or relation with any of the foregoing, and any member of the family of any such person, and any officer, agent, or director of any such corporation or group.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to obtain such facts as the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other Government agencies may have, and to secure the assistance of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other Government agencies in the investigation hereby authorized. The member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, heretofore designated by the President as Federal Coordinator of Transportation under the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, is hereby authorized and directed to select the railroads to be included in the investigation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress, to employ such experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production and impounding of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The preamble was rejected.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES FOR REPAIRS TO NAVAL VESSELS

The bill (H. R. 4760) to increase the statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes to naval vessels was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, before that is done, I should like to make an explanation of this bill.

The present law provides an allowance of not exceeding $300,000 per annum for ship repair. The present custom is to repair naval vessels about every 18 months. The bill provides for an increase in the limitation, not as to the amount but as to the period within which the repairs may be made. It does not involve any additional money whatever, but it spreads out the limitation so as to cover a period of 18 months, and provides $450,000 for periods of 18 months instead of $300,000 for periods of 1 year. The bill does not involve any additional appropriation, but spreads the limitation over a period that is practical under the present plan for repairs.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether there is any limitation upon the number of vessels which may be repaired; and if not, why not; and if there is no limitation, might not a dozen vessels be repaired at a cost of $450,000 each?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, there is not any limitation at the present time upon the number that may be repaired. This bill deals, though, with those that are repaired and proposes a limitation as to cost. It does not increase the cost allowed, but does increase the period and increase the amount to conform to the period.

We have not by legislation attempted to regulate the question as to how often a ship may be repaired. That, of course, is handled in the administration of the Navy through the Navy Department. This bill does not deal with that question at all. It merely provides a limitation of the amount which may be expended on one vessel. It is an amendment to the present law.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator again, because I did not quite understand him, is there any limitation anywhere as to the number of vessels which may be repaired? This bill would seem to indicate that all vessels may be repaired at a cost not to exceed $450,000 for each vessel. Certainly we ought not to give omnibus authority that all vessels may be repaired at the expense indicated.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will proceed to state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Naval Establishment—Office of the Secretary—Miscellaneous expenses", on page 3, line 2, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$4,200" and insert "$9,000"; in line 7, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$170,000" and insert "$183,360", and in line 18, after the words "in all" to strike out "$1,055,700" and insert "$1,071,060", so as to read:

For traveling expenses of civilian employees, including not to exceed $4,000 for the expenses of attendance, at home and abroad, upon meetings of technical, professional, scientific, and other similar organizations when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such attendance would be of benefit in the conduct of the work of the Navy Department; not to exceed $2,000 for the part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such experts and at such rates of compensation as may be contracted for by and in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy; expenses of courts martial, purchase of law and reference books, expenses of prisoners and prisons, courts of inquiry, boards of investigation, examining boards, clerical assistance; witnesses' fees and traveling expenses; not to exceed $15,000 for promoting accident prevention and safety in shore establishments of the Navy, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy; newspapers and periodicals for the naval service; all advertising of the Navy Department and its bureaus (except advertising for recruits for the Bureau of Navigation); costs of suits; relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; maintenance of attachés abroad, including office rental and pay of employees, and not to exceed $9,000 in the aggregate or $450 for any one person for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 5, sec. 118a); the collection and classification of information; not to exceed $183,360 for telephone, telegraph, and teletype rentals and tolls, telegrams, radiograms, and cablegrams; postage, foreign and domestic and post-office box rentals; necessary expenses for interned persons and prisoners of war under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, including funeral expenses for such interned persons or prisoners of war as may die while under such jurisdiction; payment of claims for damages as provided in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year 1920, approved July 11, 1919 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 600), and other necessary and incidental expenses; in all, $1,071,060, of which $2,500 shall be available immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I know that a number of Senators desire to be present when the naval bill is being considered, and I, therefore, suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

EXTENSION OF THE N. R. A.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, there is evidence in my possession which I shall shortly offer for the RECORD of an organized and well-financed drive upon the part of N. R. A. officeholders, code-authority officials, and code-enforcement employees to impose their will upon the Congress in the matter of the extension of the N. R. A.

This movement is designed to reach a climax on Wednesday of this week with a march on Washington, at which time, to use the language of the promoters an "indignant protest" will be made against the Senate's passage of the Clark resolution and a "demand" for 2-year extension of the N. R. A. along lines satisfactory to this group.

The promoters of this scheme have the effrontery to denominate it a spontaneous uprising on the part of business men. Just how spontaneous it is will presently be demonstrated through the material emanating from the sponsors.

I understand a very decided effort has been made during recent weeks to accomplish such a demonstration of opinion on the part of the business men of the country as would prevail upon Congress to see that there should be without fail a 2-year extension granted to N. R. A. I know not who is responsible for it. The retail merchants of my State, and I know of other States, have been solicited, furnished with postal cards upon which there are blanks, affording opportunity for the merchant himself to indicate whether he is in favor of a continuation of N. R. A. or opposed to such continuation.

Approximately 300 such cards have come to me from all sections of my State. I have made a tabulation this morning, and I find that of the 300, 6 have marked themselves as being in favor of the continuation of N. R. A., while the remainder of the 300 have indicated themselves as opposed to its continuation. I understand that what has been done in my State to accomplish this indication of interest in the N. R. A. has also been followed in other States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am very much interested in the exhibit which the Senator has just presented. I, myself, have had a large supply of such cards. I have not known who is behind the campaign, although obviously it is an organized campaign, since all of them are alike in typography and all of them are addressed to me. Apparently the retail merchants of Michigan were asked to vote "yes" or "no" on the continuance of the N. R. A.; and I should like to tell the Senator that Michigan's opinion upon this subject in the retail trade appears to be quite similar to that of his own State, because Michigan opinion on the cards which I have received to date is 360 "no" and 4 "yes."

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. A similar campaign has been put on in the State of Iowa. I have received about 500 cards—482 "no" and 12 "yes." I think the cards are exactly in the form of the cards presented by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. Is the Senator from Iowa prepared to assert whether the 12 who voted for the continuation of the N. R. A. are going to be here with the caravan which is to descend upon Washington day after tomorrow to insist upon a renewal of the N. R. A. for 2 years?

Mr. DICKINSON. They have not so advised me to date.

Mr. NYE. Those who are promoting these schemes to accomplish a large showing in support of N. R. A. are going to demonstrate through the material they will offer how serious is their effort.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator know whether the cards to which he has referred were originated by those in sympathy with N. R. A. or by those who are against it? Has the Senator any means of knowing the total number of cards that were issued in his State?

Mr. NYE. I have no means of knowing how many cards were issued or who has sponsored the issuance of the cards, but evidently it is some national association. It may be this is the association which has organized the caravan which is to descend upon Washington Wednesday of this week.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator has no information?

Mr. NYE. I have not.

Mr. ROBINSON. The cards were sent direct to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NYE. That is correct, by the markers of the cards.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want to add the comment, that from an inspection of the postmarks upon the cards which came to me from Michigan it is quite evident there is a thorough coverage of the State, particularly in the smaller communities; so I should say that, for whatever it is worth, it is a rather emphatic protest against any continuation of N. R. A. at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Michigan remarks that it is evident the cards cover the entire State. May I ask the Senator how many cards he has received?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I reported the total to be 364.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator does not wish to say that 364 cards would cover Michigan, does he? That number would hardly cover a single county of Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That depends upon who is polled. These cards are apparently from retail dealers. I am simply asserting that they do not come from any one spot. Whoever has distributed them for voting purposes has at least apparently undertaken to cover the entire Commonwealth with them.

Mr. NYE. Surveying the cards from my State which are before me, I find the senders representative of every line of retail business—jewelry, dry-goods merchants, grocers, automobile dealers, every kind of retail merchants.

I started to say that the promoters of the scheme which is behind the caravan coming to Washington day after tomorrow have the effrontery to denominate it as a spontaneous uprising on the part of business men. Just how spontaneous it is will presently be demonstrated through the material emanating from the sponsors. Before examining that, however, I wish to analyze the personnel of the leadership in this movement, which might fittingly be called a "Save Our Racket Crusade."

The organization is called the "Industry and Business Committee for N. R. A. Extension." I have here its letterhead, which gives the headquarters address as 10 East Fortieth Street, fourteenth floor, New York City, and its telephone number as Lexington 2-2820. Perhaps it is a coincidence that this is the address and telephone number of the code authority for the silk-textile industry.

Mr. Ward Cheney is a member of this code authority and, according to the Industry and Business Committee for N. R. A. Extension, is also a representative of the velvet industry. In addition, he is president of Cheney Bros., the well-known silk manufacturers. By a further coincidence, Mr. Cheney is chairman of the Industry and Business Committee for N. R. A. Extension.

Mr. President, no one doubts that the code authority chairmen and the paid representatives of code authorities desire a free and unfettered continuation of N. R. A. Particularly is this true where the codes provide price fixing, as is the case in Mr. Cheney's code.

Nor does anyone doubt that the N. R. A. employees and officials, receiving either money or power as a reward for their services, desire a continuation of the "blue buzzard."

I hold in my hand a file of material issued by this Industry and Business Committee. The opening paragraph of the opening blast of the committee is as follows:

This committee was organized about April 1, 1935, as a result of a spontaneous demand from many sources that industry and business favoring the extension of N. R. A. should unify its efforts under a single committee and represent industrial and business groups with headquarters in New York City.

It does not state who organized the spontaneous movement or whence came the spontaneous demand. It does state that Mr. Ward Cheney is chairman of the committee, and also states:

The committee has operated on a quiet program without ballyhoo to encourage industry and business units throughout the country to express themselves about the N. R. A. direct to the Senators from their States and the Congressmen from their districts.

It adds that more detailed information will be furnished upon request. It contains no date and contains no signature. The complete file I hold in my hand, however, discloses some interesting facts.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CLARK. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to inquire if the file which the Senator holds contains also the special-rate tickets for bringing these delegates and their wives and families to Washington.

Mr. NYE. It does.

It appears that on April 18, 1935, a dinner was given at the Hotel Astor, in New York City, in honor of Mr. Donald R. Richberg. I have here the guest list, which contains more than 300 names. I also hold in my hand a list of the names of the general committee of the industry and business committee for N. R. A. extension. This contains 32 names. Seventeen members of the general committee appear on the guest list at the testimonial dinner. Mr. Cheney, the chairman of the industry and business committee for N. R. A. extension, presided at the banquet. Whether the banquet gave birth to the committee, or the committee gave birth to the banquet does not appear on the record, but the family connection is perfectly patent.

Before delving further into the personnel of the committee let us be enlightened as to its purposes and methods. I hold here a resolution on the letterhead of the committee. It is addressed to the President of the United States and declares that the committee is a strictly nonpolitical group composed of 61 industrial and business divisions operating under codes of fair competition made up of industrial and business units in every State, totaling over 300,000, employing several million workers and doing an annual gross volume of business exceeding $10,000,000,000.

This is a formidable statement, if it is intended to mean that the committee is the authorized spokesman of the whole of that volume of business and employment. It would be interesting to see the credentials the committee holds to speak for all of that business.

The resolution goes on to declare that the committee whole-heartedly favors a 2-year extension of an improved and efficiently administered and enforced N. I. R. A., and looks with definite disfavor on the Senate's action as a subtle proposal slowly to destroy the law. It declares that the United States Chamber of Commerce, in speaking for industry and business, did not speak for the members of the committee. It piously condemns cutthroat competitive practices.

So much for the aims of the committee. Let us examine its methods.

I have here a document which, unlike the others, bears a signature and date. The date is May 13, 1935, and the signature is "Ward Cheney, Chairman." I shall read some excerpts from it:

To all code authorities:

The fate of N. R. A. is in the balance! There is one last chance for you to tip the scales in favor of a 2-year extension of an improved, enforceable N. R. A., instead of the emasculated 10-month bill of the Senate Finance Committee.

And, further:

The opposition to N. R. A. has been loudly voiced and thoroughly publicized. This is your opportunity to join with the better element of industry and business which favors a 2-year extension of an enforceable N. I. R. A., well administered. A factual statement concerning our committee is enclosed as well as a copy of a resolution presented last week to President Roosevelt.

The meeting will be held Wednesday, May 22, Washington, D. C.

And further:

All who make the trip to Washington will have an opportunity to participate in a brief, instructive morning session; to call in person upon their Congressmen in the afternoon; returning home by the night train.

I am wondering if the authors of that call were not in error. Instead of saying "instructive morning session" would be held, they might better have said, "there will be a morning devoted to instructions, to be followed by a call upon their Members of Congress in the afternoon."

The statement goes further:

Wire me at the above address today the maximum number we may expect from your group. Then forsake all other duties until you have doubled that number.

Thus is delegated to the code authorities the solemn duty of beating the tom-toms and bringing to Washington every single unit of industry it can persuade or coerce, in order that the Congress may be impressed with the political power of the agency that the Congress has created through the N. R. A.

The committee's energy did not fag. Two days later it sent out another bulletin, dated May 15, 1935. Incidentally, that was the day after the Senate had passed the Clark resolution. This bulletin has stamped upon it in large letters the word "urgent." It reads, in part, as follows:

MEMORANDUM TO ALL CODE AUTHORITIES

MAY 15, 1935.

The unexplainable action of the Senate late yesterday afternoon in passing the Clark resolution has made it more imperative than ever that our meeting in Washington next Wednesday, May 22, be turned into a one of indignant protest.

The immediate effect of the action of the Senate has acted to stir up the red blood of leaders of industry and business to demand a 2-year extension of an improved, enforceable, and efficiently administered N. R. A.

Our committee predicts the attendance will be three times as great since the Senate's action. One large industry has advised that they expect to have a minimum of 500 present. Pledges of attendance are coming fast.

Donald Richberg, Acting Chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board, has branded the short extension of the act as passed by the Senate with the words "complete folly."

Enclosed is a copy of detailed instructions on the reduced railroad fares for your delegation. Notify the committee immediately of the maximum number representing your group and request railroad forms. It is impossible to properly complete arrangements until we have your definite commitment.

Our committee does not believe those who appreciate the necessity of a 2-year extension of an improved law which can be properly enforced will take this beating, as indicated by the Senate's actions, lying down. The time has come to take our stand in cooperation with others who sympathize with our views. You will have your opportunity at the meeting in Washington next Wednesday.

Additional details will go forward later. A report of a subcommittee on law on the Senate resolution will be ready tomorrow.

Drop all other duties until the largest possible representation from your group has been assured and advise us promptly.

Yours for quick action,

WARD CHENEY, Chairman.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President—

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do I understand that this document is addressed to code authorities?

Mr. NYE. This letter by Mr. Cheney was addressed "to all code authorities." It is headed, "Memorandum to All Code Authorities."

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, it is addressed to a $50,000,000 code authority pay roll in the country and a $10,000,000 pay roll here in Washington?

Mr. NYE. I understand it is much nearer a $100,000,000 pay roll than a $50,000,000 pay roll.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So that in net result the code authority business itself has come to be one of the great industries of America?

Mr. NYE. That is true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And one of the great burdens upon business in the country.

Mr. NYE. I appreciate the Senator's injecting that thought, because it is highly significant that these exhortations are addressed "to all code authorities." This memorandum begins by speaking of the "unexplainable action of the Senate" and calls for a meeting of "indignant protest." We shall doubtless be called upon on Wednesday to explain our "unexplainable action" and to listen to the "indignant protest."

The next paragraph declares that the red blood of the leaders is stirred and exhorts them to demand what they desire.

An exceptionally able and conscientious committee of the Senate, of which committee I am not a member, painstakingly and patiently listened for 7 weeks to facts and arguments presented by the proponents and opponents of the N. R. A. and reached a deliberate conclusion, which was approved by the almost unanimous action of the Senate. This conclusion was reached on the basis of facts and evidence. We are now to listen to demands. I shall speak in a moment of the sources of the demands.

The next paragraph declares that one large industry has advised that it expects to have a minimum of 500 present. Five hundred round-trip railroad tickets from New York to Washington, even at lobby rates, constitute an expensive proposition; and that, in all probability, is only a small item of the total cost. I understand that the committee has chartered a hall in Washington, and certainly it employs a clerical if not a propaganda staff to prepare and issue its instructions and demands.

Obviously the promoters of this scheme are well financed or have means of causing others to join in by a process known in code authority circles as a "great cooperative effort."

The next paragraph expresses complete approval of the utterance of Donald Richberg in which he branded the Senate's action as "complete folly."

Here is a declaration that "this beating, as indicated by the Senate's actions", will not be taken "lying down."

The concluding paragraph is this:

Drop all other duties until the largest possible representation from your group has been assured, and advise us promptly.

If all code authorities drop all duties other than the expression of this "indignant protest", how will the beneficent activities of the great cooperative effort be carried on in their absence from their posts of duty? From whom did Mr. Cheney receive his mandate giving him the power to order all code authorities to forsake their ordinary duties and dedicate themselves to this movement?

I find here a printed certificate issued by the Industry Committee for Extension of N. R. A., Ward Cheney, chairman, "form C. P. A. Exc." This entitles the holder, upon presentation to the carrier, to procure a reduced-rate round-trip railroad ticket to Washington and return. Appended to this form is a statement over the signature of the committee as follows:

3. Any number you require for your members will be supplied direct from this office only. Telephone or telegraph and they will be forwarded immediately.

So much for the aims and methods. Let us look a little further at the personnel behind this organized lobby, for that is what it is.

Of the general committee, 35 in number, all but 2 have New York addresses. Of these two, one appears to be in Greenfield, Mass., and the other in Providence, R. I.

In addition to the list of the general committee, on which I have commented, identified as "Mailing list A", I have here the other mailing lists of the committee. One of them is mailing list B, identified as "general code list." Mailing list C is the "code news list." Mailing list D is denominated "Supplementary mailing list." These lists contain a total of 176 names. All of them bear New York addresses except 13. Of the 13 exceptions, 10 have Washington addresses. These 10 are as follows: Mr. Donald Richberg, Mr. Sidney Hillman, Mr. Leon Henderson, Mr. Prentiss L. Coonley, Mr. W. Averill Harriman, Kiplinger Washington Agency, Whaley-Eaton Service, Mr. Marshall Coles, Mr. James O'Neill, and Mr. Quincy A. Campbell.

Apparently New York City code officials and employees are unanimously for a general extension of N. R. A., and are receiving some moral support from N. R. A. circles in Washington.

Mr. President, the Senate voted for a 10-months' extension of the life of this bureaucracy. That is plenty long enough. The Congress of the United States 2 years ago created a Frankenstein monster which threatens our legislative independence. In the short space of 2 years this bureaucracy has grown to truly menacing proportions. The extent of the menace will be measured on Wednesday of this week by the numbers drawn to Washington by the insistence of their demands and threats and by the effect upon our legislative program.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Has the Senator accurate information as to how many sets of codes there now are?

Mr. NYE. I have not that information at hand.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, there are 731.

Mr. LONG. I had understood that the number went up to 946.

Mr. SCHALL. No; I am very sure it is 731. One hundred and fifty brand-new crimes have been created.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I should like to state that I was told that one of these codes had to be published in several volumes; that there now are some thirty-odd volumes in one of the codes. In other words, it looks as if some of them have to be issued as a series. One of these 731 or 946 codes consists of several volumes. If Congress should take a notion to examine that subject before we get through this debate, it might be a good idea for us to understand the comprehensive matter we are going to have to look into.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator state to which code he refers?

Mr. LONG. I was referring to all of them.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator said that there was one code which embraced several volumes.

Mr. LONG. I understand that there are perhaps 30 volumes of rules and regulations and provisions, all codified, in the case of one code.

Mr. ROBINSON. Which code is it?

Mr. LONG. I do not know which it is; but, from what I understand of the rules and the regulations, all of them have to be considered, the same as the book itself. May I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether that is so or not?

Mr. NYE. I cannot say.

In the act passed in 1933 there is not a syllable creating a code authority. Some 700 of them have been spawned. Lawfully or unlawfully, they are exercising prodigious powers. They have arrogated to themselves the power to impose taxes and levy tribute upon every industry. Their extorted revenues run into many millions of dollars each year.

Mr. President, I find upon examination of these lists of the industry and business committee that an overwhelming proportion of the names are of code authority officials, and particularly code authority secretaries. In almost all, if not in every case, these secretaries are paid retainers of the code authorities, which in turn represent in nearly every case the dominant element of "big business."

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. I had occasion to figure out the extra cost to consumers in a little less than a year, and found it to be more than $5,000,000,000.

Mr. NYE. I presume the Senator means the extra cost to consumers occasioned by the code set-ups?

Mr. SCHALL. By the raising of prices through the codes.

Mr. NYE. Coming back to the question of the code-authority officials who are represented in the organization leading the descent to be made upon Washington day after tomorrow, let it be said that the salaries of these individuals as secretaries or executive directors range from $5,000 and $10,000 to $25,000 and more per annum. Does anyone wonder that they want N. R. A. continued? Does anyone doubt their motive in marching on Washington and demanding that the Congress bow to their will?

Mr. Cheney anticipates an attendance in Washington of formidable proportions. We are all aware that N. R. A. alone has some 3,500 or 4,000 employees, and those employees, even on ordinary days, have so little to do that they can drift in on one of Mr. Richberg's informal little talks.

Certainly, then, Mr. Cheney should be able to depend upon a good-sized nucleus for his meeting without importing a single rooter from outside the city.

In addition to the number that may be requisitioned from the Recovery Administration, we have seen Mr. Cheney's exhortation to all code authorities to forsake all other business, round up their storm troops, and march on the Capitol.

Mr. President, I believe no one will question the power of the code authorities to swell their own ranks of paid representatives with hundreds, if not thousands, of unfortunate business men who are in no position to resist the mandates of those groups which hold over their heads the power of economic life and death.

If my memory is correct, I believe the total annual budgets of the code authorities approximate $100,000,000. Certainly the beneficiaries of that huge sum may be expected to fight to retain their title to this tremendous revenue.

I do not know and I do not charge that any of this money is being appropriated to finance this trip to the Capitol; but I think it would be a timely and relevant inquiry to determine if the representatives of code authorities and their paid employees are coming to Washington at their own expense, or whether their expenses are being defrayed by the moneys which have been collected and in many cases extorted from business men who have no connection with or representation on the code authorities.

Let me say, however, that I feel sure that those individuals who are not representative of or paid by the code authorities, but who are being dragooned to come here by the code leaders, are in all human probability paying their own way.

An examination of the Industry and Business Committee file shows that an overwhelming proportion of the leaders of this movement in the general committee and the subsidiary committees are identified with code authorities or with the N. R. A. In other words, Mr. President, this assault upon the Congress is by, for, and of the N. R. A. and the code authorities.

Its transparent purpose is to maintain code and N. R. A. bureaucrats firmly entrenched in their pay rolls, and to maintain "big business" in the saddle through the vehicle of the code authorities so that price fixing and the other devices of controlling or destroying competition may be perpetuated.

Mr. President, I had prepared a resolution to present, but I find that there are some errors in it which it will take some time to correct. It is a resolution calling upon the National Recovery Administration to submit to the Senate within 3 days information showing whether or not any individual or individuals included in the lists of those sponsoring the call for this meeting in Washington are or have been officials or employees of the National Recovery Administration, or officials or employees of any of the several code authorities, together with the total annual salaries or other compensation paid to these individuals from the United States Treasury or from the funds of the code authorities. I shall have to withhold the resolution until certain corrections can be made.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, since the subject of the N. R. A. has come up, I desire to add just a few words to what has been said. I had not, however, intended to submit any remarks on the subject at this time.

There have come to my office 333 of the postal cards referred to. Only 10 of the cards were for the continuation of N. R. A.

I have received a few letters from automobile dealers. The majority of the automobile dealers who have written me have been in favor of a continuation of the code, but a few of them are opposed to it. I desire to read just a paragraph from a letter from an automobile dealer:

The National Automobile Dealers' Association has requested us to write you, asking for your help in keeping the automobile code in effect. This would be against our personal wishes, as we are not in favor of this code, and we believe the majority of the independent dealers feel the same way, as every one of the dealers whom we have approached on this subject have expressed themselves against the code.

That letter came from an automobile dealer located in the southern part of North Dakota. I have another letter from an automobile dealer in the northern part of the State, which would indicate that the two letters evidently had no connection. The automobile dealer located in the northern part of the State writes me as follows:

I am writing you to express my opinion of the automobile code, which I understand will come up before the Senate shortly.

As I see it, the code has not helped the car dealers in any respect, as ruthless competition, price cutting, and overallowances are as prevalent as before the code.

The only difference I see is the hundreds of dollars per year it costs the dealer to keep the code authorities on the pay roll. I was strong for the code at the beginning, but after its being in effect this long and falling worse every day, I think it is time it was knocked out.

Mr. President, I merely desire to offer these as typical of the expression of opinion of those who have written me.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I understood the reading of the letter, the complaint of the author is that the code does not permit price fixing. The letter refers to the practice of price cutting among dealers, which means, of course, competition. Some complain of the codes because they are alleged to have permitted price fixing, while others apparently complain because the codes under which they operate do not permit price fixing.

Mr. FRAZIER. This dealer stated that he was in favor of the codes in the beginning, but seems to think they have not had the effect which was intended.

Mr. ROBINSON. He states the particulars, or, at least, one particular, in which he has been disappointed, and that is that competition among dealers still continues.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; price cutting.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; that is competition within limits.

Mr. FRAZIER. I noticed in another letter which I have from another automobile dealer that he complains that the codes are not being enforced. He indicates that it seems to be impossible to enforce them, judging from the experience they have had. He thinks it is not worth while to keep the codes in existence because they cannot be enforced.

PATRIOTS AND PROFITEERS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, this is the eighth Congress and the sixteenth session since the armistice of 1918, since we first postponed the payment of our acknowledged debt of the petty wage of $1 a day for service here and $1.25 a day for service "over there" to the boys who offered their all to "save democracy" in the World War. The only obstacle to the payment of that debt to patriotism appears today to simmer down to the hard-boiled pride of the profiteers.

They seem determined never to acknowledge their debt to the men whose awful sacrifices in war made for these profiteers their billions. Every argument they have advanced has been answered over and over from their own records and by their leading authorities.

They know that the bill which passed the House three times and now has passed the Senate will reduce the public debt by cashing over $2,000,000,000 of interest-bearing debt long outstanding.

They know that the proposed currency issue will cut down the country's interest burden by a total of over $1,000,000,000, or at the rate of $112,000,000 a year until 1945—a boon to taxpayers and a help in balancing the Budget.

They know that the currency circulation of today is less than in 1920, although the population is 20,000,000 greater, and they know that the gold reserve today is more than double that of 1920. And they know that this $2,200,000,000 of new currency is not only needed but will stimulate every line of business in every hamlet in the land.

They know that our chief financial peril of today is bond inflation and interest on bonded debt, and yet they propose to substitute further bond issues as a substitute for currency in the hope that by further delay they may postpone the inevitable pay day.

During the past sessions of Congress during this administration, bill after bill has been railroaded through Congress advocating and pretending inflation, and 57 bureaus have been created, crops have been plowed under, pigs killed, processing taxes levied to the amount of $800,000,000, "blue eagles" mounted by the million, and corn-hog and other checks distributed by the billion—all aimed at boosting prices by what they termed "controlled inflation." And now, when a real measure of direct stimulus to all business is voted by Congress, they shout "inflation", when the only inflation peril in sight is the bond inflation of $12,000,000,000 or more, which they propose to increase.

If the President fears inflation, why did he draft and railroad through Congress something like 15 so-called "inflation acts" in 1933 and 1934—all fizzes, except in aiding the price boosts of monopoly by N. R. A. codes and in levying processing taxes to destroy business by increasing the costs of production? The effect of both of these unconstitutional delegations of legislative power was to depress most of the legitimate business of the country.

The immediate stimulus of the Patman currency bill, passed the other day, began with the very day of passage by the Senate—as shown by 4 successive days of steady and normal price advances, both in commodities and in prices of common stocks on the New York Stock Exchange.

This country will never have the confidence which comes from a clear conscience until it pays the debt for blood sacrifice to the boys in khaki brown—the debt on which it has postponed payment for 17 years. The country will never have certainty of aim or peace of mind until it settles that debt, and settles it right—without piling up further debt to curse the country.

The President tries to drown the memory of his dodging and ducking antics—drown the shame of his ingratitude—by going afishing. He backs and fills, bluffs and threats, then goes afishing to ascertain the sentiment of the people by a trip on the Nourmahal to consult Vincent Astor, who as a war profiteer realized a net income of over $1,000,000 a year for each of the 5 years 1915-19, inclusive. He can listen to Astor 3 weeks at a time but refuses to listen at all to the 3,500,000 who fought to "save democracy."

He has demanded $5,000,000,000 in one lump sum subject to his own allocation in the campaign period when he is candidate, and he says he will give relief to 3,500,000 workers with that $5,000,000,000. However, to pay the debt of the Nation and afford a long-delayed relief to the 3,500,000 veterans who fought to "save democracy" at $1 a day for home service and $1.25 a day in Europe, and pay that debt in a currency issue involving no taxation, and amounting in all to a total of only $2,200,000,000, is more, he insists, than the country can stand.

Five billion dollars for the President's own campaign is national recovery, together with one and one-half billion dollars left over from last year's appropriation, and prospect of another $5,000,000,000 next year. However, a small fraction of that great amount, with which to pay the campaign wage of the veterans, is more than the new deal can stand—unless there is attached to it a bond issue as a bonus to the coupon shearers.

The distinguished Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo], for 6 years Secretary of the Treasury under a former Democratic Administration, tells us that the so-called "inflationary" danger of this currency issue will be about as great as to throw a shovelful of sand into the sea.

Neither the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Eccles, nor the financial head of the R. F. C., Mr. Jones, see any inflationary peril in this currency issue.

The distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] calls our attention to the sound precedent set by Great Britain during the past 2 years of issuing currency to reduce the public debt.

In short, the one obstacle to the final payment of our veteran debt in currency, as the soldiers request, appears to be as I first stated—the obstinate pride and ingratitude of the profiteers who are determined that no recognition of their debt to the veterans for the billions reaped from war profits shall be registered by the Government of the United States. Thus an old adage of history repeats itself:

Greatness despises its stepping stones.

Those of great wealth, with enormous war profits, depise the men who by sacrifice in war were the stepping stones of 20,000 new millionaires and several score of billionaires. Here is the secret of these 17 years of ingratitude to the 3,500,000 American survivors of the World War.

The attitude of profiteers like Vincent Astor, who reaped an income of a million a year for each of the 5 years, 1915-19, seems to count for more at the White House than the voice of the people as registered in the passage of the Patman bill by overwhelming majorities in three successive sessions in the House, and now in the United States Senate.

When the patrician wealth of Rome, which reaped the fruits of conquest won by its fighting farmers of the rural districts, refused to reward the veterans by yielding to them enough land even to feed a goat or plant a vineyard, the conquering veterans deserted Rome and won their homesteads in the forests of the North and West, even as far as the Baltic and North Sea—and Rome was left without defenders, except a worthless rabble fed on doles by such politicians as Cataline. It was then that Rome fell.

When Nero found the veterans gone, he vented his spite upon the Christians and slew them by hundreds, and then to calm his thoughts went out on a hill to fiddle.

After the Patman bill passed the Senate the other day, the local press tells us the President went to fish in an artificial pond up in the hills of the Blue Ridge, with a distinguished escort of statesmen and secretaries, where he caught in daylight hours some fish planted there by the Government, and then in the evening was solaced by the music of a renowned fiddler, Mr. Vandergoshen, who played Turkey in the Straw. So now let us not be surprised to learn that Turkey in the Straw was the tune which Nero played while Rome burned, whereby history now repeats itself.

One word more. The stock argument which we have heard for 17 years from those who opposed, first, any payment of the veteran debt, and, second, opposed any payment before 1945, is this—that we should not pay for patriotism. I am wondering how many of these patriots stick to their text with regard to their own pay for patriotic service. Would they be satisfied even with the patriotic pay of $1 a day at home and $1.25 abroad?

Many of these patriots demand for themselves a salary of $10,000 to a million a year, besides their war profit. The first statement which these patriots offer should be: "Take my own case. Look at my salary. Look at my war profits. Look at what Uncle Sam does for me in the way of patronage plums—for me, a patriot. Look at my tax-exempt income from shearing interest coupons. Look and weep for me, a patriot!"

And our poor Vincent Astor, rear admiral of the flagship Nourmahal! Only a million a year in war profits for 5 years in a row! Look at Vincent, host of the man who writes the White House veto. Then look at that armorial sign of the "new feudalism" behind the veto: "In hoc signo vinces"—"Under this emblem you will conquer."

THE PERIL OF BONDED DEBT

Mr. President, every monarchy, every dictatorship, is built on bonded debt, and is promoted and extended by constant issues of government bonds, or government deficits converted into bond issues—the insignia of bond slavery.

All the wars of modern history, all the spending orgies of ancient dictatorships and empires, were built on bonded debt. Even the World War, into which we were dragged to "save democracy", was not agreed upon until consent was given by the Rothschilds, by Lombard Street, and Wall Street, that they would finance it and accept a bond mortgage debt upon the lives and property of the countries engaged, to the amount of $100,000,000,000 or more. Bonds bought the World War and all the blood and ashes thereof.

Henry Morgenthau, Sr., father of Henry Morgenthau, Jr., our present "greatest financier since Hamilton", has testified that Wall Street's consent to join Paris, London, and the Rothschilds in financing a world war was known in New York as early as May 1913, or over a year before the war was precipitated by the hiring of an assassin to fire into the cab of the Austrian grand duke on the Serbian border.

The concrete reasons why monarchy, or any other style of imperial autocracy, relies upon bonded debt for maintaining its hold upon a subject people is plain enough, namely:

First. Bonded debt is a mortgage debt, not only upon the living generation, but upon the generations to come. In order to make temporary war and emergency powers permanent, you need only a permanent debt to keep the people in permanent subjection under the sovereign power to tax.

Second. Bonded debt means the unlimited extension of the sovereign power to tax, which, as John Marshall told us in the famous United States Bank case of 1819, is "the power to destroy."

Third. Bonded debt divides a people into classes: A tax-exempt feudal class who control the Government and a tax-bearing industrial class who are subjects of government.

Fourth. The "power to destroy" by seizure of private property, confiscation of the fruits of industry, under power of taxation, represents the supreme power of autocratic government, whether the autocrat be king or dictator, or a permanent dictator called emperor.

Bonds place in subjection the people of the country to the Federal Government and its swarm of patronage hunters, bureaus, and barnacles, "brain trusts", and ballyhoosers, court favorites, and tax collectors.

Bonds are well named. They are chains upon the limbs and weights upon the backs of industry, which pays not only the wages of honest labor and the costs of living, but pays the interest bill to the coupon-shearers and the tax levies to support the Government tools and political agents of the bond coupon-shearing conspiracy.

The peril menacing American liberty and this Republic today is the peril of bonded debt, which, authorized today to the amount of $40,000,000,000, imperils every industry in the United States except two. These two are:

First. The bond interest coupon-shearing industry, which we make tax-exempt.

Second. The Government manufacture of bureaus and political jobs under a Tammanyized spoils system maintained by taxation of industry under the sovereign "power to destroy."

Mr. President, one of the duties for which the Senate is here assembled is to meet our long-standing debt to the veterans who in 1917 offered their lives, liberty, and pursuit of happiness, as a blood-sacrifice upon the altar of the god Mars, sometimes called "Moloch", through our blundering misconception and misdirection in the War Act of 1917.

In behalf of that war service, and its 350,000 American casualties and a war-disabled and dependent list of 1,200,000, we, in our amazing generosity of 10 years ago, decided that they were entitled to a wage of $1 a day for service in the United States and $1.25 a day for service on the French front as the American mercenaries of European war powers and international bondholders and munition makers.

But we did not pay those khaki boys promptly in cash, as we paid the profiteers of war. No! Though the profiteers got theirs in billions, cash down, sometimes in advance, we told the veterans who "saved democracy", that they could have theirs in 1945—by which time most of them might reasonably be expected to be under the sod, as Wall Street hoped.

We gave them adjusted-service certificates payable in 1945, which, while called a "soldier bonus", are in fact simply a bonus to the life insurance companies and the interest-coupon shearers. And if we now, under the Patman bill, call in and cash these certificates, we commit the capital offense of cutting off the tax-exempt incomes of these coupon shearers—unless we pass the Vinson substitute, providing for another bond issue. That is the question now facing us, under the threat of a White House veto.

Bond issues serve three concrete ends, all filled with peril to American industry and American liberty:

First. They create a preferred class of tax-exempt beneficiaries who, in practical effect and influence, control the Government by controlling the financial foundation and current credit on which Government operation rests.

Second. Bond issues make the coupon-shearing industry, through tax exemption, the leading American industry, because the entire cost of Government is thrown upon legitimate productive industry, which has to support both the Government and the population.

Third. Bond issues afford the opportunity of autocratic government to build itself up by arrogant irresponsibility and appropriation demands to subsidize and corrupt a nation, and not only exhaust the revenue-yielding powers of existing productive industry, but tax the generations to come, and thereby build up an imperial bureaucracy that saps the country's resources and destroys its liberty.

Give any administration the unbounded power to expend billions in bonded debt—which means the power to tax the generations to come to support the present Government machine—and you give it the power to regiment and crack down every productive activity, and destroy government by the people.

There is not a Senator sitting in this Chamber who does not know—as two former Secretaries of the Treasury, the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], have warned us—that the bonded-debt peril, the irresponsible squandering of billions beyond our means to pay, is already the outstanding menace of the United States today.

This menace of irresponsible finance—which has added $14,000,000,000 to our public debt and accumulated deficits in the short period of 2 years and 2 months of a new deal, in planned emergency—is the basic fiscal cause why industrial production and investment expansion in the United States have declined during the same period in which the industries of Canada and Great Britain have expanded.

Government-bond expansion has taken $3,000,000,000 of loans from industry since 1932 and transferred these billions to the idleness of that mountain of frozen assets called the "public debt."

We have piled up the public debt already until the interest burden exceeds collections of income taxes. This means that our annual payments to the coupon shearers exceed our tax collections from productive industry. Any private corporation run on such a reckless and irresponsible policy would be thrown into a receivership on petition of the stockholders to the court.

No man in the Senate Chamber needs to be told of the present menace of the bond-inflation insanity. Our inflation danger is not currency inflation but bond inflation. We have contracted our money circulation by withdrawing from circulation $8,000,000,000 in gold—the greatest monetary contraction in history—and our total currency circulation per capita is far under that of the prosperous year 1919, when our gold reserve was less than half what it is today.

Our inflation danger is bond inflation, already billions above the World War peak, and rising higher every time the White House sends over a mandate for huge sums to be expended subject to the allocation of the Executive.

Through investment fear and uncertainty, under the black shadow of this towering mountain of public debt, investment in the common shares of industrial, railway, and utility stocks in 1934 was 100,000,000 shares less than in 1932—and this is on the New York Stock Exchange alone.

Investors realize that mountainous public debt means mountainous and long-sustained taxes to meet the interest burden. Therefore investors are shunning the industries that pay the taxes, and are either going over to the one tax-exempt industry—the coupon-shearing industry—or moving themselves and their holdings abroad.

Recently the press announced that two large houses—one of them a Morgan and the other a Vanderbilt—were selling out and going over to England, which today shows a balanced budget and a treasury surplus.

Report from a Washington brokerage house is to the effect that two other fortunate holders of local capital have discovered another method of escape from pending financial irresponsibility; they are building vaults on their country estates and depositing therein platinum, which has not yet come under Government ban. And they are not telling the Government or the underworld where those vaults are located.

The difference between the bond issue favored by the White House and the currency issue voted by the Senate is simply this:

The bond issue has an interest coupon attached to it which calls for yearly increase of taxation upon productive industry, and the further expansion of the coupon-shearing industry, which employs no labor and pays no taxes.

The currency issue has no interest coupon attached to it; no bonus to the coupon shearers; no increase of taxation; no mortgage upon the people; no chain and shackle of bond slavery; but, on the other hand, it will wipe out an outstanding debt of $2,000,000,000 in interest-bearing adjustment-service certificates. This greenback issue will reach directly every hamlet in the land, wherever there is a veteran or dependent family, pay their bills to stores and shops, pay for clothes for needy homes, school books for the children, doctor and drug bills for the sick, and be a real measure of work relief for the men we sent "over there" to "save democracy."

Have we come to the pass where we cannot even pay our veterans their $1 a day or $1.25 a day to fight for their country, unless we put the payment in the form of a bonus to coupon shearers?

Is there only one industry in the United States for which we have governmental concern—and that the coupon industry, to which we grant the special privilege of tax exemption?

What kind of logic is that which in 2 years and 2 months of bold experiment piles up $14,000,000,000 of debt and deficits and Executive allocations—all calling for bond issues representing the greatest bond inflation in the peacetime history of the world—and then complain at an appropriation of $2,200,000,000 to meet the blood wage due the veterans unless that wage carries a bonus to the bondholders?

When July 4, 1936, arrives we shall have an interest-bearing debt of $36,000,000,000, or $10,000,000,000 above the World War peak, and $17,000,000,000 above the interest-bearing Federal debt on July 4, 1932.

On that Independence Day, 1936—a day which the present Executive and his brain trust do not honor, except possibly to go fishing on the flagship Nourmahal—we shall appear before the people of our respective States and there, under the folds of the Stars and Stripes, and under no insignia of monopoly-beaked Blue Eagles, we shall render the account of our stewardship to the boys who fought for us, to the taxpayers on whom we have foisted a bond-interest burden of $1,000,000,000 a year, and to the farmers and home makers who eventually will pay in added cost of living and added cost of production all of this interest burden pyramided 25 to 50 percent.

What will we have to show for this orgy of bond inflation? Shall we shout the false claim that we have added to employment in productive industry? Then let us explain this statement of fact by the American Federation of Labor:

In April 1932 the unemployment total of the United States stood at 7,000,000, and on April 1935 it had jumped to 11,500,000.

In other words, we shall tell our home folks on July 4, 1936, if we are truthful and trustworthy representatives of their will: "I forgot my stewardship to you, and I obeyed the mandate of the White House. So I voted to boost your bond burden by 80 percent and your unemployment army by 64 percent while increasing your taxes to meet bond interest by 66 percent."

We may seek an alibi in trying to show what we have built up with that bond mortgage. We may have a tale like this, if we have the time to look over the never-ending catalog of bold experiments: We have produced 57 new bureaus and 13 new commissions and added 200,000 bureaucrats and barnacles, buccaneers and ballyhooers to the Executive patronage—under our 1932 platform pledges to cut down this Federal patronage by at least 25 percent.

We have increased the number of public charges on Government doles from 10,000,000 in 1932 to 22,000,000 in 1935—until one-fifth of the one-time self-reliant and independent people of the United States are singing with the old lady in the poem of Will Carleton:

Over the hill to the poorhouse, the busted, bond-inflated United States Treasury, I'm trudgin' my weary way, while surrendering my homestead to Corn Wallace, of Porktown, in exchange for a corn-hog check.

Somebody read to me the other day the list of war profiteers compiled by the Senate Munitions Committee, the profiteers whose annual incomes exceeded $1,000,000 a year during the years 1915 to 1920. I still remember some of those names. One thing was plain: This was the list of those patriots, largely having Wall Street offices, who thought that $1 a day for a soldier at home and $1.25 a day for a soldier abroad was too much; that payment even in 1945 was too soon; and that if any payment at all was made, it should have a mortgage-string attachment as a bonus to the coupon shearers.

Here are some of the names that stuck in my recollection:

At the top of the list of $1,000,000-income recipients were three members of that family of feudal barons—the Astor family. There was John Jacob Astor, New York City. There was Waldorf Astor, New York City; and there was Vincent Astor, New York City, the rear admiral of the President's flagship Nourmahal.

I thereupon recognized what the President meant when he recently told the press that Washington, D. C., was a poor place in which to listen to the voice of the people. In order to learn the true sentiment of the people of the United States he had to spend 3 weeks talking to Admiral Astor on the deck of the Nourmahal.

Running down the list to the letter "D", I caught the names of six members of the du Pont family—all in Wilmington, Del., where the President's Cabinet members and bureau chiefs have incorporated themselves under charters of perpetual existence to give life tenure to their 2-year emergency powers, and then by the one-over-one policy of Fabius Maximus expand these emergency powers to the government-ownership program of the Soviet General Council.

Coming down the list to the letter "M", I caught the name J. P. Morgan, New York, who pays income taxes in Paris and London and charges to his American income the planned losses. Morgan, it seems from press reports, is selling out his American possessions and moving over to London, where the Government has a balanced budget and is reducing its bonded debt and taxes instead of piling them up as a threat to industrial expansion. He is playing safe—taking no chances against that day of financial judgment, the inevitable payday to which all nations, as all men, come sooner or later, when debts must be met in taxes or repudiated by revolution.

Then I come down the list to the letter "R" and here the names of three Rockefellers of New York City, who recently gave $1,000,000 to build a new office for the League of Nations at Geneva, while protesting that the veterans who built up the Rockefeller fortunes by billions in the World War should wait for their $1.25 a day till 1945.

Finally I get down to the letter "V", with two Vanderbilts who spend most of their time in Paris and the Riviera, and the letter "W", with two Whitneys, famed for race horses, as the Astors for yachts and fishing.

I look in vain through the "B's" for the name of that great munitions financier and Rothschild liaison man, Barney Baruch, the reason being, I am told, that the records of his incomes during the war period were conveniently destroyed so that no one would be able to question his version of his great, patriotic sacrifice for his country as contact man between Europe and Wall Street and between Wall Street and Washington.

I note that Vincent Astor, who owns the White House magazine Today and the President's fishing yacht Nourmahal, derived a net income of $1,000,000 or more a year for the entire period 1915 to 1919, inclusive, or 5 years of the $1,000,000 a year war income. This is what makes him such a high authority when the President desires to know ex cathedra the voice of the American people with regard to the wisdom of paying the veterans $1 a day for service at home and $1.25 for service abroad. If the Senate wants to know the facts regarding the voice of the people, let them follow Roosevelt and go fishing with Admiral Astor.

This $2,200,000,000 of the greenbacks, such as those which won the Civil War, will bring joy to 3,500,000 American patriots and their home folks. That is all the administration claims for the $4,000,000,000 in one sum subject to the allocation of the Executive in his emergency of 1936. Which is more American—$2,200,000,000 for patriotism or $4,000,000,000 of bonds for politics?

After a reduction of our circulating medium by withdrawal of $8,000,000,000 of gold and by further contraction of currency all along the line, except a slight expansion of silver, the people of the United States will be glad to see once more those old United States notes—with no mortgage coupons attached either to the notes or to their taxes.

Yes; they are printing-press issues, as are all the money issues of the United States, and all the bonds. But they are honest pay-as-you-go issues and pile up no interest-bearing debt for your industries, your homes, and your children and children's children to pay in the years to come.

They have been due since November 11, 1918. We can spend billions on bold experiments, billions at the suggestion of "brainless trusts", billions to destroy the pigs and corn, the cotton and wheat. Why not pay our debts now, in the year 1935, to these 3,500,000 veteran boys and dependents whose work relief in 1917 was freely given to their country and flag in patriotic service, and why not pay them in the honest-to-God currency of Uncle Sam, without a coupon or a bond chain attachment to curse the memory of this day?

Finally, bear in mind, you who support the bond issues of the "brain trust" and Blue Eagle era, there is not a bond issued by this administration that can hold up its head and say: "I know that my redeemer liveth."

They are redeemable in nothing but the wind of irresponsible ballyhoo. And they are already discredited by the baby bond, which sells at $18.75 for a $25 infant—a discount of 25 percent—because of their birthmark of infantile disability.

SHALL WE DISCHARGE OUR DEBT?

Mr. President, shall we discharge our debt to the veterans without an interest-coupon attachment, and save taxpayers over $100,000,000 a year paid to coupon shearers?

By a currency issue, cashing the veteran certificates now, a part of our mountain of public debt, we shall save the country a compound-interest burden which between now and 1945 will exceed $1,000,000,000.

Shall we discharge our soldier debt, as we have already discharged our soldiers, and not keep them waiting till 1945 when most of them will lie in Flanders fields scattered throughout the States?

Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to Samuel Smith in 1823, declared that the necessity of adding annually to our debt by new loans was ruinous. Yet that same ruinous necessity is urged upon us as a substitute for the currency plan adopted by an overwhelming majority of both Houses of Congress.

"Discharge of the national debt" was the theme of Jefferson's letter to Elbridge Gerry in 1799, and to accomplish that end Jefferson declared:

I am for a government rigorously frugal and simple.

What would Jefferson think, if he were alive today, and looked upon a debt orgy of billions, adding a new alphabetical bureau every second week since March 4, 1933, patronage additions by hundreds of thousands, and then, to cap the climax, a President demanding for his own allocation in one campaign year a lump sum greater than the total annual revenues of the Government?

In his first inaugural message in 1801 Jefferson declared for—

Economy in the public expense that labor may be lightly burthened I deem one of the essential principles of our Government and consequently one that ought to shape its administration.

Jefferson's second inaugural address in 1805 discloses how he had rid the Government of tax collectors covering our land with officers. He would have been interested in the new-deal creation of 57 new alphabetical bureaus and the levying of $800,000,000 of processing taxes by the minions of the A. A. A. Jefferson said:

The suppression of unnecessary offices, of useless establishments and expenses, enabled us to discontinue our internal taxes. These, covering our land with officers and opening our doors to their intrusions, had already begun that process of domiciliary vexation which once entered is scarcely to be restrained from reaching successively every article of property and produce.

If you would take all the unnecessary offices, the useless establishments, and expenses, the swamp of Federal officers opening our doors to their intrusions, as they existed in Jefferson's time, and multiply the total that afflicted the land in 1805 by about 1,000 you would approximate the alphabetical bureau patronage that today cracks down American industry under 730 N. R. A. codes, threatens American liberty with jail and fines under 151 new edict-made crimes, plows under the growing crops, slaughters 6,500,000 pigs and 200,000 breeding sows, levies processing taxes to hamstring every industry that furnishes a home market to the farm, and piles up $15,000,000,000 of debt and deficits and Executive allocations that threaten as an avalanche not only all productive enterprise today, but the taxpaying income and industry of the generation to come.

The autocrat of the new deal recognizes, as appears in his messages to Congress, only two classes of public service in which to practice economy: First, those who serve the Nation by offering their lives on the battlefield; second, civil-service clerks not appointed by him. For these two classes not created by him, he plays a penny-ante game of drastic economy. For all the rest of the vast executive bureaucracy, the most gigantic patronage army known to government on earth, he plays the game according to the rules of Tammany Hall, with the sky as the limit of debt and deficit and doles and bond-delirious debauchery.

Does the Senate recall the first so-called "economy" proclamation of March 10, 1933, just 6 days after the inauguration? What was the first chapter in that program of new-deal economy? Look at that chapter head. It is expressed in one word, "Veterans."

Roosevelt had discovered that in the fiscal year 1931 there had been a Treasury deficit of about $400,000,000, or one-tenth of the amount of the yearly deficits now prevailing, and that in the fiscal year 1932 the deficit was something over $2,000,000,000, which represents the deficit total for only the first 6 months of the present fiscal year. Therefore, he finds:

For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road to bankruptcy.

The Treasury deficits under 2 years of the new deal represent an aggregate total three times that of the entire 4 years of the preceding administration. If 3 long years of the depression up to the inauguration of Roosevelt showed the Federal Government on the road to bankruptcy, what shall we say of the $12,000,000,000 of accumulated deficits produced by new-deal bold experiments with industry and the Constitution?

The Roosevelt method of balancing the Budget by measures of economy, began by cutting down one-half, first, the pensions of disabled veterans, and second, by a cut of 15 percent in the civil-service lists of clerks not appointed by him.

As in March 1933, so in May 1935, Roosevelt still sees red whenever he sees a veteran, and begins to shout economy.

If Congress votes for a true economy by issuing currency to pay off the veteran debt today and save $1,000,000,000 in accruing compound interest, he comes here with a veto, and demands a further addition to our debt in new bond issues, a practice which Jefferson denounced as ruinous.

"Discharge the national debt", said Jefferson, and following that American precept of wise and true economy, both House and Senate have passed this Patman bill.

The White House prefers the method described by Jefferson as ruinous, the method of adding annually to our debt by new loans.

Declared Thomas Jefferson in a letter to Kercheval, 1816, in summing up the evils of debt and patronage in the Federal system:

We must make our election between economy and liberty or profusion and servitude.

Little did Jefferson dream that the day would come in this Republic when profusion and servitude would be the Fabian policy of the party which claimed him as godfather.

During Jefferson's first term, in 1803, he wrote to M. Pictet concerning the dangers to democracy of arming the Executive with patronage powers and what today are known as "doles." Jefferson wrote as follows, and thereby laid down the principle which may yet be the issue of 1936:

We are endeavoring to reduce the Government to the practice of a rigid economy to avoid burdening the people and arming the magistrate with a patronage of money which might be used to corrupt and undermine the principles of our Government.

Read that and then read the Roosevelt message of January 1935 demanding $5,000,000,000, or two billion more dollars than the total annual revenue, subject to the allocation of the Executive.

In the Jeffersonian simplicity of the new deal of 1935, to discharge the veteran debt of $2,200,000,000 is ruinous, while $5,000,000,000 of Executive allocation to meet the emergency of the 1936 campaign is national recovery.

We are asked to become particeps criminis to this ruinous policy of mounting debt and Executive patronage, of bond issues and interest coupons, and march in goose step under the banners of a million Blue Eagles to sustain a veto, uphold the policy which Jefferson declared ruinous, and by grant of further bond issues accomplish what Jefferson described 130 years ago, as—

* * * burdening the people and arming the magistrate with a patronage of money which might be used to corrupt and undermine the principles of our Government.

Of course those who still stand 100 percent for their pre-election promises:

To discharge the debt by paying it off;

To reduce the cost of Federal Government by not less than 25 percent;

To maintain the national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced;

To afford the fullest measure of justice and generosity for all war veterans;

To condemn the usurpation of legislative power by executive departments and bureaus;

In short, those Members of Congress who stand for cutting off the coupon strings to Wall Street and the patronage strings to Tammany Hall, to discharge our debt to the veterans once and for all, and restore the Government to the people by a return to Jeffersonian and Abraham Lincoln principles, have no obligation to sustain this new-deal veto.

The constituency which we represent resides neither at the White House nor on Wall Street. Our people reside in their respective States. The sovereignty which we are sworn to uphold is the 48 sovereign States. We are 100 percent for them, not only before election, but after election and now. If 4,000,000 doughboys have the courage to cross the sea and face the cannon of Europe, we shall not shrink from our plain duty to face a veto club.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 82. An act to authorize the disposal of surplus personal property, including buildings, of the Emergency Conservation Work;

S. 1222. An act to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Garrison, N. Dak.;

S. 1342. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to Board of County Commissioners of Itasca County, Minn., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the road between the villages of Cohasset and Deer River, Minn.";

S. 1680. An act to include within the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, certain public lands within the exchange boundaries thereof; and

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am about to request a postponement of further consideration of the pending naval appropriation bill; but before moving in such a direction I desire to call certain facts to the attention of the Senate.

A very considerable part of this appropriation is for new-ship construction. In the light of the manner in which the shipbuilders have been plundering us during late years, it seems to me we ought to provide such safeguards as we can against any continuation of the process which has prevailed.

The Committee Investigating the Munitions Industry has studied the shipbuilding matter extensively. It has not yet had time to complete summarizing its findings and formulating its recommendations. A few more days would enable us to report formally to the Senate.

It seems to me there is no great urgency about the passage of the naval appropriation bill, and that the committee might be afforded a chance to submit to the Senate in formal and final order its recommendations, and such suggested amendments to the pending bill as may be called for.

Of the findings of the committee, let me recite but a few which stand out in my mind as being deserving of consideration in connection with the pending appropriation bill.

First, it has been found that there has been no real or reasonable competition in bidding for major naval construction since 1927; and in 1933 and 1934, at a time when over $183,288,000 of work was awarded to private yards, a sellers' market prevailed entirely, of which the shipbuilding companies took full advantage.

It has also been found that because of this lack of real competition the price of naval ships built in private yards has been altogether too high.

Again, the Navy Department did not use the navy yards as yardsticks to measure the costs or efficiency of the private yards, although they could easily have served this purpose.

It has also been found that the designing of certain types of vessels by certain private yards, or combinations of yards, has made the Navy dependent upon these private yards.

At least one shipbuilding company invoked a war scare to influence Congress—a war scare that they urged through the newspapers of their State—to encourage the enactment of a large spending spree for the Navy for more ships.

It has also been found that the shipbuilding firms are in a position to profit by the failure of disarmament conferences, and by all the agitation for increased armaments, and have so profited. They helped bring about the failure of the Geneva Conference in 1927. Since 1927, naval construction amounting to over $305,266,000 has been awarded to private shipyards.

The failure of the executive and legislative branches of the Government to define the size of an adequate defensive Navy leaves the way open for financially interested groups to lobby for their own interests in the name of patriotism, quite regardless of whether or not the result is a costly offensive Navy.

Again, it has been found that the rush of awards in 1933 and 1934 created a situation which resulted in overcrowding of the yards and designing departments, with a consequent delay in construction.

Again, it has been found that the combined shipyards have succeeded in securing from the Navy important changes in the form of their contracts, together with concessions on fines for delays in construction.

The combined yards have carried on a consistent attempt to discredit the navy yards, one company official even preferring no naval construction at all to having it done in the navy yards.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to an interruption?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Was any evidence adduced before the Senator's committee showing, first, the capacity of the Government yards for the construction of such vessels as our appropriations call for? Secondly, was any evidence adduced tending to show that construction in Government yards is as cheap as construction under private contracts?

Mr. NYE. As the debate progresses, I think it will be possible to present in very thorough and detailed manner the experience of the Government yards in ship construction. As to the capacity of the navy yards, the committee has not yet completed the study which it intends to make in that direction. However, it should be said that at the moment the navy yards are all choked, and at the present time a showing could be made by the private yards that the 50-50 basis of shipbuilding should not prevail from now on, because the navy yards already have more work than they can handle. Then, too, the reason for this choking can be shown. The navy yards are utterly dependent upon the private yards for the designing. They cannot do any shipbuilding until the private yards are ready to submit to them the final plans and designs; and I know the Senator from Utah is going to find large interest in that subject when it is laid before the Senate. I am appealing at the moment for a delay in the further consideration of the pending appropriation bill for only a matter of a few days until the committee can put its report in final order and place it before the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NYE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Has there been any prohibition by law or any regulation upon the part of the Navy Department against the Government yards or men in the Navy providing the plans, so that the Government-owned yards might proceed upon the basis of plans submitted either by their own designers or by those who are in the Navy Department?

Mr. NYE. I should have to refresh my memory on that subject before speaking with any authority at all; but, off-hand, I have been impressed by the testimony of naval officials that they were quite content to leave things just as they are, with the Navy dependent upon the private yards for their designs.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If we can rely upon some of the correspondence of the private shipbuilders—and I say "if", because I have grave doubts about some of the things they have pretended to say in their own correspondence—if we can rely upon it, not only is there in evidence a direct disposition on the part of the Navy Department to encourage construction in private yards and the allocation of construction to private yards as against the navy yards, but there is in evidence an actual invitation to the private shipbuilders to get together for the purpose of doing that precise thing.

Mr. NYE. Of course, there is; and I thank the Senator for his interruption.

The findings of the committee reveal that the shipbuilding companies are united with the steel companies, the manufacturers of generators and electrical supplies, the manufacturers of boilers, and other suppliers in their interest in a constantly larger navy and a constantly larger merchant marine. These groups, taken together, have exerted a very considerable political influence.

Again, the revelations show that the rush of business dumped into the yards in 1933 and 1934 resulted in higher bids for no other reason than that there was plenty of work to go around, according to the testimony of company officials.

Again, it is revealed that the experience of the Government with the major private shipyards at the time of a national emergency in the World War showed that the companies secured large profits; that they secured cost-plus contracts and added questionable charges to the costs; that they took profits on these ships after the war taxes had been repealed; that they secured changes in contract dates to avoid war-time taxes; that they did most of the war-time construction after the war was over; that in one case a yard built additions only under threats of being commandeered; and that after the war the yards bought for a song additions to their yards built at Government cost.

Again, the disclosures have been to the effect that the shipbuilding companies spent $250,000 on a lobby to secure the passage of the Jones-White Merchant Marine Act, which provides Government subsidies to shipowners, and also provides that in a national emergency the private owners may sell the ships to the Government at more than their original cost to the owners.

Another revelation is that one company, the Electric Boat Co., has a practical monopoly of patents on submarine construction. It has been actively engaged in attempts to influence Congress and the departments.

The shipbuilding companies, together with other Navy contractors, have met and endeavored to increase their costs to avoid the effect of the Vinson Act, limiting profits to 11.1 percent of costs. One of these officials stated—and I am now quoting him—"If we stand together, we will be stronger than the Bureau of Internal Revenue."

Another revelation is that no effective provision is in force to check up the costs of private shipbuilding companies under the Vinson Act, limiting profits on naval construction.

A few days' delay would enable the committee to recommend amendments which would certainly strengthen the hand of the Government in dealing with the shipbuilders and in greatly decreasing the cost of our national defense.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the point which the Senator is now making calls for a larger attendance, because it is an appeal for a delay for a few days in order to receive information not immediately available from the Munitions Committee, which appeal I feel ought to be made to a larger attendance.

Mr. NYE. I suggest to the Senator that that may not be necessary. At least before we make that an issue, I think it would be well to wait and see what might be the pleasure of the Senator in charge of the pending appropriation bill with respect to it.

I should like to add, in that connection, that, though the committee is not prepared to do so, I and other members of the committee are prepared now to offer certain amendments, but naturally we would all much prefer to await the time when they could be presented possibly as amendments in which the entire Munitions Investigating Committee could concur. It seems to me it would be better to refer the amendments which are proposed to the committee, and have the bill recommitted to the committee for the consideration which I am sure the committee itself would think they merited.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I only had in mind giving him a larger audience, because the matter is so important. I think we ought to have a quorum present.

Mr. NYE. Before a quorum is called may we hear what is the pleasure of the Senator in charge of the bill in this respect? Is he going to insist upon proceeding with the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from South Carolina certainly intends to proceed with the consideration of the bill, so far as he is concerned. I understand that the Senator from North Dakota says he has certain amendments to propose, and whenever the proper place in the bill shall be reached I presume he will offer the amendments, and they will be considered by the Senate. Ample time will be afforded for their consideration. We can discuss them, and the Senate then can express itself on the amendments.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	La Follette	Radcliffe

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] thought it advisable, in light of the request I was about to make, to suggest the absence of a quorum. I had stated briefly numerous findings by the committee conducting the munitions investigation respecting the subject of shipbuilding, which is so largely involved in the pending naval-appropriations bill, and I had suggested that while the committee was not prepared at this moment and would need a few additional days to be ready to submit a formal report to the Senate on its findings and its recommendations, nevertheless, individual members of the committee were prepared to offer amendments to the pending bill to accomplish the remedies which are so desperately needed.

I was about to suggest and to move that the naval-appropriation bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, where there would be opportunity to consider the amendments which are to be offered, and I make the motion at this time that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, where consideration may be afforded such amendments as may be offered to the bill.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. Are the amendments which the Senator has in mind legislative in character?

Mr. NYE. I suppose with respect to some of them a question could be raised as to the propriety of tacking them on to the pending appropriation bill; but for the most part I am sure such a question could not be raised. Certainly Congress has a right to determine how the money it is appropriating is to be spent. As respects the matter of alleged collusion among the shipbuilders, surely we should be able and privileged to take such legislative steps in connection with the bill as would prevent a continuation of the game the shipbuilders have been playing.

Mr. STEIWER. As to some of the proposals, they would be in the nature of limitations on an appropriation bill?

Mr. NYE. Yes; they would be. I ask that my motion may be put.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that this bill has been pending before the Committee on Appropriations for some time. The Senator who makes the pending motion is a member of the committee. I do not know that the Senator presented his views with reference to these matters to any member of the Appropriations Committee or to the subcommittee having charge of the bill. Certainly I have no idea as to the amendments to which he has referred.

The representatives of the Department and of each of the Bureaus have appeared before the committee. The subcommittee has gone into the matter of the construction of ships which has been referred to by the Senator. The hearings will disclose that the question was discussed by persons outside of the Department; and, having all those matters in mind, this appropriation bill was reported.

If there are any legislative matters in the mind of the Senator when he speaks of amendments, the Senator knows that under the rule the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill would have to make a point of order against them. Such legislative matters should be referred to the proper legislative committee. At least one member of the committee of which the Senator is chairman, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], has frequently stated on the floor of the Senate that he is opposed to legislation upon an appropriation bill, and upon every possible occasion he has made the point of order and has objected to legislation upon appropriation bills.

Therefore, I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that we ought to proceed with the consideration of the bill. The amendments which he has in mind which are limitations upon appropriations, and are in order, can be offered and considered, and if they are meritorious the Senate will adopt them. Then we can go to conference with the amendments and see what the action of the conference will be. However, no purpose would be served by sending the bill back to the committee for consideration of some amendments which the Senator has not suggested to the Appropriations Committee, though he is a member of the committee.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that the work of our special committee was not in such shape as would enable us, or enable any individual Senator, to lay before the Appropriations Committee its findings or its recommendations. The special committee has not, until a very recent date, been able to deal with the question at all. A delay of another 3 or 4 days would enable the special committee to lay before the Senate and before the Appropriations Committee its complete findings and formal and final report so far as shipbuilding is concerned, and it seems to me would save a world of time.

I desire to say I feel sufficiently deeply on the subject of some of the proposed amendments that I dare say the Senate could not hope to pass this appropriation bill this week, whereas it might go to committee, and these legislative questions and points of order could there be raised, and we could accomplish very early passage when the bill should be reported back to the Senate.

If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me, I shall suggest one amendment which is to be proposed, and then ask him if he thinks a point of order might properly be raised against it. It is an amendment designed to abolish collusion among private yards by setting up a control and examination of papers by the Comptroller General. Would such an amendment be subject to a point of order?

Mr. BYRNES. In my opinion, Mr. President—and I do not profess to be an expert upon the subject—it would depend entirely upon the language in which the amendment was drafted by the Senator. As stated by the Senator, I think it would be subject to a point of order at this time. However, I do not know what the Senator could hope to gain by sending the bill back to the committee, because the Senator knows, as a member of the committee, that under a resolution adopted, not recently, but several years ago, the Appropriations Committee determined not to report a bill containing legislative proposals, and the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill is instructed to make the point of order against such proposals. Therefore, if the proposal is a legislative one it ought to go to the Naval Affairs Committee, which committee I know is anxious to consider the legislative proposals, and at times is somewhat jealous of the Appropriations Committee undertaking to usurp its authority and its power, and put legislative proposals on a naval-appropriation bill.

Mr. NYE. It seems to me we would expedite matters considerably by threshing out these points, because, as the amendments are offered here, I am sure there is going to be diligent effort on the part of some to accomplish the adoption of the amendments to the pending bill, whatever some may argue as to the point of order.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the able Senator from North Dakota indicate the nature of other amendments which, in his judgment, should be considered by the committee? Some of us have not heard the prior discussion.

Mr. NYE. Before answering the Senator from Colorado, I should like to yield to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in order to give the Senator from Colorado a further idea with respect to the suggested amendments, I may say that I am very anxious to submit an amendment in the nature of a limitation upon the appropriations which will prevent the sale of designs, machinery, or other equipment to foreign governments based upon patents and usages in our own Navy. I think a case can be brought to the attention of the Senate which makes it very essential that such a precaution be written into the pending measure as a limitation upon the appropriation.

May I, in the Senator's time, ask the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] whether he would consider that sort of an amendment to be subject to a point of order?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I submit that I would not be the individual to determine that question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; but the Senator from South Carolina is the individual clothed with responsibility for making the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; if, after consideration of the amendment, I should decide that it would be subject to a point of order, I should make the point of order. However, I am not sure that it would be. If it were a limitation upon an appropriation, it would not be subject to a point of order. I shall be glad to talk with the Senator from Michigan with reference to the matter and consider the question as to whether the amendment proposes a limitation.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado asked that I indicate to him the nature of other proposed amendments. The Senator from Michigan has named one. As a result of our studies and my own efforts to frame what I should consider recommendations which have grown out of the hearings and the testimony, amendments most assuredly are in order in several directions. As to these recommendations, my opinion is that since the yards are overcrowded, and since the adjusted-price contract system is undesirable, and since it is advisable to have plans fully prepared before awards are made, we can well afford to see to it that no ships of the 1935 program, except aircraft carriers, shall be awarded to the yards unless they can be completed within 30 months. Again, since the size of the Navy is a matter of national foreign policy, it seems to me there should be no more use of funds for naval construction unless specifically authorized by Congress; and yet a tremendous amount of building is being done right now without direct authorization from the Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator indicate where it is being done?

Mr. NYE. Through allocation of the public-works funds.

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly the Public Works Act specifically authorized construction of ships under the treaty.

Mr. NYE. Yes; but there has been no direct appropriation by Congress where the ships have been built under the public-works fund.

Mr. BYRNES. No; but the Congress of the United States in that measure authorized the construction of those ships and in that measure appropriated the money to be used to build them. Under the pending measure, however, departing from the other method, there is a specific appropriation for the ships to be constructed under the head of "Increase of the Navy", just what the Senator favors.

Mr. NYE. When the Public Works Act was before us, if anyone had ventured to suggest that as much would be spent for naval construction as was spent from the public-works funds, there would have been far greater delay than there was in the passage of the Public Works Act.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator knows that not one dollar was spent which was not authorized by that act.

Mr. NYE. Certainly not.

Mr. BYRNES. It would not be done.

Mr. NYE. Certainly not.

Mr. BYRNES. Therefore, if there was any mistake of judgment, it was the act of the Congress, because the expenditure was authorized by the Congress.

Mr. NYE. The Senator and I are not in disagreement at all on that point; but I repeat that the ships which have been built under the public-works allocations have been built without direct appropriation by Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not agree, because I do not know what the Senator means by "direct appropriation." It was a direct appropriation for the specific purpose of constructing ships. In the appropriation the number of ships was not specified, but the appropriation was made by Congress for no purpose other than to build ships.

Mr. NYE. The Senator will recall there was such widespread displeasure created by the large use of public-works funds for naval construction that the new Public Works Act very specifically provided that no ships were to be built with public-works funds.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not recall that; but so far as I am concerned, I have always believed that funds for the construction of ships should be provided in the naval supply bill. However, the Congress directly authorized the expenditure of funds from the public-works fund under the Public Works Act for this purpose. We cannot complain about the executive department in that respect.

Mr. NYE. For the information of the Senator from Colorado, I hasten to say that, since there has been no real competition among shipbuilders in 1933 and 1934, the navy-yard and private-yard estimates should be prepared before bids are received from private yards, thus giving the Navy a chance to weigh and carefully measure the sort of bidding that is being offered.

Again, examination of navy-yard estimates and private-yard bids by the Comptroller General should be had before contracts are awarded, on the basis of past bids and estimates and changing costs, the Comptroller General to recommend to the Navy whether bids should be readvertised or not; and awards should be made to navy yards on the present basis of 50-50 unless the bid of the navy yard is $500,000 lower than that of low private bidder on a cruiser, or $1,000,000 lower on an aircraft carrier, or $200,000 lower on a destroyer, in which case the navy yard would get the work.

Since the Government at present has assumed most of the risk in naval shipbuilding through adjusted-price contracts, there should be accomplished the elimination of the 10-percent-profit clause on all ships where the Government assumes the risk and substitution of the 5-percent-profit clause in its stead and a careful check by the Comptroller General of accounting methods adopted to circumvent the 10-percent-profit limitation and spot checks by the Comptroller's men of construction costs.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. With reference to the question the Senator was discussing a moment ago, I wish to read from the Public Works Act the authorization for the construction of ships. That act authorized the President to use the funds—

If in the opinion of the President it seems desirable, for the construction of naval vessels within the terms and/or limits established by the London Naval Treaty of 1930, and of aircraft required therefor and the construction of heavier-than-air aircraft and technical construction for the Army Air Corps and such Army housing projects as the President may approve.

Of course, the Senator knows that we have not constructed to the limits of the treaty; but, on the contrary, we are now 78 vessels short of treaty strength. Therefore, there was no expenditure in excess of the sum provided in that act.

Mr. NYE. With Japan having served notice that she is going to ignore the treaty, of course, from now on we are going to have to raise our ante as she raises hers.

A further recommendation is that there should be employment by the Navy of sufficient high-salaried civilian personnel to establish a designing and planning section which will draw all plans and designs for future ships. A complete break-up of our dependence upon private designers and companies is much to be desired. There seems to be real call for the complete prohibition of foreign sale of any designs, patents, or military equipment used by the Navy until 5 years after its actual mounting on United States naval vessels or actual use by the American Navy, as suggested in the amendment which the Senator from Michigan proposes to offer.

Since the naval missions in both Peru and Brazil have placed the United States in the position of teaching those countries methods of attack on their neighbors, there should be no more naval missions and quick recall of the present ones.

There should be a requirement for registration with the Congress of all officials or representatives of contractors or subcontractors contacting the Navy Department or Congress, and semiannual publication of that list with full statements of their salaries and expenses from all sources; also, for reports on all entertainment of Navy officials or employees above the grade of lieutenant commander by Navy contractors or subcontractors or prospective bidders for naval work or their representatives, to be reported by the Navy semiannually and to be published; also, semiannual reports to the Senate by all naval contractors and subcontractors and their associates of all expenses for lobbying for naval or merchant-marine legislation.

A recommendation of merit, it seems to me, would be an amendment to the pending bill allowing the Navy to use any of the funds provided for shipbuilding for enlargement or conditioning of present Government-owned shipbuilding facilities.

In keeping with some of these thoughts I have prepared a series of amendments to be offered to the pending appropriation bill. These amendments may be summarized as follows:

The first amendment plans to abolish collusion among private yards by setting up a control and examination of papers by the Comptroller General.

Another amendment would be to prevent the sale of any designs or machinery or other equipment to foreign governments until after 5 years from the time of its first use by the Navy Department.

A third amendment is designed to make the practice of the Navy uniform with that of all other Government departments and to set up a standard form of contract which will give the Comptroller General the power to impose fines, penalties, and so forth, for nonperformance.

Again, there is room for an amendment to forbid Navy Department officials from making inflammatory statements on foreign affairs without the consent of the State Department.

There is also certainly room for an amendment which would have the effect of having the Secretary of State approve the location of naval maneuvers and war games before they are held.

Another amendment which may be proposed would insure complete registration of all lobbyists on naval matters, and a statement in detail of the income of such lobbyists for publication by the Senate. This is a stronger proposal than the general lobby bill recently reported for consideration by the Senate.

Then, too, there should be an amendment forbidding the use of any pending funds for the continued support or maintenance of the naval commissions which we are sending to foreign lands.

Another amendment has been prepared which would set up a design department in the Navy, which would make the Navy independent of private companies for its designing.

Roughly, I may say to the Senator from Colorado, these are some of the amendments which individual members of the special committee have in mind. I suppose, if time were allowed for the committee to act as a committee upon them, there would be accomplished some elimination and perhaps some addition. However that may be, I plead once again with the Senator from South Carolina to let the motion to recommit prevail. I can assure him that there will be absolutely no time lost in giving the Appropriations Committee the opportunity it will want and need to weigh these proposals and bring the bill back to the floor of the Senate, and we will accomplish its passage many days quicker than it can be accomplished here if we are going to have to fight this entire matter out on the floor as respects every amendment.

Mr. President, I insist upon my motion being put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. BYRNES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

So the Senate refused to recommit the bill.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, evidently the House cut from the original bill a sum in the neighborhood of $20,000,000, which the Senate committee has restored. Will the Senator from South Carolina indicate for my information just where that restoration has been accomplished in the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I am sorry, but I did not hear the question.

Mr. NYE. The Senate has restored what was eliminated by the House in an amount of about $20,000,000. I should like to know where that has been restored in the pending bill.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator is mistaken in the amount. The amount which, I think, he has in mind, is $11,000,000. He will find it restored on page 49 of the bill.

Mr. NYE. Was the whole amount of $11,000,000 restored by the Senate committee?

Mr. BYRNES. It was. If the Senator will look at page 49, he will find it. Of course, it is restored by making available unexpended balances in the naval funds.

Mr. NYE. That was all that was restored?

Mr. BYRNES. I understand the Senator is referring to the increase of the Navy.

Mr. NYE. That is correct.

I should like to make the point this evening, before adjournment is taken, that practically all, if not all, the ships which are planned for in the pending bill are not to be completed before late in 1938 or early in 1939. By the end of 1936 the naval treaties will, so to speak, have expired and England and Japan may start with a different type of ship—for example, a 15,000-ton cruiser. If our money is pledged to the present type, we may be building now what we shall not want a year from now or 2 years from now.

I cannot express myself too strongly in voicing protest against the continued wild, mad, unrestricted expenditures of moneys for naval construction, because there appears to be satisfaction in the method on the part of men who have proven themselves wholly unconscionable in looting Uncle Sam when it comes to these mad programs of naval construction. The record which has been made showing the gains of the shipbuilders who plunder the public funds in the name of national defense, and the records showing that some Navy Department officials are alleged by the shipbuilders and their agents to have aided in such gains, dictates that hereafter the Congress should take every possible precaution against repetition of past experiences.

If we are to insist upon keeping up the mad naval competition which is raging in the world today—always in the name of national defense, of course—then let us at least try to make our dollars buy more of national defense. At least we ought to be as solicitous about our naval appropriations as we are about appropriations to other departments of government. Our actions have been quite strange as respects these things. A call for national defense seems to leave us cold to its costs. We seem to say, when that issue is involved, "Who dares to quibble? Who wants to quibble about costs and prices when our national defense is at stake?"

I do not think the Senate can too often be reminded that the last war gave us what every war has given civilization, namely, a break-down of our economic structure, hard times, depression on every hand; and if we are wondering at our difficulty in meeting the challenge of the existing depression, we need only look to the degree of waste the 4 years of the World War wrought. We ought to have anticipated—we ought to have known—that we should have to pay the penalty which has been paid during these days of depression.

One would think after that experience which was ours, which was that of civilization generally as the result of the last war, that one thing we would have been very, very careful about after that war was to see to it that we did not engage in programs which would plunge us into another war. While men may say, "In time of peace, prepare for war", the facts are that history does not record a single instance of wild, competitive races in armament which have led to anything other than more war.

In the years preceding the World War a great mystery man, so called, was at work in Europe arming all Europe with the same identical instruments of warfare. Each nation was buying of his wares in the name of national defense. He is referred to as a man of mystery—Sir Basil Zaharoff. He is a man of fortune, a good salesman, who years ago learned that by selling 1 submarine to Greece today he could sell Turkey 2 submarines tomorrow, and the following day he could sell Greece 2 more submarines, because Greece would never countenance Turkey possessing more submarines than she herself had; and Sir Basil, selling submarines to both countries, discovered how easy it was to create a fine market for himself.

He enlarged upon that practice, carried it into all Europe, gained for himself the right to sell munitions of this, that, and the other order, and then armed all Europe. It led to just what all mad races for armament have led to in the past, and what they will continue to lead to in the future, a test of strength, and a will to see who is best prepared. When the World War was over, it found Sir Basil Zaharoff the richest man in all Europe, because the opportunity had been afforded him, or he had seized the opportunity, to go forth and arm each country against the other, arming Europe against itself.

I think no one man was more responsible for that terrible conflagration of 4 years than Sir Basil Zaharoff, who instigated and created much uncertainty and a great deal of suspicion, simply to bring about a larger source of profit to himself. It is hardly to the credit of civilization that, the World War being over, the year 1919 found the President of the United States and every crowned head in Europe pinning decorations upon the breast of Sir Basil Zaharoff for his services. Those crowned heads, instead of doing that, ought to have been crowning Sir Basil with a club for his responsible part in the terrible visitation which came upon the earth by reason of him and his acts.

However, that is neither here nor there. We ought to have learned something as the result of the war. With the war over, however, we find ourselves with a depression on our hands which we finally conclude can be conquered only through a great national recovery program which calls for a titanic Public Works program to engage in public construction so that men can be afforded employment, and we appropriate millions of dollars—hundreds of millions of dollars—for public works.

The Senate ought to know now, if it did not already know, that the very first allocation of public-works money to accomplish recovery from the depression which war gave us was the allocation of hundreds of millions of dollars to the American Navy with which to build more ships, and, it can be fairly said, with which to build more ships to get ready for more wars, so that we can have another depression to give us another public-works program under which to build more ships!

Of course, all of this is in the name of national defense; and when we Americans are led to believe, as we are almost annually led to believe, that our defense is wholly inadequate, we are just about as irresponsible when it comes to measuring our steps and weighing their cost as people can possibly be.

We are now running through the annual appropriation bills for the various departments. Some weeks ago we had before us the appropriation bill for the State Department, calling for only $13,000,000 to maintain that Department for the ensuing year. If any one in this Chamber or at the other end of the Capitol had offered an amendment proposing an increase of a million dollars in that $13,000,000 appropriation to enable the Secretary of State to engage upon the activities of his Department in the cause of peace, the one offering that kind of an amendment would have been laughed off the floor and told, "What is this madness you are thinking? What is this madness you are dreaming? In times like these you would increase the appropriation for the State Department a million dollars, in times when we cannot balance our Budget, in times when we are having such grave difficulty meeting our obligations." Why, such an amendment would not have had the ghost of a chance.

But the very next week saw brought forth into the Senate the annual appropriation bill for the Army, a larger bill than ever had been proposed before in peace time, but not too large for the Senate, which immediately proceeded to make it larger on the basis of an amendment calling for increased personnel of 46,000 men in the Army, which means an increased annual expenditure of not $1,000,000, but anywhere between $20,000,000 and $40,000,000. Whereupon men who otherwise are keenly interested in balancing budgets forget all about the difficulty we were experiencing in balancing ours. Of course, national defense! We cannot quibble about costs there. We must not stop to measure our ability to afford the kind of national defense for which some men are calling.

There is pending before the Commerce Committee at this time a so-called "maritime bill" which is only another name for a ship subsidy, but that bill, too, is clothed under the cloak of national defense. National defense we must have! How many millions under this kind of legislation are we going to pour into the coffers of the shipbuilders without any better check than we have had in the past upon actual cost, without regard to what we are going to get for our money? Are we going to continue paying homage to these men who have looted Uncle Sam at every turn of the road when the chance has been given them?

Now comes the naval appropriation bill. It came to us from the House carrying a larger appropriation for the Navy than has ever been known in peace times, but the Senate is all set and ready, determined, in the name of national defense, to let nothing stand in the way of increasing that appropriation beyond what the House has written.

Of course, we are doing these things to prevent war. We are affording a larger and more adequate national defense because that is the way to prevent war. Every one of us from the time we left the cradle has been taught that the sure way to peace and the sure way to make secure the peace of the world is by adequately preparing for war.

I do not know how many miles of international boundary there may be which have been adequately prepared for war and which have not had war visited upon them. I venture to say that for every such mile of international boundary upon the earth, with a military show upon it, for every such mile that has prevented war there can be brought into exhibition a thousand miles of international boundary without a military show upon it, without a fortress upon it, without a manned gun, and without a patrolling soldier upon it, but which, too, has never had war.

We have such a boundary in which the United States has a common interest, 3,000 miles of boundary north of us on neither side of which during more than 150 years has there been any show of a military nature. We all know full well how near or how far we have been from war along that boundary because of the absence of that preparation for adequate national defense. It may be that 3,000 miles of border like that are a terrible example to have on this earth. It may be that we ought to do away with it. The women on both sides of that entire boundary today are creating monuments along it—monuments not of bronze commemorating some great battle or some great soldier, but monuments in the form of gardens. "Peace gardens" they are being called. That is a bad thing to have in the world—anything commemorating 150 years of peace without a show of armed strength.

I wonder if fear of monuments of that kind is what has caused our military spokesmen in this country to go before a standing committee of the House of Representatives, as military authorities did go within the last few weeks, and there testify to the need of fortification along the Canadian boundary, there testify to the need of large gigantic plans which would enable us to seize the islands of Great Britain which are close at hand.

We have all read of that experience. The representatives of the Army who told their story, who there testified, it seems thought they would testify in an executive way and that their testimony would not be revealed; but it was revealed, much to the consternation and embarrassment of our country. Immediately it was revealed, quite naturally our neighbors to the north and their mother country, Great Britain, with a start sat up and asked, "What is this all about? What does this indicate?" At once the call was upon someone in the United States to say that the military men who had given that testimony were speaking for themselves and not for the Government. The call was upon the United States to court martial those Army officers, but, instead of chastising the Army officers, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy chastised the chairman of the House committee who let that information get out to the public.

We would have the world believe, and if we could divorce ourselves from our American militarists there would be good reason for the world to believe, that the United States is a peace-loving nation of people who are not bent in any degree upon doing anything that would be offensive to another. If our national-defense plans seem to be large, then we want the world to understand that they are large only because we want more adequately to assure ourselves of a national defense. We are not preparing for trouble with anyone. We give the world constantly to understand that our preparation is only for that unseen thing which might arise, we do not know from what direction.

I wonder what Members of this body would do tomorrow noon if the newspapers tomorrow morning should blazon across their front pages headlines announcing that the Japanese Navy was moving eastward across the Pacific, not with any ulterior motives at all, but solely for the purpose of finding a spot some few hundred miles off the coast of California to do its annual maneuvering, its practicing, its summer training. We know what we should do. We should rise up here and want to know what it all meant. We should be asking, "What is the matter? Is not the water around Japan deep enough to enable the Japanese Navy to do its maneuvering there at home?" We know what our attitude would be if Japan should take that sort of a step; and yet, knowing that, at this very hour our own American Navy is moving westward across the Pacific, while we are wondering why the people of Japan are so easily led into believing that they must prepare in a larger and larger way for the war that is coming with Uncle Sam, for the war that Uncle Sam is getting ready to wage against Japan.

I am astonished that so little reaction has come from Japan in answer to this maneuvering of ours.

Under date of May 16 there appeared in a Washington newspaper a dispatch from Tokio as follows:

Secretary Swanson's "line of demarcation" in mid-Pacific is acceptable to Japan, it was indicated in semiofficial circles today, but use of the one hundred and eightieth meridian as a barrier for war games can have no legal international status. An authority close to the marine ministry said:

"Japan has no fear that the American Fleet will venture into Japanese waters."

And then this statement, quoting this Japanese authority:

Japan's maneuvers, planned for July, will be limited. The fleet's action will be close to our shores, and entirely of a defensive nature.

What is it that has convinced us that our practicing, our maneuvering, must be conducted thousands of miles away from the shores which our Navy is presumed to defend? Should we wonder at the suspicion abroad? Should we wonder at the suspicion in Japan? Perhaps we can make them understand, as I have so often declared, that our action in sending the fleet away out there across the Pacific is only reflective of the great American habit of doing things in the biggest possible way and in the most expensive way, and that it costs more to maneuver a long way from home than it costs to maneuver close to our own shores. Or if we have difficulty in prevailing upon them to see that, perhaps we can cause them to understand that we have had 3 or 4 years of very severe drought here in America—a drought which has reduced the water level at the Pacific and Atlantic shore lines to such an extent that we no longer have a sufficient depth of water close to home in which to do our maneuvering. Therefore, we must go thousands of miles away to engage in our maneuvers.

Why all this madness? Why all this thoughtlessness? Perhaps it is not so thoughtless. We in America like to say that the burdens occasioned by our own preparations for another war, for our own national defense, are attributable solely to the part which the rest of the world is playing. We say that the other nations of the world evidently have learned no lesson as a result of the last war. They are going on madly preparing for more war. Therefore, we have to "keep up with the Joneses" and be prepared for the hour when madness may break loose from its moorings over there, and seek to make trouble for us.

It seems to me that when those hours come when we wish to point our finger of responsibility to someone else, it is always well to take a little inventory and a little stock of ourselves.

It is true that every nation on earth is increasing its budget in preparation for more war. Since 1913, the year before the World War came, Russia, Italy, France, and Great Britain have increased their budgets for the maintenance of armies and navies all the way from 30 to 44 percent.

Over the same years Japan has increased her budget for the same purpose 141 percent. That makes one stop and give heed to what is going on. Over the same identical years since 1913, for the same identical purpose—namely, that of maintaining armies and navies, getting ready for more war—the United States of America has increased its budget 197 percent, to a point which finds our country today spending in getting ready for more war more money than is being spent by any other nation on earth; and yet some of us have the audacity to take our places upon occasion and say, "Is it not too bad that the rest of the world does not follow our example?" when, as a matter of fact, were they fully following our example, we can well guess what might be upon the earth today.

This today constitutes the maddest peace-time race in armaments the world has ever witnessed. This very hour finds Japan and the United States engaged in the maddest naval competition that peace time has ever observed. It seems to me it is high time we were seeking to ascertain the reasons for this insanity, or this madness, or this thoughtlessness, or this carelessness, whatever it may be.

In the light of what we have learned during the past year, I think our madness can be explained by the fact that there are some people who find very large profit in these programs of preparing for war; and the wilder the call for preparedness, the larger the profit. The answer is to be found in the fact that there are some people who have learned that there are some things worse than war; that war is not such a bad thing after all, because their profits prove to be larger in time of war than they are in time of peace; and then they are perfectly willing to engage in programs calling upon governments to engage in these mad races, not at all fearful of what the races may lead to, because the worst they can lead to means greater profit to these makers of machinery used in preparing for war.

The World War, 4 years of it, created in America alone 22,000 new millionaires, men and women who could not have had their millions except as men were bleeding, dying, or ready to bleed and die upon fields of battle; men and women who now are saying, "Perhaps what this country needs to get out of this depression is another little war."

In every stratum of American society we hear that thoughtless voice, "Perhaps what we need to get out of this depression is another little war"; and it all contributes so largely to the aid of the cause which is at our doorstep in the Senate at this moment, when we are asked to appropriate more hundreds of millions of dollars with which to build more battleships in the name of national defense—in the name of national defense where, pray tell? If we really mean "national defense", why are we not acting as though we meant what we said?

If we mean an adequate national defense, why are the military authorities in the Army and the Navy laying out the plans in blueprint which are to have us ready for the next war, plans in blueprint which call for battles, not upon our own shores, not upon our own lands or in our own waters, but blueprints which call for the transportation of 3,000,000 men across thousands of miles of water, and that in spite of the fact that the people of the United States, were the decision left to them, would almost unanimously declare that never again should the United States ask its manhood to leave its own shores or go to someone else's land to engage in war. The same percentage of people would be the first to rally to their country's cause and to the cause of their flag if our shores were attacked, or if any foe were so foolish as to attack us in our own waters or upon our own shores. But here we go, a little more this year than last year, a little more next year than this year, to build more ships, with only one industry, with only one set, drawing anything that resembles gain from it, namely, the shipbuilders and their agents who are doing so fine a job of building up a sentiment that seems to tolerate these annual raids upon the Treasury of the United States in the name of national defense.

I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what the plans are for recessing tonight?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have understood from the Senator from Arkansas that he wants the Senate to proceed a little while.

Mr. NYE. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, there is a bill which I wish to call up, and I think there will be no controversy about it. The bill might be acted on now, if the Senator from Nebraska will withhold his suggestion for a moment.

Mr. President, the bill to which I refer—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, is my suggestion of the absence of a quorum to be ignored?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico asked the Senator from Nebraska if he would not yield to permit him to bring up a bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us have a quorum here in order to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, before the interruption came—

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether it is his purpose to finish his discussion of this very important and far-reaching bill this evening. If it is not, I suggest that the proper thing to do would be to take a recess until tomorrow at the usual meeting time. If the Senator from North Dakota has been on the floor as long as he cares to be and is willing to yield to me, I may say to the Senate that I am perfectly fresh and will be able to take up the discussion now and carry it on to a late hour in the evening.

Mr. NYE. The Senator from Missouri suggested that he would take the floor if I had been on the floor as long as I cared to be. I can only say that after I have been on the floor 1 minute I have been on the floor as long as I care to be; but I have only begun the argument which I desire to record in the Senate on this question. I cannot finish this evening within any reasonable time.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will yield further, I will say that I have no desire to interrupt the Senator's argument in any sense; but I feel that there is a determination on this side of the aisle to require the Senator from North Dakota to continue his occupation of the floor beyond the time when he probably would like to suspend for the day. I simply wish to make the statement that such determination does not need to embarrass the Senator from North Dakota, because if he will yield the floor I will talk until the Senate is ready to adjourn.

Mr. NYE. I should like to say that if the occasion calls for it, and if there is insistence on driving this bill through in a short time, I am prepared to stay here all night long if the Senate wishes to stay in session that long.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I address myself, with the permission of the Senator from North Dakota, to the Senator in charge of the bill. As I understand, it is desired to have an executive session, which will take several minutes. It is now after 5 o'clock. If we should continue in session as long as 5:30, that should be sufficient.

Mr. BYRNES. I told the Senator from Utah that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] desired to have the session continue until 5:30, and that I had no doubt that at 5:30 the Senator from Arkansas would move an executive session.

Mr. KING. If we have an executive session now, it will consume the time until about half-past 5.

Mr. BYRNES. I am sure the Senator from Arkansas will return to the floor in a few minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a while ago I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, which, however, went over on objection. I now desire again to request its consideration; and I ask if the Senator from North Dakota will yield to me for that purpose?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico if the matter may be handled in such a way as not to interrupt my argument.

SUSPENSION OF ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, earlier in the day, during the call of the calendar, Order of Business No. 649, Senate bill 2536, was called, and the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] objected to the consideration of the bill because there was no report from the Department of the Interior on it. I could not assure the Senator from Wisconsin that there was a report, because I was not a member of the committee. This afternoon I investigated, and found that the Department had made a report on the bill. I submitted the report to the Senator from Wisconsin, and he said he was willing to withdraw his objection, but would like to have the report put in the RECORD.

I send the report to the desk at this time and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 27, 1935.

Hon. M. M. LOGAN,

Chairman Committee on Mines and Mining,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR LOGAN: Reference is made to your letter of April 9, submitting for report copy of S. 2536, entitled "A bill providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska."

By section 2324 Revised Statutes (sec. 28, title 30, U. S. C.), $100 worth of labor must be performed or improvements made upon a mining location each year until patent is issued, and upon failure to comply with this condition, the claim is open to relocation. The bill proposes to suspend this provision for the present year ending July 1, 1935, as to such claimants as are exempt from payment of income taxes for the year 1934, with a limitation on the number of claims and the acreage for which the suspension may be claimed.

Suspension of work for the year ending July 1, 1932, was provided by the acts of June 6, 1932 (47 Stat. 290), and June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 474), for the year ending July 1, 1933, by the act of May 18, 1933 (48 Stat. 72), and for the year ending July 1, 1934, by the act of May 15, 1934 (48 Stat. 777). While I believe that the conditions generally have improved, especially as to gold and silver mining, I am not advised that there has been such change in the mining localities as to justify denial of the proposed limited relief for the current year. I have, therefore, no objection to the enactment of the measure.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HATCH. In view of the report of the Secretary of the Interior and also the report of the committee, I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2536) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor be performed or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States, including Alaska, during the year beginning at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1934, and ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1935: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in the case of any claimant not entitled to the exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1934: Provided further, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this act, shall file, or cause to be filed, in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1935, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act, which notice shall state that the claimant, or claimants, were entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1934: Provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 lode-mining claims held by the same person, nor to more than 12 lode-mining claims held by the same partnership, association, or corporation: And provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 placer-mining claims not to exceed 120 acres (in all) held by the same person, nor to more than 12 placer-mining claims not to exceed 240 acres (in all) held by the same partnership, association, or corporation.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 20, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

To Thee, the author of all wisdom and goodness, we lift our supplications, our aspirations, and our gratitude; because Thou livest we shall live also; this is our faith and the sum of our hopes. Heavenly Father, Thou art speaking in countless providences, and we pray Thee to speak through us in service, in influence, and in example which bear upon public thought and action. Let truth of transcendent power be disseminated throughout the Republic. Grant that the drift of government, of churches, and of schools may be to make better men. May we be an inspiration in the accomplishment of the work of self-respect, self-assertion, and self-control. In the whirl and din of complex conditions, commercial strife, and contest may patriotism glow fervently in all hearts. To this end regard our Speaker and all others clothed with authority and assigned to public duty. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 17, was read and approved.

JOINT SESSION OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair has agreed to recognize the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], but if any Member desires to make a correction of the RECORD, the Chair will recognize him now for that purpose; otherwise the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the President of the United States desires to deliver a message to a joint assembly of the House and the Senate on next Wednesday. For this purpose I offer the following resolution for immediate consideration:

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 22

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 22d day of May 1935, at 12:30 o'clock in the afternoon for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that this is a privileged resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. It is something unprecedented; I have not heard of it since I have been in Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is that the gentleman from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and I object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of no quorum.

The previous question was ordered.

The House concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A PROGRAM OF SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the administration of President Roosevelt the question of the economic and social security of the people of the United States, the questions of social security and of social justice, have begun to assume the place they deserve in any true democracy. There has never been a time in the history of this Nation when social security has received the attention that it is receiving now.

So strong has the movement for social legislation become that few of its opponents today attempt to oppose it openly. Instead of open and outspoken opposition we now often have attempts to delay the execution of the program, or attempts to weaken the strength and significance of the legislation enacted.

Lip service to social security is not enough. Now that the conscience of the people of the United States has been awakened to the need for a program of real security for the United States we must see to it that the laws that are enacted shall be genuine. We must not, and shall not, be misled by the subterfuges of those who in reality are opposed to the entire program. With this in mind I want to devote this time to a brief discussion of some of the fundamental elements which must be present in any program that deserves the title of social security.

TRUE SOCIAL SECURITY

In our modern society, social security in its true sense means the enactment of laws that will safeguard the fundamentals of life to every human being from the time of birth until the time of death. For in this modern society the individual alone often is helpless. He needs, and is entitled to, aid and assistance of society as a whole, as it is represented by the Government which he has established and supports.

FREE HIGHER EDUCATION

The child-welfare laws and public-health measures which we pass should protect the child from the day of his birth until he reaches maturity. Children who lose those upon whom they depend should be assured maintenance and financial assistance from the Government, State and Federal.

Children should be entitled, as a matter of right, to proper education. Those who distinguish themselves in their studies should be given not only the right to enter a high school but also a university at public expense. A democracy cannot continue to exist without providing, through education, the means of understanding the issues and problems of the day. It took a long time to assure to each child the right to enter high school. The time has come to open the universities at public expense to those students who do not have the means, but who have proven their ability and shown their desire to extend their education.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Health insurance is another law which must come. It should be established in a form which is acceptable to the physician, because its success will depend upon the cooperation of the medical profession. Under present conditions, it means financial calamity for a laborer or a member of the so-called "middle class" to have serious illness in his family. When a case of serious illness occurs, the expenses of doctors, hospitals, nurses, and medicines are so high that the family is saddled with debts which require months, and often years, to pay off. And just as serious—even more so—are the conditions which result when poor people must neglect a serious illness because they cannot afford to pay for the services of a doctor or of a specialist.

Health insurance is the answer. It will entitle people at time of illness to such medical and hospital services as is required by every sickness.

We have heard much about unemployment insurance. It must be understood that this is not job insurance. Unemployment compensation laws guarantee the unemployed a proportion of the previous income through a limited period on unemployment. It will be well to watch and carefully scrutinize the unemployment compensation laws that will be enacted by the Congress and by the legislatures of various States. The Federal law as it is now contemplated is not sufficient. It does not set up a Federal unemployment insurance system. It gives us no assurance that the States will set up adequate unemployment compensation systems. It would appear from present indications that they will not.

I have said time and again that this law is only a beginning. Those who have been fighting for genuine social security intend to press and demand further forward steps.

THE RIGHT TO WORK

However, even the best and most liberal unemployment-insurance law is not sufficient. Above all is this: A man or woman who is able to work, and who is willing to work, should have the opportunity to do so. The right to a job is God-given. Man was created by God with certain physical and mental powers. If he applies them to the natural resources of the earth he can enjoy the fruits thereof. No man will never have security until the right to a job has been guaranteed him. Education of our children means nothing unless they can go out into the world and use that education. Mankind will never feel secure until it knows that the opportunity to work has been guaranteed.

THE ASSURANCE OF A JOB

Unemployment insurance is merely the insurance of a part of the wage income for a limited period of time. It is a great step forward; but it is not enough. We must find the way to assure to every man and to every woman who is willing to work, a job to which he will be entitled when his unemployment compensation benefits expire. Job insurance will be not only in the interest of the individual but in the interest of society as a whole. It will prevent ever-recurring depressions. It will prevent the reoccurrence of such panics as we are passing through. It simply means that when private industry is unable to give employment, and when unemployment benefits have become exhausted, the Government will step in and provide employment for every able-bodied unemployed either through public works or through a system of aids to industry. But whatever the method, the aim is clear.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS MUST BE LIBERAL

And now, what of old-age pensions and old-age insurance? No social security program is complete without them. When a man becomes older, when he no longer has the strength and virility which is required in our modern plants, he should be permitted to retire with an adequate income.

What I say about insurance compensation is equally true of old-age pensions and old-age insurance. It is not sufficient to have old-age pensions or old-age insurance laws. That in itself does not mean very much. The question is, What do these laws provide? How much benefits do they pay? At what age does the payment of old-age pensions begin?

The payment of old-age insurance should not wait until a man or woman is too old to enjoy the days that remain for him in his earthly life. It should be an old-age pension, not a graveyard pension. We should not wait until a person becomes 65 years of age. That is far too old. We should pay to every person in the United States who is 60 years of age or older an adequate pension, so that he may enjoy the remaining days of his life in the surrounding of his own home, and close to his children. We should pay him a pension sufficient for a comfortable and decent livelihood, and not for a bare existence.

WHAT SOCIAL SECURITY CAN MEAN

Social security legislation is designed to take the fear out of life. It is designed to remove the fear of insecurity arising from old age. It is designed to remove the fear arising from unemployment. It is designed to remove the fear arising from illness.

I visualize for the future social security laws which will accompany the individual from his cradle to his grave; social security laws which will step in and watch over the child when it is born; which will assure an education to every child according to his ability.

True social legislation means the payment of adequate unemployment-insurance benefits during periods of unemployment; it means the assurance of a job when unemployment benefits cease. It does not mean relief. The dole has no place in a picture of social security, and after a man or woman has done his or her part, after they have worked and given their share of their own individual happiness for the welfare of society, they will be permitted to retire on adequate old-age pension payments.

This, Mr. Speaker, is not a dream. It is made possible by the technical advances of a machine age, by our ability to produce in abundance all the goods we need. If we who have made the beginnings continue to keep this goal before us, if we press forward along the road which we have begun to travel, then true social security will become a reality in the United States.

FARM MORTGAGE ACT

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Agriculture, submitted a conference report (Rept. No. 968) and statement on the bill (S. 1384) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, on May 16 the gentleman from New York [Mrs. O'Day] had the floor and yielded to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. On that occasion Mr. BLANTON said this:

One unlawful alien now here is awfully anxious to go back to his native country. That is Bruno Hauptmann, and we are going to send him back—

Bruno Hauptmann being a native of Germany.

Thereupon he sat down, and the gentleman from New York was yielded 2 additional minutes. Immediately after her time expired I secured 2 minutes in which to ask this question of the gentleman from Texas:

Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to ask my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, just when and under what circumstances he or anybody else is going to return Bruno Hauptmann?

He had said we are going to send him back to his native country, Germany.

The State of New Jersey having convicted him of murder in the first degree and having sentenced him to be electrocuted within the State of New Jersey, I asked him when and under what circumstances he was going to send him back to Germany. Whereupon the gentleman from Texas said:

We are going to return him through the electric chair to the place he belongs.

I replied:

The gentleman says, "We are going to do it." The State of New Jersey is trying to do it.

The gentleman from Texas then said:

That is a part of the American system of government.

I replied:

It is a part of Jersey justice.

Mr. BLANTON said:

I admit that, but it was Federal money that convicted him and Federal agents who caught him.

I then said:

No; the Legislature of New Jersey appropriated the money.

Then the gentleman from Texas gets his hands on the stenographer's transcript and this is how the RECORD reads:

Mr. BLANTON. One unlawful alien now here is awfully anxious to get back to his native country. That is Bruno Hauptmann, and law and order—

Not "we"— are going to send him back to where he belongs by way of the electric chair.

Changing entirely what he said and making my query absolutely meaningless.

Then when I asked under what circumstances and when he is going to return Bruno Hauptmann, he said:

We, the citizens of the United States, are going to return him through the electric chair to the place he belongs.

Making, of course, the comment on my part—

The gentleman says "'we' are going to do it." The State of New Jersey is going to do it.

utterly irresponsible.

I said:

The State of New Jersey is going to do it—

That is, going to execute him.

Mr. BLANTON said:

That is a part of the American system of government.

It now reads:

The State of New Jersey is a part of the American system of government.

My answer—

It is a part of Jersey justice—of course, becomes the mouthings of a half-wit.

The RECORD now reads:

Mr. BLANTON. I admit that, but it was Federal money largely that worked up the case that convicted him.

Making, of course, my reply foolish—

No; the Legislature of New Jersey appropriated the money.

The Legislature of New Jersey obviously appropriated no money to work up any case that the Federal Government agents were working on.

Now, that is a clear violation of the rules of the House, which says that no man may change his own remarks if they affect the remarks of another. It has been so held. When that is done, it is a question on which a man may claim personal privilege and get up and insist upon having the RECORD changed back to what was originally said on the floor in order not to be the victim of misrepresentations interpolated under the guise of extending or revising remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I would not make much fuss about a little thing like that if it were not for the fact that ever since he has been a Member of Congress the gentleman from Texas has continually abused his privilege with respect to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will not. The gentleman is not going to garble anything I am saying now.

Mr. BLANTON. I will garble it after a while.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; he will. Some years ago the gentleman for a most shameful abuse of the RECORD came within a very few votes of being expelled from this body. It takes a two-thirds majority to expel a Member.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to ask that this matter be expunged from the RECORD and the RECORD corrected as it should read. I am going to let it stand, as far as I am concerned, as a typical example of the character and the service of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if my colleagues will look on page 7707 of the RECORD for last Thursday, May 16, 1935, containing my colloquy with my distinguished colleague from New York [Mrs. O'Day] they will there see that I was duly granted, by unanimous consent, the right to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House permit a Member to revise his own remarks to show exactly what he intends to say.

The gentleman from New Jersey mentions that some years ago a move was made by Frank W. Mondell, his leader, to have me removed from this House. The Republicans at that time had 302 Members. Mondell received only 204 votes to remove me, when there were 435 Members of the House, of whom 302 were Republicans.

Mr. Speaker, there is just a handful of the Members left in this House who voted for Mondell's resolution to remove me. There is just a handful. I can count them almost on the fingers of my two hands. The rest have gone and are forgotten.

The man who offered that resolution, Frank W. Mondell, came up for election to the Senate immediately thereafter. For 26 years he had been the only Congressman from Wyoming. He had been the Republican floor leader in this House for years. His ridiculous excuse was that I had printed an improper report on the Government Printing Office, which he had expunged.

I got a poll-tax list of every man and woman in Wyoming. I sold a farm in Texas and had my report on the Government Printing Office reprinted by a private printery. It cost me a tremendous sum of money, but I did not stop at expense. I sent a copy of that Printing Office report to every man and woman in Wyoming at my own expense. It cost me an enormous lot of time and money. I showed exactly what Frank Mondell had said and done in this House.

Did you know that Wyoming went Republican at that time and elected a Republican Congressman to succeed Frank Mondell in the House, but for the Senate Frank W. Mondell did not carry but one single county in his native State—just one? They turned him down and put him out of public life. He has been a common lobbyist ever since here in Washington. He is gone and forgotten politically. Yet all through these years the people of my district have elected and reelected me by a wonderful majority. The little fellow from New Jersey is the one that gets up here and makes these remarks this morning. His people may punish him for doing that some day.

Mr. Speaker, one of the leading professors on Government in the United States, the great William Starr Myers, of Princeton University, examined that report of mine on the Government Printing Office, and condemned Mondell's action as being malicious and unwarranted. One of the clubs of Harvard University said the same thing about it. Preachers, university professors, and leading officials in Government stated there was not a thing in the world wrong in my having printed that report in the RECORD.

Why did not the gentleman from New Jersey, in fairness, state that after Frank W. Mondell had gone and been forgotten this Congress by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, permitted me to read into and thus have printed that Government Printing Office report back in the RECORD, and it is in there now, word for word, except a few words omitted from an affidavit by one employee.

I am going to have that report printed again, regardless of cost, and I am going to send it to every voter the gentleman has in his district in New Jersey. Let them see what he gets up here and tries to do in reflecting upon one of his colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I did not say I was going to send Bruno Hauptmann back to Germany. I said we were going to send him back to where he belonged. Everybody understood me except the gentleman from New Jersey; but when he tried to make out like he did not, I made the RECORD show the facts—that we were going to send him where he belonged. He does not say that the Government had anything to do with convicting Bruno Hauptmann. Why, this Government spent thousands of dollars. It had every single man connected with our Intelligence Department working on that case. New Jersey did not work it up. It was the Government of the United States that secured some of the most important and convincing evidence.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, as I have consent unanimously granted to me by my colleagues in the House to extend my remarks, I want to show the facts relating to my said report on the Government Printing Office.

During the war our Government paid all industrial workers tremendous wages, yet there were 6,000 strikes against the Government. Workers had been exempted from the draft, because they were needed to work. When they continued to strike, President Wilson asked Congress to pass what he called his "work or fight" amendment to the Draft Act, which would take from workers their exemption when they refused to work, and they could be sent to the war zone. I spoke and voted for that amendment and helped to pass it in this House, and thus incurred the enmity of organized labor.

When Congress gave the extra $240 bonus to our 100,000 Government employees in Washington, I voted that during the war they should work 8 instead of only 7 hours per day. I again incurred the displeasure of organized labor. That was known as the "Borland amendment", which caused a march on the Capitol.

Then I backed the contention that our Government had the right to supervise the work of its employees in its navy yards and arsenals. This stand caused me to be criticized and condemned by organized labor.

From time to time during the war I vigorously protested against labor unions attempting to dominate our Government legislatively. Again I was condemned by organized labor.

I dared to oppose unions in their attempt to force all Government employees to unionize and pay dues against their will. This brought down union wrath upon my head.

I warned President Samuel Gompers that if he would preserve his unions and not lose the many deserved benefits he had worthily helped them to acquire, which meant much to labor, he must repudiate the anarchy and communism pervading unions, and free them of such menaces as William Z. Foster. He and his unions then resented such advice, and proclaimed me as an enemy to organized labor, and caused me to be placed on his blacklist.

In all such acts I was the true friend and not the enemy of labor. And before he died, President Gompers did publicly repudiate William Z. Foster and communism, and his worthy successor, President William Green, has likewise repudiated them.

In the 1920 campaign, there were 64 newspapers published in my district. In all of them I was attacked by paid advertisements. In some of them President Gompers carried whole page advertisements over his own signature against me, denouncing me as an enemy to organized labor. In such campaign such reputable and reliable newspaper authority as (then) Editor Lloyd B. Thomas asserted in his Times that approximately $100,000 was spent in my district to defeat me in the primary. The Olden Advance carried whole pages of attacks against me in practically every issue.

By an overwhelming vote I was reelected. Many of the finest citizens of my district are members of labor unions, and for years have been my strong personal friends, and knew that they could depend upon me at all times to give labor a square deal in all of its worthy undertakings, and many would not turn against me. Then a radical union publication asserted that if they could not defeat me at the polls they would find some other way of getting me out of Congress.

During my first 12 years in Congress I spent practically all of my vacations in checking up Government departments, bureaus, and commissions. I wanted to familiarize myself with all the intimate details of their business, and just how they spent the huge sums of money Congress gave them, and where it went.

In 1921, numerous employees, some being helpless women, appealed to me for protection, asserting that while through civil service they could easily obtain Government positions, yet unions would not let them continue long in employment unless they joined and paid the prescribed union dues. Upon their urgent appeal and insistence I investigated such conditions.

In May 1921, certain of the 4,450 employees then in our Government Printing Office appealed to me for protection, asserting that unions controlled the plant and required all employees to join the union, pay its monthly dues and assessments and in addition to pay the required extra 10 percent of their salaries to carry on the Nation-wide strike for the 44-hour week. It being my duty to do so, I investigated this plant. I found conditions there, and in other departments, that I thought should be publicly known. I believed that such conditions were so outrageous and important that my colleagues in both the House and Senate would highly appreciate my bringing such facts before them, for I knew that they had not taken time themselves to ascertain such facts first hand. There was but one way to acquaint the 96 Senators and the other 434 Congressmen with such facts, and that was to print a report of what I had found and the facts I had gathered by affidavits in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for their information.

So, before preparing my report, from the floor of the House, on October 4, 1921, I requested the House to grant me permission to print my report in the RECORD as an "Extension of Remarks", and such permission was unanimously granted.

And as soon as I completed my report, I sent it to the Government Printing Office and it was printed in the Appendix of the daily RECORD for October 21, 1921.

In this report, among the various other letters and affidavits I printed, I quoted one affidavit which an employee, Millard French, had filed with the Public Printer, complaining of inhuman treatment accorded him by a foreman, and which embraced some language this foreman had used toward him, which, because being improper, I deleted just as I used to delete court records on appeal to higher courts when I was on the circuit bench for 8 years, and every improper word in same was deleted by using dashes and only the first letter, and in that printed report there was not one improper word except the deleted ones in this one employee's affidavit.

I was not disseminating improper language. I was endeavoring to stop its use by Government employees toward their fellow workers while transacting public business. I was bringing its use to the attention of Congress. There was no other way to apprise the other 434 Members and 96 Senators of it. I believed my colleagues would welcome such information and would commend me for the hard work I had done in making this investigation. I was merely performing my official duty as a Representative of this Government. With such facts before me, I would not have done my duty had I done less.

UNION LEADERS AMBUSHED ME

Unions in Washington realized that there was no answer to the facts established by my said report. They could not afford to have same made public. They were determined to obliterate my report. So they persuaded Frank W. Mondell, who was then a candidate for the Senate, to have it expunged from the RECORD. So when the House met on Monday, October 24, 1921, without giving me any notice whatever of his intention, Frank Mondell moved to expunge my entire report from the RECORD, and moved the previous question on his motion, which cut off all debate. I implored him to withdraw the previous question, and to give me 10 minutes to explain the matter to my colleagues, but he refused.

I then asked that he expunge only the Millard French affidavit, to which he objected, but he refused. He was determined to get my entire report out of the RECORD. And with his great prestige and influence, as Republican majority leader, with 302 Republicans then Members of the House, and by forcing an immediate vote, with unaware Members hurriedly coming into the House from their offices, and knowing nothing of the contents of such report, he caused the entire report to be expunged.

The next day Majority Leader Mondell moved to put me out of Congress. It was an afterthought. Union leaders in Washington had demanded it. He did not refer the matter to a committee, required by an unbroken line of precedents. He did not allow me a hearing. He did not allow me to have counsel, which has been given by Congress to every Member whose seat has been at issue. He did not confront me with any witnesses, or allow me to cross-examine anybody. He did not give me any time to prepare my defense. He pushed his resolution to take my seat from me, based on his mere statement that I had printed improper language in the RECORD, when not one word of my own had been improper, and the few improper words in the quoted affidavit of said employee had been by me deleted exactly as court records are deleted. And he thus caused many persons in the United States to believe that I had used improper language, when my whole desire and purpose had been to stop Government employees from using it in abuse of other employees when about public business.

As above stated, there were 302 Republicans then in the House. He was their leader. He had been their majority leader for some time. He had prestige and influence. He controlled a majority of 170 votes in the House. He spent all of the morning in calling Republicans to his office and demanded as their leader that they put me out of Congress. Yet altogether out of 435 Members he was able to muster only 204 votes to put me out.

BUT IT PLAGUED MONDELL THEREAFTER

Frank W. Mondell had been the only Congressman, for it had only one, from the State of Wyoming for 26 long years. In the following election he made his race for the United States Senate. Dr. Frank Carl, of Sheridan, Wyo., advised me that Mondell was trying to use his attack on me to get the union vote of Wyoming, and he advised that if the people of Wyoming could see my report, as he had read and approved it, they would not support Mondell. So I had my report reprinted in a private printery, and got a poll-tax list of the Wyoming voters, and hired employees, and mailed a copy of such report, and a copy of Mondell's entire action in the House against me, to every man and woman in the State of Wyoming.

WYOMING REPUBLICAN BUT MONDELL DEFEATED

When the votes were counted, Mondell had carried only one county in his entire State. The county of Goshen is the only county in the State of Wyoming that Frank W. Mondell was able to carry for the Senate, although the State elected a Republican to succeed Mondell in the House of Representatives as Congressman at large from Wyoming.

REPORT BACK INTO RECORD

If you will examine the daily RECORD for Wednesday, December 7, 1927, pages 200 to 211, you will see that the House of Representatives allowed me to read my said report on the Government Printing Office, which Mondell had expunged, back into the RECORD, in its entirety, excepting a few words in the said employee's affidavit. Our present Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], who was then in charge of an appropriation bill on the floor, yielded me the time, and in order for him to have enough time to do it, my old friend the distinguished former colleague of ours from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] yielded him 30 minutes of it. And if any Member had objected to my reading it, I could not have read it, hence it was read into the RECORD by unanimous consent.

CARRIED BY 19 COUNTIES

And on page 212 of this RECORD for December 7, 1927, I want you new colleagues to read the resolution unanimously passed by my Democratic convention, certifying to the fact that I had carried all 19 of my counties, and had carried all of the 26 voting precincts then in my home county, and had carried all of the 21 voting precincts in the home county of my opponent.

And, I might also mention, that last year, with a prominent legislator and a prominent district judge running against me, I carried all 30 of the present voting precincts in my home county with a majority in each over both opponents, and carried all of the voting precincts in the home county of said legislator.

REPORT A PROPER ONE

If my colleagues will read this report of mine on the Government Printing Office on pages 200 to 211 of the RECORD for Wednesday, December 7, 1927, they will see that it evidences a tremendous lot of work on my part, and that it embraces a lot of most valuable information on what was going on in the departments of this Government. In instances I quoted the verbatim evidence of witnesses from joint congressional hearings of the House and Senate.

ORIGINAL PRINT FORTUNATELY READ

Fortunately for me, the RECORD for October 22, 1921, containing my report on the Government Printing Office, went into every congressional district in the United States before Mondell expunged it from the permanent RECORD, and many people read it. After Mondell expunged it and made his attack on me, I received hundreds of letters from every State in this Union commending my report and denouncing Mondell for his action. I have this voluminous mass of letters retained as one of my most valuable possessions.

I made a speech in this House on March 13, 1922, entitled "From Seattle to Florida", taking as my subject "Truth crushed to earth will rise again", and I want my colleagues to read the cross section of these letters I quoted in said speech, which in fact were from Seattle to Florida, and they will see that your constituents back home in your districts who had read my original report printed in the RECORD on October 22, 1921, approved it in every respect as a proper report for me to make to Congress and commended me for making it, and condemned Mondell for his attack on me.

Read the statement of William Starr Myers, professor of government in Princeton University, situated in Princeton, N. J. You will see that he congratulates me and says that my report was brave and patriotic.

Read the statement from the Ridgely Club, of Harvard University, and you will see that it denominated Mondell's action as an unprincipled attack and said that I was the victim of deplorable persecution.

Read the opinion of Judge Fred Lamb, of the Twelfth Judicial Circuit Court of Missouri, and you will see that he pronounced my report as proper in every respect and called Mondell's action an unjustifiable outrage.

Read the opinion Rev. Harry E. Purinton, of Denver, Colo., wrote denouncing the action as a pusillanimous knuckling to unions.

Read the statement from Secretary C. W. Shaefer, of the Trenton Typothetae, Trenton, N. J., advising that, although he is a loyal Republican, he would split his ticket to vote for me, and commending my report.

Read the statement from Hon. J. Horace McFarland, of Harrisburg, Pa., who personally read my report in the RECORD and approved it, and commended me.

Read the statement from F. H. Ebeling, the big seed man of Syracuse, N. Y., stating that the people of this country were solidly behind me 20 to 1, and predicting that I would be in Congress many years after Mondell was forgotten.

Read the editorial from the Little Rock (Ark.) Daily News approving my report in every detail and stating that I would not have done my duty if I had not published it in the RECORD and challenged Mondell or any other Member who voted to put me out to state how any woman or child could have been hurt by the words as I had deleted them.

I want my colleagues in said RECORD of March 13, 1922, to read the long editorial by the Kansas Official, of Topeka, Kans., approving every portion of my report, and condemned Mondell for his action, which it said he had carefully constructed, premeditated, and conceived to mislead Members of Congress, and the public, and it said that Mondell did it to curry favor with the American Federation of Labor.

I want you to read the statement from the former great evangelist, Sam W. Small, who was then living over here at Rosslyn, Va.

Read the statement from Director R. D. Bowen, representing agriculture in the Mississippi Valley Association, embracing 26 States.

Read the editorial from the Sunday Times, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and from the Buffalo Commercial, Buffalo, N. Y., the latter saying that I had performed a great public service.

Read the statement from Capt. T. Hall, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and from H. D. Masterson, of Seattle, Wash.

Read the long editorial from the Columbus Dispatch, Ohio, calling Mondell's action punitive in the extreme, and stating that a number of Republicans were through with his leadership. Note that it quoted Charles J. Thompson, of the Defiance district, and James T. Begg, of the Sandusky district, as sorry they had followed Mondell and were glad the resolution did not pass; and note also that it quoted General Speaks and Representative Ricketts that they broke away from Mondell's leadership.

Read the statement of W. S. McCarthy, of Salt Lake City, Utah, stating that my report was approved by every person discussing the matter with him, and they gave me a vote of thanks.

Read the statement from Rev. W. W. Pippin, Jr., of Appamattox, Va., stating that my verbatim account of conditions in my report best served the ends of justice, and you will see that he approved it in its entirety.

Read the statement from Francis Ralston Welsh, of Philadelphia, and you will see that he not only approved my report but because of Mondell's unwarranted attack on me he refused to make his usual Republican annual contribution to the national Republican campaign funds.

Some of these days, Mr. Speaker, if I ever get able financially to do so, I am going to publish in a book, for they will make a book, all of the letters I received from all of the 48 States in this Union immediately following Mondell's attempt to put me out of this House, commending my report and denouncing Mondell. Every colleague in this House will find that many are from his State, and some at least are from his district.

ALL OPPONENTS DISCOMFITED

In every primary campaign since Mondell's action, some new opponent urged by my enemies to run against me will deluge my district with copies of Mondell's motion to expel me, and of the attacks made on me, but they have no effect upon my constituents. They know me well. They knew me as a practicing attorney. They knew me as their circuit judge for 8 years, when I cleared congested dockets in five large counties, and enforced the law. They have known me as their Congressman, and they know what I stand for, and what I do here in Washington. I have gone to the trouble of recounting the facts connected with said Mondell's attack, so that all of my new colleagues might have a proper picture of the matter before them.

Many of my closest friends in Congress are the most loyal friends and supporters of every proposal made by organized labor. They know that I am not with them in some of their fights. But they know that I always fight fairly and squarely on every issue, and that I never straddle the fence, and they always know exactly what to expect of me, and where to find me. And many times, where I think they are right, I am fighting in the front line for demands of organized labor. When I think they are wrong, I fight against them.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes on current legislation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if this is on any particular current legislation? If it is on the bonus question, I am going to object.

Mr. STACK. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House today and tomorrow in order to conclude promptly the hearings on the T. V. A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

COMMUNISM

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to note that the Jewish labor unions of this country, consisting of 450,000 men and women, have gone on record in a resolution condemning communism and advocating its destruction, as well as condemning all of its activities.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting an article that appears in the Baltimore News and the Baltimore Post on this question.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are they the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; the gentleman has made his remarks. The gentleman would like to incorporate an editorial on the question of this organization condemning communism in its ranks.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I object, Mr. Speaker.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and insert an appeal from the steering committee for the passage of H. R. 1, presented to the President this morning asking him not to veto the bill for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates, which passed the House by a vote of 318 for to 90 against, and the Senate by a vote of 55 for and 33 against.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand where the appeal is from.

Mr. PATMAN. From the steering committee of 22 members for the passage of H. R. 1, including myself.

Mr. SNELL. Did I understand the gentleman to state it is the Democratic steering committee?

Mr. PATMAN. The steering committee for the passage of H. R. 1, which is composed of 19 Democrats, 1 Republican, 1 Progressive, and 1 Farmer-Laborite member. It is not the Democratic steering committee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether these are copies of letters sent from this steering committee previously to the Membership of the House?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I think the gentleman will find some new information that will be enlightening to him and I hope he will read it carefully, because it is good.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Texas whether I understood him to say this comes from the steering committee of the House?

Mr. PATMAN. I think I made it plain, I will state to the gentleman, that it is from the steering committee for the passage of H. R. 1. It is an organization well known in this House. Everybody knows what I am talking about when I say "steering committee for the passage of H. R. 1."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not know whether they do or not.

Mr. PATMAN. They are all Members of Congress.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In other words, it is the bonus steering committee rather than the official steering committee of the majority party.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not use the word "bonus"—I say it is not a bonus—but this is the steering committee for the passage of H. R. 1, the Patman bill. It is a well-known organization and I doubt if you can find a Member of this body who does not know about it.

Mr. DIES. Composed of the ablest Members of the House, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

STATEMENT PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES BY THE HOUSE STEERING COMMITTEE FOR THE PASSAGE OF H. R. 1 ON MAY 20, 1935

We are not entitled to be victorious in our efforts to secure the enactment of the bill that has recently passed Congress to pay 3,500,000 World War veterans $2,000,000,000 unless we can show the following:

1. That each veteran who holds an adjusted-service certificate is entitled to an amount at this time equivalent to the full face or maturity value of the certificate, although it is payable January 1, 1945.

2. That such payment can be made without detriment to the country and without impairing in any way a sound monetary system.

We believe that the country is convinced, after a thorough understanding of the question among the veterans and nonveterans that this debt is really past due, although payable in the future, and that it can be paid according to our proposal not only without detriment to the country, but in a way that such payment would be a godsend to the country.

The average veteran holds a certificate for $1,000. The amount was arrived at by allowing him $1 a day extra for home service and $1.25 a day extra for service overseas during the World War; such basic credit, which was on the average $400, was increased 25 percent as compensation for deferred payment from 1925 to 1945, making the credit $500. This amount at 3½-percent interest, compounded annually, amounts to $1,000 January 1, 1945. The basic credit, however, was used to arrive at the amount of an adjusted-service certificate, which would be equal to the amount of an endowment insurance policy, based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality at 4 percent. We are not asking to change the $1 and $1.25 a day compensation, but we are asking that the debt be paid as of the time the veterans rendered the service. In arriving at the amount due each veteran, 7 years' interest was entirely overlooked. The then Secretary of the Treasury confessed before a congressional committee in 1931 that interest for 7 years was entirely ignored.

INTEREST WILL CONSUME

The Adjusted Compensation Act of 1924, although giving the veterans an average certificate of $1,000, contained terms and provisions that caused them to pay on limited loans 6, 7, and 8 percent interest compounded annually for their own money, which would result in the veteran having the greater portion of his certificate consumed by the payment of compound interest by the time of its maturity in 1945.

OTHERS RECEIVED ADJUSTMENT IN CASH

Seven thousand war contractors received adjusted pay amounting to billions, directly and indirectly, after the war was over; many of them had invalid and illegal contracts which were validated by Congress. They were paid in cash. The railroad owners received a guaranteed return during the war equal to the average return 3 years prior to America's entrance into the war, which was the most prosperous period of railroading in the United States; in addition, they were given $3,000,000 a day extra pay for the next 6 months after being released from Government operation. Their adjustments in pay amounted to between one and two billion dollars; they were paid in cash. There were about 500,000 Federal civilian employees during the war; all of them receiving $2,500 a year or less had their pay adjusted, and the average received $1,000 extra pay. It was paid in cash. Many soldiers worked on the public roads in America during the war, side by side with civilians who were receiving $8 a day; these soldiers received an adjustment of $7 a day, representing the difference between their soldier pay of $1 a day and the $8 a day drawn by the civilians. They were paid in cash after the war. Foreign countries, our allies during the war, were loaned billions of dollars by our Government after the war was over. They used a part of this money to pay their own veterans adjusted compensation and bonuses aggregating as high in some instances as $7,290 each.

VETERANS ASK FOR SAME INTEREST RATE AS OTHERS

If the veterans are allowed interest from the time the services were rendered instead of from 1925, they will not be receiving special favors from the Government. For instance, when the war was over, applications for tax refunds were filed by individuals and corporations, many of them claiming that they had paid too much income taxes during the war and others claiming that they failed to deduct a sufficient amount for depreciation of their facilities used in war services. These claims were made, although they had made and sworn to the income-tax returns themselves. The Secretary of the Treasury refunded to large income-tax payers more than 3,000 million, or $3,000,000,000, from the year 1922 to the year 1929, inclusive—an amount more than sufficient to pay the remainder of the adjusted-service certificates in full. Much of this money was refunded or given back to them on the theory that the taxpayers did not charge off a sufficient amount for depreciation in value of their properties during the war from 1917-19. A large part of it was refunded in plain violation of the law. A large number of the beneficiaries of these large gifts were war profiteers and should have been convicted of treason for dissipating and plundering our resources during the war. When each refund was paid the Treasury also paid the one receiving it 6-percent interest from the year it was claimed the deduction should have been made. On one refund to the United States Steel Corporation of $15,736,595.72, interest amounting to more than $10,099,765 was paid. Mr. Andrew Mellon while Secretary of the Treasury made large refunds to himself and to his companies, and in each case allowed 6-percent interest from the year he claims the credits should have been given and not from 1925, the date of the adjusted-service certificates, or 7 years later.

One receiving a tax refund in 1925 for an alleged overpayment in 1918 was paid 6-percent interest from 1918 on the amount of the payment. There is no reason why the veterans should not be paid from the time they rendered their services until 1925, the date of the certificates.

PAY RECEIVED IN SERVICE

An enlisted man, private, received $1 a day, except the overseas service, when he received 10 percent extra, or $1.10 a day. They were permitted, and in many cases required, to make allotments of a certain amount of their pay monthly to their dependents; the amount varied from $5 to $25 a month and was deducted from the amount due them. They also paid for altering and mending their clothing and shoes, barber bills, laundry bills, and other incidental expenses. In addition, the average veteran had deducted from his pay $6.60 a month for insurance (they paid $400,000,000 to the Government in this way for which they have received no financial benefit); if he had anything remaining after these deductions were made, he was usually required to subscribe for a Liberty bond on the installment plan, which was sold at a loss at the end of the war. Many drew nothing at the end of the month.

CERTIFICATES SHOULD BE DATED BACK

We are asking in this legislation that the certificates be dated back to the time the services were rendered and the veterans allowed 6 percent interest instead of 3½ or 4 percent. We believe this revision is necessary to carry out the intent of Congress to allow each veteran $1 a day extra for home service and $1.25 a day extra for service overseas. It is certainly reasonable, and if such legislation is made, each veteran was entitled to an amount equivalent to the full face or maturity value of his certificate, October 1, 1931.

No veteran who served less than 111 days has an adjusted-service certificate.

METHOD OF PAYMENT

Our bill provides that the veterans will be paid in United States notes, the same kind of money now outstanding. They now hold Government obligations payable in 1945. We are not asking that the Government invoke a new policy or principle for the issuance of money, but to invoke, in the interest of all the people, an established governmental policy now used by the 12 banks, which are owned by private corporations and which are privileged to use that misleading title "Federal Reserve." We propose to give the veterans the right to deposit 1945 obligations and receive new money in return in identically the same manner that banks are entitled to use the Government's credit. Our bill provides for safeguards against even dangers of inflation and will cause all the gold in the Treasury to be used as a backing for the money. The Treasury has in its possession the title to which is in the United States eight and three-quarter billion dollars in gold and almost a billion dollars in silver. The Treasury has $15 in gold and $2 in silver to pay every outstanding $10 bill in America today. If the veterans are paid $2,000,000,000 remainder due, there will still be sufficient gold to redeem all outstanding money 100 cents on the dollar and the Treasury have remaining in its vaults idle and unused $2,000,000,000 in gold and silver.

MORE GOLD BEHIND IT THAN BANKERS' MONEY

The most enthusiastic advocate of the gold standard and the most reactionary banker cannot question the soundness of this money, which will have 60 percent more gold behind it than any Federal Reserve note or other bankers' money ever had.

A NEW AND ALTERNATIVE SUGGESTION

The daily statement of the United States Treasury for May 10, 1935, discloses that the Government has $852,364,042.27 in gold in the general fund; this gold cannot be paid out under existing laws. We understand the Secretary of the Treasury contemplates retiring national bank currency with a large part of it by delivering gold certificates based upon this gold to the Federal Reserve banks which will issue Federal Reserve notes to take up the national bank currency. This will result in the 12 Federal Reserve banks getting this gold which they can use to issue two and one-half dollars of Federal Reserve notes to every $1 of gold. Each new dollar so issued may be used by the banks of the country as a basis for lending $10 to the people. Therefore, each dollar of gold delivered to the Federal Reserve banks will permit the banking system to lend twenty-two and one-half dollars on it to the people and collect interest thereon. We respectfully suggest and urge that this gold not be delivered to the Federal Reserve banks but instead that it remain in the general fund where it will secure United States notes or that it be transferred to the gold reserve against United States notes. This amount alone is sufficient to secure the $2,000,000,000 to be paid to the veterans on a 40-percent gold basis. No country on earth ever suffered from inflation when it issued money based upon a gold reserve equal to 40 percent. It is not necessary to transfer the gold from the general fund in order for it to secure the issuance of additional United States notes. Our bill causes all gold belonging to the United States to secure the additional money to be issued.

TWO BILLION DOLLARS IDLE GOLD

If this suggestion is carried out, the gold will then be used as follows:

To secure all outstanding paper money at this time not including silver certificates which are secured by silver, approximately.....	$4,000,000,000.00
To secure the $346,681,016 in United States notes now outstanding and the $2,000,000,000 to be issued to pay the veterans.....	1,008,703,849.68
Exchange stabilization fund.....	1,800,000,000.00
Total.....	6,808,703,849.68

The Treasury statement of May 10, 1935, discloses that the Government owns $8,734,105,462.96 in gold. The amount is increasing daily. If the gold is earmarked as herein indicated, the Treasury will have on hand approximately $2,000,000,000 in idle and unused gold after the veterans are paid in full in cash with money that is based upon an adequate gold reserve.

SAFEGUARDS AGAINST INFLATION

No country on earth has ever suffered from inflation by reason of the issuance of paper money based upon an adequate reserve. Our bill provides that in the event the commodity price level exceeds the 1921 to 1929 average, or in the event the Secretary of the Treasury believes—the matter is left entirely up to his good judgment—that there is danger of undue expansion of the currency, Federal Reserve notes may be withdrawn to prevent it. Therefore, the push-and-pull provisions of this bill permit the Secretary of the Treasury to retire Federal Reserve notes as United States notes are paid into circulation and our circulating medium may not necessarily be increased by $1. Such payment, however, will result in a great benefit to the people. Every day $2,000,000 in Federal Reserve notes is outstanding, someone is paying interest on those notes, although they are based upon Government credit, which is used free of charge by the Federal Reserve banks. But the $2,000,000,000 in United States notes, which will replace this amount of Federal Reserve notes, will be paid into circulation, and no one will be paying interest upon this money while it is outstanding. On a 3-percent interest basis, this will be a net saving to the people of $60,000,000 annually. While our bill will not necessarily cause more money to be placed into circulation, it will cause a wide distribution of money, which is very much needed in our administration's recovery program.

SHOULD USE IDLE GOLD

Under our laws gold is money and not a commodity, and it is the duty of the Treasury Department to treat it at all times as money. Even under the gold-standard system, the increase in the amount of gold in the Treasury meant an equal increase in the amount of gold certificates in circulation. The Gold Revaluation Act and the Thomas amendment to the agricultural bill, approved by the President, clearly contemplated a continuance of the fundamental principle that an increase in gold stocks should be accompanied by an equal increase in paper currency in circulation.

But in actual administration the Treasury is ignoring this fundamental principle by treating three billions of gold in the Treasury as a commodity. This policy is more reactionary than the operation of the gold standard. It means that money in actual circulation will not be increased in accordance with the ancient principles that have governed our monetary policies in the past.

The Patman bill will mean that we will obey the law and treat all the gold as money, the same as it would be treated if we were on a straight gold-standard system.

CURRENCY NO MORE INFLATIONARY THAN BONDS

We cannot subscribe to the argument that our Government should pay tribute in the form of interest to a few bankers and other holders of Government obligations in order to discourage the issuance of more Government credit. If we can stop issuing bonds, we can stop issuing money. No one will contend that Government bonds are not just as inflationary as Government currency. There is a big difference to the people between bonds and currency. We will always need more than $5,000,000,000 of actual money in circulation—outstanding—and certainly the Government can safely issue that amount without question and save the people the interest on its initial issuance. In other words, pay that much money into circulation and permit it to remain outstanding instead of permitting the banks to lend it into circulation and require the people to carry an interest burden every day it is outstanding.

PEOPLE UNDERSTAND MONEY QUESTION

We respectfully submit that the people of this Nation, veterans and nonveterans, are better informed on the issuance and distribution of money and Government credit than ever before in the history of our country. We believe that our bill has the approval of at least 80 percent of the people who have an understanding of this subject.

TERM "BONUS" A MISNOMER

The term bonus, which is a misnomer, coined by the enemies of the law, has tended to prejudice our cause before the people.

REVISION OF CONTRACT TO DO JUSTICE

We insist that the veterans and the people do understand this issue—they understand that the certificates are not legally payable until 1945. They also understand, however, that in computing the amount due the veterans, interest for 7 years was ignored; that this is an undisputed fact, and if the Government will now revise the terms of the certificates in order to give the veterans the benefit of this ignored 7 years' interest and make a fair adjustment of the interest rate, which will carry out an established governmental policy, the average veteran holder was entitled to an amount equivalent to the full amount of his certificate, October 1, 1931. They understand, further, that if this adjustment of interest rate is made, it will be giving the veterans the same rights and benefits, and no more, as were given to others by the Government on contracts involving property rights growing out of the World War.

TRICKY FIGURES

We hope our great Executive will carefully analyze all information that is given to him for the alleged purpose of showing what it is now costing the Government annually to care for disabled World War veterans and their dependents. We desire to respectfully warn our President that there is a set of tricky figures in existence, which represent fallacious theories, half truths, untruths, and incorrect statements. These tables use the year 1932 as an example and they are padded by more than $400,000,000.

SEVEN PERCENT OF VETERANS RECEIVING CHECKS MONTHLY

Much has been said about benefits being received by disabled veterans of the World War. The question is not related to the payment of the adjusted-service certificates; however, it is interesting to note that only 7 percent of the men who served our Nation in uniform during the World War are now receiving compensation and disability benefits from the Government. Only a very small percentage of the three and one-half million holders of the adjusted-service certificates have ever received a benefit from the Government except the adjusted-service certificates.

MEASURING A NATION'S GENEROSITY

There is only one fair way of comparing generosity of nations toward their defenders, and that is upon the ability of a nation to be generous, which is determined largely by national wealth and national income. We are not giving this information in support of more generous benefits to veterans but for the purpose of answering fallacious arguments. For every $1,000 of national wealth in 1932 the United States paid her veterans $1.39; Great Britain, $1.93; Canada, $2.03; Italy, $2.74; France, $5.64; and Germany, $6.22. For every $1,000 of national income the United States paid her veterans $6.83; Canada, $10.15; Great Britain, $11.01; Italy, $13.28; Germany, $19.64; and France, $42.48. If population for a basis is desired, it will be discovered that the annual expenditure per capita was: Italy, $1.64; United States, $3.40; Great Britain, $3.95; Germany, $4.80; Canada, $6.11; and France, $6.66.

The only fair way of measuring generosity of a nation being based on wealth and income, it will be noticed that the conquered country, Germany, is paying her veterans several times as much as the United States. The tricky figures indicate that the United States expended $860,635,000 for World War veterans during the year 1932, when, in truth and in fact, the sum that should have been charged up to the veterans was $425,635,000.

VETERANS NOT PAID FOR PATRIOTISM

When the veterans receive this extra $1 and $1.25 a day, they will then have received about 20 percent or 25 percent of what civil employees received during the World War. When they do not receive any more than the poorest-paid class of laborers in America received during the World War, it cannot be said the Government is paying them for their patriotism.

The veterans have the interest of their country and Government at heart. After a general understanding in regard to the Government's obligation in this matter by veterans and non-veterans, we believe it is the sentiment of 80 percent of the people of this Nation that this debt be paid now in the manner that we propose. Less than 20 percent of the combined membership of the House of Representatives and the United States Senate voted against our proposal. In 1932 when the bill passed the House of Representatives there were 176 votes against it; in 1934 there were 125 votes against it; and in 1935 only 90 against it. This vote reflects the sentiment of the country on this question as Members of the House are elected every 2 years.

VETERANS BORROWED ACCUMULATED INTEREST

If the Government discharges this debt now on the basis of $1 a day for home service and $1.25 a day for service overseas as of the time the services were rendered with an allowance of a fair rate of interest, the veterans have borrowed the accumulated interest only, the principal sum remaining intact. This money will not only be a relief to the veterans, but will be a relief to the nonveterans as well. It will go into the channels of trade and business and will help everybody. The privilege given to veterans in employment, which is often charged up against them, is very small help to the large group.

VETERANS NEED THE INSURANCE

It is true that a large percentage of the veterans who die leave no other assets for their dependents but the balance due on their certificates. Between now and 1945 about 300,000 veterans will probably die, using past figures as a basis. Surely we should not cause 3,000,000 veterans to pay the banks and the Government the remaining half of their adjusted-service certificates as compound interest on the first half that was borrowed in order to let dependents of 300,000 collect the small amount they will get instead of letting the veterans themselves collect it now while they are living.

INTEREST CONSUMES HALF OF CERTIFICATES

We do not consider it fair and right for the Government to compel the veterans to pay the banks and the Government a dollar of their certificates every time they get a dollar. We further believe it is against the public interest to require the people to pay $2,000,000,000 as a rake-off to the bankers on bonds in order to pay the veterans a $2,000,000,000 debt.

VETERANS TO BE GIVEN SAME RIGHTS AS BANKS

Banks are permitted to receive money in return for 1945 Government obligations. How can we consistently refuse to let the veterans have the same right? No one can claim that the money we propose to issue will not be as good in every way as the money issued to the Government by the banks. The great sin we are accused of committing is refusing to allow a few bankers their usual cut, bonus, or grab for the use of the Government's credit.

PAY NOW, PREVENT UNREASONABLE DEMANDS

An effort is made to scare the people with slogans indicating that the payment of this debt will be followed by an unreasonable demand. If the veterans are paid now and should come in and make an unreasonable demand, the sentiment of the American people will be against them and they will not succeed, whereas if the Government sits idly by and permits the banks and Government to eat up half of each certificate in interest and the veterans get practically nothing in 1945, the sentiment of the American people will doubtless be in favor of the veterans, and even unreasonable demands might be granted.

PAYMENTS TO HOLDERS OF GOVERNMENT BONDS

During and since the World War more money has been paid to holders of Government bonds than the total of all Government expenditures for the benefit of all veterans. Since our Government has been established more money has been paid as interest on Government obligations than has been paid to veterans of all wars and their dependents.

IN AID OF RECOVERY

Some have argued that this debt, if paid, would be spent unwisely. Statistics furnished by the Veterans' Administration, however, reveal that of the loans thus far advanced on the certificates, 65 percent was spent for personal and family needs; 20 percent was invested; 8 percent was used to purchase automobiles; and only 7 percent was utilized in such a way as to provide the veteran with no practical benefits. These figures astound the reader with evidence of the practicability and sound judgment of the veterans as a class. Perhaps no other numerous group in America squanders so small a share of its income.

It is generally agreed that to bring about recovery we must restore purchasing power, but we must distribute purchasing power widely among the masses. Depression means that one class has a monopoly on purchasing power; prosperity means that purchasing power is widely distributed. H. R. 1 affords us the most efficient plan yet proposed for restoring and distributing purchasing power among the masses. The money will be paid to 3,500,000 veterans in every nook and corner of the land. Every one of the 3,072 counties in the country will be immediately and directly benefited; every phase of industry will be "primed" and stimulated by this act. Veterans will buy food and clothes for themselves and families; they will build new homes and renovate old homes; they will buy automobiles; they will invest in business; and some of them will probably pay their debts, thus providing their creditors with purchasing power.

Cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates will not be a dole. It will be the payment of a just obligation; it will be the payment of a debt owed by all classes to one class. It will prove that Americans still regard heroism as a virtue; and that our gratitude does not melt away with the coming of peace.

Respectfully submitted.

Colmer, Jennings Randolph, Clarence Cannon, Wm. P. Connery, Jr., Wm. M. Berlin, Frank Hancock, Jed Johnson, James P. Richards, Gerald J. Boileau, Andrew J. May, Fred H. Hildebrandt, Martin F. Smith, Martin Dies, John E. Miller, George A. Dondero, Paul J. Kvale, Roy E. Ayers.

SUMMARY OF STATEMENT PRESENTED TO PRESIDENT BY THE STEERING COMMITTEE FOR THE PASSAGE OF H. R. 1, MAY 20, 1935

1. Each veteran was entitled to the full amount of his certificate in 1931, although his certificate is payable in 1945.
 2. Such payment can be made without a bond issue, increase of taxes, detriment to the country, and without impairing in any way the sound monetary system.
 3. In arriving at the amount due each veteran 7 years' interest was entirely overlooked.
 4. If veterans not paid now, compound interest to the Government and to banks will practically consume the remaining half of the certificates.
 5. The question of whether or not the adjustment should have been made is not material as it was passed upon by Congress in 1924.
 6. The veterans are now asking that the debt be paid as at the time the service was rendered with the same fair rate of interest that others received on war contracts.
 7. We propose to issue $2,000,000,000 in United States notes, the same kind of money now outstanding. We are going to have more than 100-percent gold reserve to back these notes.
 8. A new and alternative suggestion is made that the $852,000,000 in gold in the general fund be transferred to the gold-reserve fund for United States notes, which will be ample to secure the $2,000,000,000 paid to the veterans, on the basis of 40-percent gold reserve. This will provide ample gold to cover all outstanding money and leave the stabilization fund of $1,800,000,000 untouched and the Treasury $2,000,000,000 in idle gold.
 9. Proper safeguards are provided against inflation. There will not be a chance of an inflation of the currency.
 10. The idle gold in the Treasury should be used and save the people interest on bonds.
 11. Currency is no more inflationary than bonds.
 12. The people, veterans and nonveterans, understand the money question, and at least 80 percent of the people approve this legislation.
 13. Tricky figures are in existence purporting to show excessive costs to the Government on account of World War veterans and their dependents. The figures are analyzed in the statement. Only 7 percent of veterans are receiving monthly checks.
 14. The payment now will make improbable unreasonable demands of the veterans, whereas, if payment is not made now and the remaining half of the certificates is consumed by compound interest paid to the banks and the Government as interest on a loan of the first half, the people will sympathize with the veterans to the extent of favoring the most generous benefits proposed.
- If this bill, H. R. 1, which now bears the number H. R. 3896, is enacted into law, it will result in the following:
1. It will save the Government more than a billion dollars, which otherwise would have to be appropriated between now and 1945 to the adjusted-service certificate fund.
 2. It will save the Government more than $10,000,000 in administration expenses of the act between now and 1945.
 3. It will place into circulation $2,000,000,000 of Government money that is paid into circulation and not loaned into circulation, thereby saving the people an enormous sum annually on interest charges.
 4. It will pay a debt heretofore confessed by the Government to the veterans for services rendered.
 5. It will be granting to the veterans the right to deposit Government obligations and receive in return therefor new currency, the same right that is now enjoyed by the privately owned Federal Reserve banks.
 6. It will prevent the veterans from losing a valuable equity by releasing them from the payment of compound interest on their loans.
 7. Such payment will require no bond issue, no increase in taxes, and no additional interest payments by the Government. The debt must be paid sometime—everybody will be helped if it is paid now.
 8. It is the best plan that has been proposed to be used as a vehicle to convey additional money into the hands of those who buy goods.
 9. The veterans will get about $2,000,000,000. It will cost the Government about two and a quarter billion dollars, the difference being caused by the failure of Congress to make sufficient appropriations for the adjusted-service certificate retirement fund.

AMERICAN JEWISH VETERAN HEROES OF THE PAST

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a radio address which I delivered yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following remarks, and an address delivered by me before the Jewish War Veterans, at their memorial service held in Temple Emanuel, Sunday, May 19:

ANNOUNCER. The National Broadcasting Co. is pleased to cooperate with the Jewish War Veterans of the United States in bringing to you their fortieth annual national memorial service, which is being held at Temple Emanu-El in New York City. There has been an elaborate parade, in which many veteran groups participated. The colors have been massed and the service is now in progress.

Dr. Solomon A. Fineberg, national chaplain in chief of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States, is in charge of the service. Capt. William Berman, commander in chief of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States, will present the principal speaker, the Honorable EMANUEL CELLER.

Captain BERMAN. The season has arrived when Americans of all races, colors, and creeds assemble in their houses of worship to honor the memory of those who died as a sacrifice to our country's honor and preservation.

It is in reverent thought and memory of those countless American patriots who have served our Nation on land and on sea and in the air that the Jewish War Veterans of the United States are here assembled in New York to pay their tribute.

To our comrades and friends assembled here and to those who are listening in I am happy to present a man who has always been a spokesman for, and an advocate of, those ideals dear to American veterans, the Honorable EMANUEL CELLER, Member of Congress from the State of New York.

Mr. CELLER. Obviously patriotism may be shown in peace as well as in war, but the record of service of the American Jew will stand the test of either peace or war.

"From the day of the founding of the Republic," said Theodore Roosevelt, "we have had no struggle, military or civil, in which there have not been citizens of Jewish faith who played an eminent part for the honor and credit of the Nation."

General Washington in the revolution welcomed their cooperation.

General Jackson was a warm upholder of their fidelity.

General Pershing witnessed and praised their loyalty in arms.

President Cleveland in a public address said: "When with true American enthusiasm and pride we recall the story of the war for our independence, and rejoice in the indomitable courage and fortitude of our revolutionary heroes, we should not fail to remember how well the Jews of America performed their part in the struggle and how in every way they usefully and patriotically supported the interests of their newly-found home. Nor can we overlook, if we are decently just, the valuable aid cheerfully contributed by our Jewish fellow-countryman in every national emergency that has since overtaken us."

Mark Twain writes: "I find that he (the Jew) furnished soldiers and high officers in the Revolution, the War of 1812, and the Mexican War. In the Civil War he was represented in the armies and navies of both the North and the South by 10 percent of his numerical strength—the same percentage that was furnished by the Christian population of the two sections."

LET US BRIEFLY VIEW THE RECORD

Years before the Revolution, Jews united with their fellow Colonials for independence. For example, the Nonimportation Resolutions in 1765, the first organized movement in the agitation for separation from the mother country; a document still preserved in Carpenter's Hall, Philadelphia, contains many Jewish names like Benjamin Levy, Samson Levy, Joseph Jacobs, Hayman Levy, Jr., David Franks, Mathias Bush, Michael Gratz, Bernard Gratz, and Moses Mordecai.

In 1779, a corps of volunteer infantry composed chiefly of Hebrews under the command of Captain Lushington, was raised in Charleston, S. C. These soldiers fought afterward with great bravery under General Moultrie at Beaufort.

In the clouds that beset that great group of patriots of the Revolution, the true courage and unselfish patriotism of Haym Salomon shines forth. Haym Salomon, of Philadelphia, was a man of large private fortune, engaged in commercial pursuits, of great financial resources and ability, and of the highest personal integrity. He espoused the cause of the Colonies with great ardor, and supplied the Government from his own means with a large amount of money, even to the extent of $650,000, a huge sum in those days, at the most critical periods of the struggle.

Cyrus Adler has called attention to the following interesting incident: At the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, one Mr. Gomez, of New York, proposed to a member of the Continental Congress that he form a company of soldiers for service. The Member of Congress remonstrated with Mr. Gomez on the score of age, he then being 68. To this, Mr. Gomez replied that he "could stop a bullet as well as a younger man."

Among the patriots of the South, none worked more unselfishly and patriotically than Mordecai Sheftall. After active hostilities were begun in the South, he was appointed commissary general to the troops of Georgia in July 1777, and soon thereafter was also appointed commissary to the Continental troops. When the British attacked Savannah in December 1778, Sheftall's name appears not only foremost among the patriot defenders of that city and as one who advanced considerable money to the cause, but also as one who was placed on board the prison ship because of his refusal to flock to the royal standard.

Col. Isaac Franks became aide-de-camp to Washington, held the rank of colonel on his staff, and served with distinction throughout the war. Maj. Benjamin Nones, a native of Bordeaux, France, who came to America in 1777, served on the staffs of both Lafayette and Washington. He entered service under Pulaski as a private, and, as he writes, "fought in almost every action which took place in Carolina, and in the disastrous affair of Savannah shared the hardships of that sanguinary day." He became major of a legion of 400 men attached to Baron de Kalb's command and composed in part of Hebrews.

Col. David S. Franks, of Montreal, openly sympathized with and aided the Americans under Generals Montgomery and Arnold during their invasion of Canada. When the American forces abandoned that country in 1776, he was forced to flee from Canada. He later became aide-de-camp to Benedict Arnold. Because of Arnold's treason, suspicions were aroused against Franks. However, after a searching inquiry was made into his conduct, he was not only acquitted but was sent to Europe with important despatches to our Ministers, Jay and Franklin.

Philip Moses Russell in the spring of 1775 enlisted as a surgeon's mate under command of General Lee. After the British occupation of Philadelphia in September 1777, he became a surgeon's mate to Surgeon Norman, of the Second Virginia Regiment. Russell went into winter quarters with the army at Valley Forge, 1777-78. Sickness forced him to resign in August 1780. He received a letter of commendation from General Washington "for his assiduous and faithful attentions to the sick and wounded."

Solomon Bush, Col. Jacob de la Motta, Jason Sampson, Nathaniel Levy, David Hays and his son Jacob, Jacob I. Cohen, Maj. Lewis Bush, Joseph Bloomfield, Isaac Israel, and Benjamin Moses are the names of but a few of the other Jewish men who distinguished themselves upon the battlefields of the Revolution.

When the War of 1812 broke out there were about 3,000 Jews in the United States. Of this group many were found in the Army and in the Navy. Most of these brave warriors were sons of Revolutionary patriots. There was Aaron Levy, son of Hayman Levy and son-in-law of Isaac Moses, ardent Revolutionary patriot. Another familiar name is that of Haym M. Salomon, son of the patriot and financier. The Phillips family, which included Jonas Phillips, a soldier in the War of the Revolution, listed his son Joseph in the War of 1812, as well as two other members of the family. Many another prominent Jewish family was represented—officers and men who carried on the tradition established by their Revolutionary forefathers. Their ranks were augmented by a number of foreign-born Jews who took up residence in the United States after the Revolution. As ever with alien-born Jews, they espoused and fought unto death for the cause of their adopted country. Thus it is interesting to note that the Jew coming from other climes always became deeply rooted, deeply imbued with our traditions, and willingly made the supreme sacrifice for America, his newly adopted country. In all our wars there have always been these "lost battalions" composed of Jewish immigrants.

An interesting name of a Jewish soldier during the War of 1812 is that of Bernard Hart, division quartermaster during the war. His grandson, a non-Jew, was the novelist Bret Harte.

Southern Jews threw themselves into the patriotic cause with characteristic enthusiasm. Among them were Meyer Moses, a militia captain; Jacob de la Motta, a surgeon in the Army; Abraham A. Massias, first a captain, later a major; Chapman Levy, a captain of militia—to name but a few.

There were some Jewish men whose contribution to the war lifted them out of the rank and file. Such a man was Herman Hendricks, a New York merchant, who subscribed $40,000, one of the largest individual subscriptions, for bonds to finance the war.

Joseph B. Nones, a midshipman in the Navy, was secretary to Henry Clay when the latter, as one of a commission of three, was sent to Ghent to the peace conference. Joseph was the son of Major Nones of Revolutionary War fame.

Nor could we omit the name of Mordecai Myers, captain in the war. At Sackett's Harbor he distinguished himself by rescuing some 150 shipwrecked sailors. Captain Myers saw active service in the Canadian campaign. At the battle of Chrysler's farm, near Williamsburg, while leading a charge against the British, he was severely wounded. Invalided for 4 months, he nevertheless returned to service and carried on until the end of the war.

At the time of the Mexican War, in 1846, the Jewish population was approximately 15,000. Yet Jews volunteered freely and in numbers greatly in excess of their comparative quotas. General David de Leon twice took the place of commanding officers who had been killed or disabled by wounds, and twice received the thanks of the United States Congress for his gallantry and ability. Surg. Gen. Moses Albert Levy; Col. Leon Dyer, Quartermaster General under Gen. Winfield Scott; Lt. Henry Seeligson, who was sent for by General Taylor and by him complimented for his conspicuous bravery at Monterey, are but a few of the sons of Israel who left valuable evidences of their patriotism in the Mexican War.

In the Civil War the part that the Jewish men took is so conspicuous that it is difficult to pick out the most prominent men in the conflict. Mayer Asch, Nathan D. Menken, and Louis H. Mayer served on the staff of General Pope, Mayer serving also with Generals Rosecrans and Grant. Dr. Morris J. Asch served on the staff of General Sheridan. Major Lully, who during the Hungarian Revolution served on Kossuth's staff, rendered valuable service under the direction of the Secretary of War. Captain Dessauer, killed at Chancellorsville, and Newman Borchard served on the staff of General Howard. Max Cornheim and M. Szelegly served on the staff of General Sigel.

Jewish staff officers in the Confederate Army and Navy are equally conspicuous, showing the spirit of Hebrew loyalty to the South. In the writings of Hon. Simon Wolf we note that North Carolina sent 6 Cohen brothers, South Carolina sent 5 Moses brothers, Georgia sent Raphael Moses and his 3 sons, while yet another Moses brother came from Alabama, Arkansas furnished 3 Cohen brothers, Virginia sent out 3 Levy brothers, Louisiana's muster rolls also contain 3 brothers of the same name; while still another trio of Goldsmiths went forth from the South, 2 from Georgia and 1 from South Carolina. Mississippi provided 5 Jonas brothers; Edward Jonas fought in the Fiftieth Illinois Regiment against his 4 Confederate brothers, 1 of whom was Benjamin F. Jonas, former United States Senator from Louisiana.

On the Union side, New York alone furnished 1,996 soldiers, among them the 5 Wenk brothers; Col. Simon Levy and his 3 sons—Capt. Benjamin C., Lt. Alfred, and Capt. Ferdinand, former register of New York City. The Feder brothers also came from New York. From Ohio, which furnished the next largest quota, 1,004, in the War for the Union, we have the 3 Koch brothers, while Pennsylvania, which sent 527 Hebrews, also sent 3 Jewish brothers of the name Emanuel. Thus 14 Jewish families sent 53 men to both armies; and, according to available statistics, 7,884 Jewish soldiers served in the Union and Confederate Armies during the Civil War, although there were only 150,000 Jews in the country at that time.

Time does not permit me to mention more than a few of the Hebrew officers in the Union Army who achieved high distinction. Frederick Knefler, a native of Hungary, attained the highest rank reached by any Hebrew during the Civil War. He enlisted as a private and fought his way up to the colonelcy of his regiment, soon rising to the rank of brigadier general, and was then brevetted major general for meritorious services at the Battle of Chickamauga.

Col. Edward S. Solomon, of Illinois, fought throughout all the campaigns in the Southwest, and was brevetted brigadier general. He was Governor of Washington Territory for 4 years by the appointment of President Grant.

Leopold Blumenberg, a Baltimore merchant, abandoned his business when Fort Sumter was fired upon and helped to organize the Fifth Regiment Maryland Infantry, of which he was appointed major. His regiment was engaged in the battle of Antietam under him as colonel. He was brevetted brigadier general, and died in 1876, the result of the wounds that he had received at Antietam.

These are but a few of the Jews who distinguished themselves upon the battlefields of the war for the Union.

Maj. Gen. O. O. Howard, after speaking of one of his Jewish staff officers as being "of the bravest and best", and of another killed at Chancellorsville as being "a true friend and a brave officer", and highly praising two Jewish brigadier generals, said: "Intrinsically there are no more patriotic men to be found in the country than those who claim to be of Hebrew descent and who served with me in parallel command or directly under my instructions."

The Jewish Yearbook for 1901 publishes the names of over 4,000 Jewish soldiers who served in the American Armies during the War with Spain. The first man to volunteer was a Jew and the first American to be killed in battle was a Jew. So eager were the Jews to prove their loyalty to the United States that 5,000 Jews of New York offered their services to the Governor.

"When war was declared," Capt. A. W. Murray writes, "the Jewish press throughout the country reminded their people of the wanton persecution of the Hebrews by Spain, covering many years. . . . The young Hebrew men did not require urging. Their love for America alone was enough, and they flocked to the standard of liberty, the Stars and Stripes."

Theodore Roosevelt, the intrepid leader of the Rough Riders, declared that in that brave regiment, which has challenged the admiration of the world, the most astonishing courage was displayed by the seven Jewish Rough Riders, one of whom became a lieutenant.

The Astor Battery numbered 10 Jews among their 99 men. Fifteen Jewish men went down to death in the Maine, which was destroyed in the harbor of Habana, and there was not an engagement during the War with Spain in which Hebrews did not take part. Many Jewish names appear on the list of killed and wounded.

Many, many cases could be cited where Americans of Hebrew extraction performed gallant and meritorious service under the flag in Puerto Rico, Cuba, and in the Philippines—fighting as bravely as did their fathers before them at Lepsic and Waterloo, under Kossuth and Garibaldi, before Sadowa and Sedan.

Time does not permit my citing the Jewish heroes of the World War. They are legion. Many are here this morning.

We now readily see the important and impressive part taken by valiant Jews—Jews emancipated but a few decades from Old World tyranny—in the building up of our own glorious America! In passing, is not this imposing record a complete answer to the unthinking and unjust slanders upon our race?

When an impartial historian shall write in words of praise the wonderful achievements of the heroes who made this possible, Jewish names will be found on every page!

ANNOUNCER. You have listened to a memorial service at Temple Emanu-El, under the auspices of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States. The present occasion marks the fortieth annual observance of memorial service by this organization, which, founded in 1896 by surviving Jewish veterans of the War between the States, now includes surviving veterans of the Jewish faith of all wars, campaigns, and military expeditions participated in by the United States.

Dr. Solomon A. Fineberg, national chaplain in chief of the Jewish War Veterans, was in charge of the service; Samuel Rose, national radio officer, arranged and directed the program. The principal speaker was the Honorable EMANUEL CELLER, a Member of Congress from New York, who was introduced by Capt. William Berman, commander in chief of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request to address the House for 3 minutes, as I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] is willing to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes on current legislation. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection, because I understand the gentleman is going to speak just about his State.

Mr. STACK. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I have a philosophy of government in which I believe you and I, the Representatives of the 435 districts of the United States, are just the errand boys, glorified, if you will, of the people of the United States. I come from the Sixth Congressional District of Pennsylvania and represent approximately one-half million people. I am a constituent of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, for whom I voted on the 6th of last November. As a constituent of his I am asking him to pay attention to this editorial:

SENATOR GUFFEY'S BONUS VOTE

Senator GUFFEY's vote against the Patman bonus bill was doubtless the result of a difficult decision.

It may be assumed that the Senator, as an astute political leader, sensed the popularity of the Patman bill and that as a liberal he would be inclined to support it.

On the other hand, Senator GUFFEY was explicitly pledged to support President Roosevelt. That was his campaign promise to the people of Pennsylvania. At the time he made it, Senator GUFFEY had no reason to believe that the President would soon be on the wrong and unpopular side of a major issue.

Senator GUFFEY stood by that promise under circumstances that do credit to his courage. Senator WAGNER, of New York, outstanding liberal, followed the same course and for the same reason.

But their action raises an interesting question in political ethics: Should a United States Senator so bind himself by a pledge of loyalty to any President or party that he must vote contrary to his own convictions and the convictions of his constituents?

Obviously a Senator who carries his loyalty to an extreme becomes a mere automaton—and if the voters of Pennsylvania had desired an automaton they would not have elected a man of GUFFEY's outspoken and independent personality.

Within the bounds of loyalty there must be room to exercise the personal convictions of any man occupying a position as important as a Senator of the United States.

In Senator GUFFEY's case on the Patman bill there would have been a particularly valid argument for a broad interpretation of his campaign pledge to support the President.

What does "support of President Roosevelt" mean? It means that Senator GUFFEY agreed with the Roosevelt philosophy, endorsed the Roosevelt policies, and pledged himself to further them.

The major Roosevelt policies are:

To restore the 1926 price level.

To increase purchasing power.

To help the "forgotten man" obtain social justice.

The Patman bill tends toward all three objectives. By issuing new currency it should decrease the swollen value of the dollar and aid in restoring an equitable balance between debtor and creditor.

The payment of $2,000,000,000 to veterans would stimulate business in the only way it can be stimulated—by giving business customers.

The war veteran certainly is not the only "forgotten man." But the great majority of veterans have not received fair compensation, either for their war service or for their subsequent labor in the industry and agriculture of America.

The Patman bill is a new-deal bill. It is of the warp and woof of liberalism.

If Senator GUFFEY reverses his position and votes to override the President's veto he will be more faithful to "Roosevelt policies" than the President himself.

I was elected on a platform in which I said I would support "Roosevelt policies." I intend to support Roosevelt, but I also believe in majority rule. The big majority of the people in my district and State are for the Patman bill, and, therefore, I cannot do anything but vote to override the President's veto. I am a veteran and feel that the veteran has not been treated as he should be. I want my buddy—the "forgotten man"—to be treated fairly and to be paid his bonus and have it paid now. [Applause.]

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday next be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, in addressing the House a few minutes ago on communism, I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] objected to the editorial referred to. Do I understand that the gentleman also objected to my revising and extending my remarks along these lines?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not able to inform the gentleman of what the gentleman from New York had in mind or upon what ground he objected.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then I again ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks—

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. By inserting the editorials of these newspapers.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I object.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman objects to the newspaper articles?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I object to the gentleman including extraneous material.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

RULES COMMITTEE—LEAVE TO FILE REPORT

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tomorrow night to file a privileged report from that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman ought to have until Saturday night.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The reason for that is because we could not file it tomorrow very well.

Mr. SNELL. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SHALL WE CHANGE OUR FORM OF GOVERNMENT?

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a speech delivered over the radio by my colleague, Mr. BOLTON.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered by Hon. CHESTER C. BOLTON, of Ohio, over the Columbia Broadcasting System on Sunday, May 19, 1935:

The American people have been amazingly patient with the new deal—its experimentations, its borrowing and spending program, under its planned economy—hoping against hope, as its bureaus have grown and its bureaucrats have multiplied, that somehow, somehow, it would bring about relief, recovery, and reform. They have been patient with this new deal until its plans have become so contradictory and confused that the question has arisen in many minds, What is the plan of the national planners?

For months this question has been voiced, in one form or another, by speakers and writers of national distinction, including some of the most outstanding Democrats in the country. So it cannot be said, with any degree of fairness, that it is only a partisan inquiry. It grows in volume and insistence with each new-deal experiment. This is obvious to the most casual observer.

President Roosevelt himself took cognizance of this doubting, questioning state of the public mind in his recent "fireside chat", when he discussed plans for carrying out the latest new-deal experiment—the spending of the additional billions intrusted to his care, at his urgent request, to bring about relief and recovery. He assured his fellow countrymen that "the administration and the Congress are not proceeding in any haphazard fashion"—that each of the steps taken "has a definite relationship to every other step." Then he likened the job of creating a program for the Nation's welfare to the building of a great sea-going ship.

"When one of these ships is under construction", said the President, whom I quote, "and the steel frames have been set in the keel, it is difficult for a person who does not know ships to tell how it will finally look when it is sailing the high seas. It may seem confused to some, but out of the multitude of detailed parts that go into the making of the structure the creation of a useful instrument for man, ultimately comes. It is that way with the making of a national policy."

But in the minds of the many who are still confused, the President's parallel does not seem so reassuring. A great ship is built according to exact plans and specifications, which experience has shown will make it safe to sail the high seas. There is no guesswork about the process. It is known in advance that the multitude of detailed parts will fit together. The shipbuilder knows exactly how to put them together.

A great ship is not built experimentally—through a process of trial and error—like the new-deal ship. The builder does not announce he is building a new ship, in accordance with a new and untried theory of shipbuilding. That it may prove serviceable, and it may not, though he hopes and has faith that it will. That if it doesn't prove serviceable he will build another ship, along another line of experimentation, because he thinks we need a new ship, and anyway something has to be done about it. No. To say the least, this wouldn't be considered a very practical venture in shipbuilding. No level-headed investor would want to back such a rash enterprise—even with borrowed money, if he expected to have to repay it.

To many of us it appears plain that the "new dealers" conceive themselves in fact to be building a ship—a new ship of State. They have given us sufficient reason by their public utterances to believe they look upon the one in which we have sailed through so many perilous seas as outmoded, unseaworthy, and generally fit only for the historical junk heap.

On the other hand, many of us believe the ship of Washington and Jefferson, and the other master builders, is still the best ship afloat. We agree the superstructure should be remodeled to meet the needs of changed conditions. But in the absence of specific and understandable plans for the building of a better ship, we prefer to stay aboard the one we have, because we believe its keel and hull are safe and sound.

The "new dealers" are building something, undoubtedly. But a growing number of us cannot tell what the complicated mass now presenting itself to our astonished gaze is going to look like when completed, if ever, or what it is going to be. We fear the monster will not turn out to be a new and more trustworthy ship of state, or anything else beneficent, but that if it is not speedily disintegrated into the ill-assorted parts from which it is being assembled, it will prove to be a Frankenstein that will destroy our system of government.

Good government building, like good shipbuilding, is the result of years of experience. Certain basic principles must be adhered to in order to meet the demands of time and trial. Stress and strain, pressure and load, checks and balances, are all to be reckoned with in government as in shipbuilding.

A ship is dependent on its keel and hull for its stability. A government on its constitution, from which it derives its character and purpose. The success of either ship or government depends on the confidence it instills in the minds of those it serves, by reason of the soundness of its construction, the fitness of its machinery, and the efficiency with which it is operated. Does the new-deal ship measure up to these standards?

President Roosevelt said also in his "fireside chat":

"It is time to provide a smashing answer for those cynical men who say that a democracy cannot be honest and efficient."

To what does the President refer? To our established system of government or the new-deal system, which is manifestly a departure from it? Is democracy on trial or bureaucracy? These are questions in the minds of a rapidly growing number of the American people, who believe, in a broader sense, that the only test of democracy involved is whether it can survive the new-deal experiments.

Let me quote a paragraph from an article on Constitutional Government, written 15 years ago for the North American Review, by the late Dr. David Jayne Hill, historian and student of governments, which seems strikingly descriptive of the theory of the new-deal type of Government. Discussing the distinction between true and false democracy, Dr. Hill said:

"There is, as every student of political history knows, another quite different conception of government which delights to call itself democratic. . . . The fundamental fallacy of this type of democracy is the belief that the human will can change the laws of human nature, that division can take the place of production, and that the forces which have produced our national prosperity will continue to operate when the incentives to enterprise and thrift that have produced it are withdrawn by public action."

The false type of democratic government the American people now have—the bureaucratic type—was created to take care of an emergency. It was created and has been expanded to its enormous size on the theory that our institutions, under the established American system of Government, could not cope with the emergency. In the opinion of many Americans it is indeed time—high time—that it should demonstrate its worth.

These citizens regard a bureaucratic system of government as essentially wasteful and inherently destructive. They are anxious to get rid of the bureaucracy we now have with the least possible delay, for they do not regard it even as a necessary evil in the absence of proof that its existence is justified by the results obtained.

The facts go to show they no longer are seriously questioned except by outstanding "new dealers"—certainly not by many outstanding Democrats—that the measures and means provided for relief and recovery are now in the hands and under the control of the most gigantic, most meddlesome, and most expensive aggregation of bureaucrats of all time.

President Cleveland once remarked, "A condition confronts us, not a theory." But everything is a little different under President Roosevelt's new deal. We are now confronted by both a condition and a theory. The condition is that this bureaucracy is here. The theory is that it is operating in the spirit of and in conformity with the accepted principles of the American system of government—that it is an adjunct and an aid to democracy and not a menace. But the condition and the theory do not conform. Democracy and bureaucracy have nothing in common. They are wholly incompatible and cannot operate in harmony together.

"American democracy", again quoting Dr. Hill, because he has so concisely and comprehensively stated the basic principles of our democracy, "rests upon three fundamental postulates which may be regarded as the standards of judgment by which the distinction between true and false democracy is to be determined—that all rightful governmental authority is derived from the people by definite delegation to certain specified officers of government; that government is rightly ordained and controlled by representatives of the whole people, and not by a particular group; and that the inherent rights and liberties of every citizen are under the guaranteed judicial protection of just and equal laws."

Can we measure the new deal by these standards? They were the generally accepted standards by which we measured our American democracy until 2 years ago. Does the fiat of a bureau chief, taking the place of law, conform to the rule "that all rightful governmental authority is derived from the people by definite delegation to certain specified officers of the Government?"

It has been estimated that between 3,000 and 4,000 separate orders, each carrying the effect of law, have been issued by the new-deal alphabetical agencies, and that some 60 different administrative tribunals are making decisions affecting private rights. Is it true that under this system "the inherent rights and liberties of every citizen have been guaranteed judicial protection of just and equal laws?"

What of the new-deal bureaucracy, which, like a giant octopus, reaches in all directions and enters into the life and activity of every town and hamlet in the country, meddling with the private affairs of citizens? Does it conform to the standards of American democracy? At Gettysburg, in 1863, Abraham Lincoln defined our democracy to be, "Government of the people, by the people, for the people." Bureaucracy, on the other hand, is defined by the dictionary as a government of bureaus.

Does the farmer who has seen his wheat and cotton plowed under, his young pigs slaughtered, believe these things were done in the spirit of democracy or under the arbitrary rule of bureaucracy? There was the case of the small manufacturer in Pennsylvania who was fined and imprisoned for not paying higher wages to satisfied employees; the case of the woman in Brooklyn who was denied permission by the N. R. A. to make artificial flowers in her home to support herself and her children; of the jeweler in Utica, N. Y., who was indicted for an alleged violation of the gold-hoarding act because he displayed a few gold pieces in his window; the little tailor in New Jersey who was thrown into jail for charging 5 cents under the code price for pressing a pair of pants. Do these cases tend to justify the substitution of bureaucracy for democracy? They are only a few of the cases that may be cited to illustrate bureaucratic ruthlessness and tyranny. It may be urged that no ruthlessness and no tyranny were intended, but all history shows that bureaucracy is a blind monster that cannot be controlled.

Bureaucracy can also be absurd: There was, for instance, order 318, which appeared in the weekly organ of the N. R. A., the Blue Eagle. This order granted permission to a Minnesota firm to extend the lunch hour of one of its women employees one-half hour, until such time as physical disabilities complained of had been alleviated. This order, at least, was not ruthless but beneficent, although it is not made clear how long the employee suffered before relief could be obtained from the headquarters of bureaucracy.

How are we going to get rid of this monster, bureaucracy, which grows by what it feeds upon? The fable runs that the Arab's camel, having been allowed to thrust his head under the tent, kept encroaching until there was no room inside for the Arab.

That is the way bureaucracy works and always has worked. The "new dealers" tell us the huge bureaucratic machine they have created has been created only for the emergency. That it will be dismantled when the emergency is over. But will the bureaucrats want to dismantle the machine in which they have ridden to power when the emergency is over—assuming the country can stand the terrific strain of supporting it until that time—and will they be able to dismantle it if they should want to do so? It will be outside the range of all previous human experience if either of these things should come to pass. Democracy or bureaucracy—or worse, if anything could be worse than a bureaucratic form of government—this is the big, underlying issue now confronting the American people. They must choose, and choose speedily, or they will have no choice, which form of government they prefer.

The new deal substituted for accepted American principles the principle sought to be justified by the emergency that "the end justifies the means." We who dissent from this doctrine, holding it to be inherently vicious, whatever the intent, when our constitutional Government is the subject of the experiment and the rights and liberties of our citizens are involved, demand an orderly procedure if our form of government is to be changed and another form adopted, with other basic principles. Let it be done by the orderly procedure prescribed by the Constitution. Let it be done by direction, and not by tendency and indirection, and, above all, let us be sure we want it done. Let those of us who prefer our form of government reiterate it again and again. We are for a government of laws and not of men. That has been the accepted American principle. Let us have an end of government by experiment, government by trial and error, government by guess.

CRIME IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I heard over the radio that it cost the United States Government about $16,000,000,000 because of the crime which was committed last year. It seems to me that if we want to reduce crime we should expend at least $10,000,000,000 to wipe out the slum districts in our country. If we would do this, we would not have to spend such a tremendous sum of money on account of crime. I believe that a great deal of crime is bred in the slum districts. When men, women, and children are unable to obtain sufficient food and proper shelter, naturally they cannot be mentally and physically fit to be law-abiding citizens. Therefore I maintain the United States Government is responsible for much of the crime being committed today, because of its failure to eradicate the slum districts. [Applause.]

ADDITIONAL HOME MORTGAGE RELIEF

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 6021), and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. If a point of order is to be made to the conference report, should it be made now before the statement is read, or, would the reading of the statement waive the point of order?

The SPEAKER. If consent is granted for the reading of the statement, it waives the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. In section 9 of the proposed bill, which is in the conference report, there is a permanent appropriation to defray the expenses of the Board. It does not seem to me that that ought to be done in that way. I do not like to make the point of order because of the importance of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This home owners' loan bill means the saving of thousands of homes in every section of the United States now being foreclosed. We have been waiting for the Senate to pass this important bill for a long time.

There are some things in the conference report that I do not like, but it is highly important that this bill should become law without further delay.

I know the item referred to by the gentleman from New York is subject to the point of order, but if the gentleman insists upon his point of order, it will knock out the entire conference report and send the bill back to conference, for another interminable delay, and God only knows when it will come out again.

In view of the fact that so many people now have their homes in jeopardy, with foreclosures advertised, and that this bill is the only chance we have to stop those sheriffs' sales and save these homes, will not the gentleman from New York waive this infinitesimal matter, because we can control it in the Committee on Appropriations, of which he is a member.

It is such a small item compared with the good that will come to the people of the United States through the adoption of this conference report in not having their homes sacrificed, that I hope he will not press his point of order.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. This appropriation was included to effectuate an agreement entered into by the officials of the Corporation and the Treasury Department and the Budget Bureau. My information is that it is the best practical arrangement that could be made to meet the differing views on this point.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the trouble is that it can never be corrected except by another permanent appropriation bill, which would wipe out that sort of thing. It will place this Board entirely out of the control of Congress. There is no check-up on it. I am not going to insist on the point of order at this time, although I frankly believe this part of the conference report is a bad piece of legislation. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the Senate, insert the following:

"That subdivision (6) of section 2 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the word 'three' and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'four'."

"Sec. 2. Subsection (k) of section 6 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(k) All stock of any Federal Home Loan bank shall share in dividend distributions without preference."

"Sec. 3. (a) Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 7 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, are amended, effective January 1, 1936, to comprise four subsections to read as follows:

"(a) The management of each Federal Home Loan bank shall be vested in a board of twelve directors, all of whom shall be citizens of the United States and bona fide residents of the district in which such bank is located.

"(b) Four of such directors shall be appointed by the Board and shall hold office for terms of four years; except that the terms of office of the two such directors heretofore appointed shall expire at the end of the calendar years 1936 and 1937, respectively, and the terms of office of the first two such directors hereafter appointed shall expire at the end of the calendar years 1938 and 1939, respectively.

"(c) Six of such directors, two of whom shall be known as class A directors, two of whom shall be known as class B directors, and two of whom shall be known as class C directors, shall be elected as provided in subsection (e), and shall hold office for terms of two years; except that the terms of office of the directors heretofore elected or appointed shall expire at the end of the terms for which they were elected or appointed.

"(d) Two of such directors shall be elected by the members of the Federal Home Loan bank without regard to classes under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Board, and shall hold office for terms of two years; except that the term of office of one of the directors first elected under this subsection shall expire at the end of the calendar year 1936."

"(b) Section 7 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is further amended, effective January 1, 1936, by relettering subsections (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), and (i) as (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), and (j), respectively.

"Sec. 4. The Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by adding after section 8 a new section to read as follows:

"FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ADVISORY COUNCIL

"Sec. 8a. There is hereby created a Federal Savings and Loan Advisory Council, which shall consist of one member of each Federal Home Loan bank district to be elected annually by the board of directors of the Federal Home Loan bank in such district and six members to be appointed annually by the Board. Each such elected member shall be a resident of the district for which he is elected. All members of the Council shall serve without compensation, but shall be entitled to reimbursement from the board for traveling expenses incurred in attendance at meetings of such Council. The Council shall meet at Washington, District of Columbia, at least twice a year and oftener if requested by the board. The Council may select its chairman, vice chairman, and secretary, and adopt methods of procedure, and shall have power—

"(1) To confer with the Board and board of trustees of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation on general business conditions, and on special conditions affecting the Federal Home Loan Banks and their members and such Corporation.

"(2) To request information, and to make recommendations, with respect to matters within the jurisdiction of the Board and the board of trustees of such Corporation."

"Sec. 5. Subsection (a) of section 10 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Each Federal Home Loan bank is authorized to make advances to its members upon the security of home mortgages, or obligations of the United States, or obligations fully guaranteed by the United States, subject to such regulations, restrictions, and limitations as the Board may prescribe. Any such advance shall be subject to the following limitations as to amount:

"(1) If secured by a mortgage insured under the provisions of title II of the National Housing Act, the advance may be for an amount not in excess of 90 per centum of the unpaid principal of the mortgage loan.

"(2) If secured by a home mortgage given in respect of an amortized home mortgage loan which was for an original term of six years or more, or in cases where shares of stock, which are pledged as security for such loan, mature in a period of six years or more, the advance may be for an amount not in excess of 65 per centum of the unpaid principal of the home mortgage loan; but in no case shall the amount of the advance exceed 60 per centum of the value of the real estate securing the home mortgage loan.

"(3) If secured by a home mortgage given in respect of any other home mortgage loan, the advance shall not be for an amount in excess of 50 per centum of the unpaid principal of the home mortgage loan; but in no case shall the amount of such advance exceed 40 per centum of the value of the real estate securing the home mortgage loan.

"(4) If secured by obligations of the United States, or obligations fully guaranteed by the United States, the advance shall not be for an amount in excess of the face value of such obligations."

"Sec. 6. Clauses numbered (1) and (2) of subsection (b) of section 10 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, are amended to read as follows: '(1) the home mortgage loan secured by it has more than twenty years to run to maturity, or (2) the home mortgage exceeds $20,000, or'."

"Sec. 7. The Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by adding, after section 10a, the following new section:

"Sec. 10b. Each Federal Home Loan bank is authorized to make advances to nonmember mortgagees approved under title II of the National Housing Act. Such mortgagees must be chartered institutions having succession and subject to the inspection and supervision of some governmental agency, and whose principal activity in the mortgage field must consist of lending their own funds. Such advances shall not be subject to the other provisions and restrictions of this act, but shall be made upon the security of insured mortgages, insured under title II of the National Housing Act. Advances made under the terms of this section shall be at such rates of interest and upon such terms and conditions as shall be determined by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, but no advance may be for an amount in excess of 90 per centum of the unpaid principal of the mortgage loan given as security."

"Sec. 8. The first sentence of section 13 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'Any and all notes, debentures, bonds, and other such obligations issued by any bank, and consolidated Federal Home Loan Bank bonds and debentures, shall be exempt both as to principal and interest from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.'

"Sec. 9. Section 19 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'The receipts of the Board derived from assessments upon the Federal Home Loan Banks and from other sources (except receipts from the sale of consolidated Federal Home Loan bank bonds and debentures issued under section 11) shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and may be from time to time withdrawn therefrom to defray the expenses of the Board, and the salaries of its members and employees, whose employment, compensation, leave, and expenses shall be governed solely by the provisions of this act, specific amendments thereof, and rules and regulations of the Board not inconsistent therewith.

"SEC. 10. Sections 2 (a) and 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, are amended by striking out 'upon which there is located a dwelling for not more than four families, used by the owner as a home or held by him as his homestead, and having a value not exceeding $20,000' and inserting in lieu thereof 'upon which there is located a dwelling or dwellings for not more than four families, which is used in whole or in part by the owner as a home or held by him as his homestead, and which has a value of not to exceed $20,000.'

"SEC. 11. The first sentence of subsection (c) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. Subsection (d) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"For the purpose of this act, levies of assessments upon real property, made by any special district organized in any State for public improvements, shall be treated as general-tax levies are treated. The Board shall determine the reasonableness of the total annual burden of taxes and assessments of all kinds upon any property offered as security for the payment of a loan made by the Corporation and the effect of the total levies upon the loanable value of such property, but no deduction shall be made from the loanable value of any property for levies not due at the time of making such loan in any instance where the total annual taxes and assessments borne by the said property for all purposes does not exceed a sum which, in the discretion of the Board, is a reasonable annual tax burden for such property.'

"SEC. 13. Subsection (j) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is amended, effective 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'No person shall be appointed or retained as an officer, employee, agent, or attorney, at a fixed salary, in any regional or State office of the Corporation who is an officer or director of any firm, corporation, or association engaged in lending money on real estate; nor shall any person be appointed or retained as an officer, employee, agent, or attorney in any State or district office of the Corporation, who has not been a bona fide resident of the State served by such office for a period of at least one year immediately preceding the date of his appointment.'

"(n) The corporation is authorized to purchase Federal Home Loan bank bonds, debentures, or notes, or consolidated Federal Home Loan bank bonds or debentures. The Corporation is also authorized to purchase full-paid-income shares of Federal savings and loan associations after the funds made available to the Secretary of the Treasury for the purchase of such shares have been exhausted. Such purchases of shares shall be on the same terms and conditions as have been heretofore authorized by law for the purchase of such shares by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the total amount of such shares in any one association held by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Corporation shall not exceed the total amount of such shares heretofore authorized to be held by the Secretary of the Treasury in any one association. The Corporation is also authorized to purchase shares in any institution which is (1) a member of a Federal Home Loan bank, or (2) whose accounts are insured under title IV of the National Housing Act, if the institution is eligible for insurance under such title; and to make deposits and purchase certificates of deposit and investment certificates in any such institution. Of the total authorized bond issue of the Corporation $300,000,000 shall be available for the purposes of this subsection, without discrimination in favor of Federally chartered associations, and bonds of the Corporation not exceeding such amount may be sold for the purposes of this subsection.'

"(b) Section 9 of the act entitled 'An act to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes', approved April 27, 1934, is hereby repealed.

Any person, partnership, association, or corporation violating the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both.'

"SEC. 22. Paragraph (5) of subsection (c) of section 402 of the National Housing Act is amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: 'The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government, and shall determine its necessary expenditures under this act and the manner in which the same shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds.'

"SEC. 23. Subsection (b) of section 403 of the National Housing Act is amended (1) by striking out the words 'ten years' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'twenty years', and (2) by striking out the period at the end of the subsection and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided, That for any year dividends may be declared and paid when losses are chargeable to such reserves if the declaration of such dividends in such case is approved by the Corporation.'

"SEC. 24. Subsection (d) of section 403 of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Section 404 of the National Housing Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Each insured institution which has paid a premium charge in excess of one-eighth of 1 per centum of the total amount of the accounts of its insured members and its creditor obligations shall be credited on its future premiums with an amount equal to the total amount of such excess.'

"SEC. 26. The last sentence of section 406 (b) of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows: 'The surrender and transfer to the Corporation of an insured account in any such association which is in default shall subrogate the Corporation with respect to such insured account, but shall not affect any right which the insured member may have in the uninsured portion of his account or any right which he may have to participate in the distribution of the net proceeds remaining from the disposition of the assets of such association.'

"SEC. 27. Section 406 of the National Housing Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(f) In order to prevent a default in an insured institution or in order to restore an insured institution in default to normal operation as an insured institution, the Corporation is authorized, in its discretion, to make loans to, purchase the assets of, or make a contribution to, an insured institution or an insured institution in default; but no contribution shall be made to any such institution in an amount in excess of that which the Corporation finds to be reasonably necessary to save the expense of liquidating such institution.

"SEC. 28. (a) The first sentence of section 2 of the National Housing Act is amended (1) by striking out 'January' and inserting in lieu thereof 'April', and (2) by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'including the installation of equipment and machinery.'

"(b) The last sentence of section 2 of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows: 'No insurance shall be granted under this section to any such financial institution with respect to any obligation representing any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase by it (1) unless the obligation bears such interest, has such maturity, and contains such other terms, conditions, and restrictions, as the Administrator shall prescribe; and (2) unless the amount of such loan, advance of credit, or purchase is not in excess of $2,000, except that in the case of any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase made for the purpose of such financing with respect to real property improved by or to be converted into apartment or multiple family houses, hotels, office, business or other commercial buildings, hospitals, orphanages, colleges, schools, or manufacturing or industrial plants, such insurance may be granted if the amount of the loan, advance of credit, or purchase is not in excess of $50,000.'

"SEC. 29. (a) Subsection (c) of section 203 of the National Housing Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'In the event that the principal obligation of any mortgage accepted for insurance under this section is paid in full prior to the maturity date specified in the mortgage, the Administrator is further authorized in his discretion to require the payment by the mortgagor of a premium charge in such amount as the Administrator determines to be equitable, but not in excess of the aggregate amount of the premium charges that the mortgagor would otherwise have been required to pay if the mortgage had continued to be insured under this section until such maturity date.'

"(b) The first sentence of subsection (f) of section 205 of the National Housing Act is amended by striking out the words 'premium charge' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'annual premium charge'.

"(c) The last sentence of subsection (a) of section 204 of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows: 'For the purposes of this subsection, the value of the mortgage shall be determined, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Administrator, by adding to the amount of the principal of the mortgage which is unpaid on the date of such delivery, (1) interest on such unpaid principal from the date foreclosure proceedings were instituted or the property was otherwise acquired as provided in this subsection to the date of such delivery at the rate provided for in the debentures issued to the mortgagee, less any amount received on account of interest accruing on such unpaid principal between such dates, and (2) the amount of all payments which have been made by the mortgagee for taxes and insurance on the property mortgaged.'

"SEC. 30. Subsection (d) of section 301 of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) No association shall transact any business except such as is incidental to its organization until it has been authorized to do so by the Administrator. Each such association shall have a capital stock of a par value of not less than $2,000,000, and no authorization to commence business shall be granted by the Administrator to any such association until he is satisfied that such capital stock has been subscribed for at not less than par and paid in full in cash or Government securities at their par value.'

"SEC. 31. Section 302 of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 302. Each national mortgage association is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any time notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations in an aggregate amount not to exceed (1) twelve times the aggregate par value of its outstanding capital stock, and in no event to exceed (2) the current face value of mortgages held by it and insured under the provisions of title II of this act, plus the amount of its cash on hand and on deposit and the amount of its investments in bonds or obligations of, or guaranteed as to principal and interest by, the United States. No national mortgage association shall borrow money except through the issuance of such notes, bonds, debentures, or other obligations, except with the approval of the Administrator and under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe.'

"SEC. 32. Section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 1016), is further amended by inserting after the second sentence thereof the following new sentence: 'For the purposes of this section, farm property may be valued at an amount representing a prudent investment, consistent with community standards and rentals, if (1) the person occupying the property is not entirely dependent upon farm income for his livelihood but receives a part of his income from other dependable sources, and (2) the farm income from the property, together with earnings from other dependable sources ordinarily available in the community to a person operating such property, would be sufficient to support his family, to pay operating expenses and fixed charges, and to discharge the interest and amortization payments on the loan.'

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Sections 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 12, 13, 15, 18, 22, 23, 24, and 27 of the House bill are the same in substance as sections 1, 2, 5, 7, 8, 14, 15, 16, 20, 24, 25, 26, and 30, respectively, of the Senate amendment. Certain clarifying changes were made in some of these sections in the Senate amendment and the conference agreement retains these sections as clarified.

Section 3 of the Senate amendment provided for reducing from 11 to 9 the number of directors of each Federal Home Loan bank, effective January 1, 1936. After that date, there would be 3 directors appointed by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, instead of 2 as at present, and there would be 6 directors elected by the institutions which are members of the bank, instead of 9 as at present. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement provides for increasing the membership of the board of directors of each Federal Home Loan bank to 12 members, of whom 4 are to be appointed for 4-year terms by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and 8 are to be elected for 2-year terms (2 of them as directors at large) by the institutions which are members of the bank.

Section 3 of the House bill provided for creating a Federal savings and loan advisory council of 12 members to be elected annually by boards of directors of the Federal Home Loan banks. The council was authorized to confer with the Board and the trustees of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation and to make recommendations with respect to matters within their respective jurisdictions. Section 4 of the Senate amendment provided for a council with similar functions but composed of 12 members elected annually by the banks and 12 members appointed annually by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The conference agreement provides for a council of 18 members, of whom 12 are to be elected annually by the banks and 6 are to be appointed annually by the Board.

Section 5 of the House bill extended the limitation of existing law with respect to the maturity of mortgages which may be accepted as collateral for advances by Federal home-loan banks from 15 to 20 years, and made all home mortgages up to $20,000 in amount—instead of those on properties valued up to $20,000—eligible as such collateral. Section 6 of the Senate amendment removed, with respect to mortgages insured under title II of the National Housing Act, the limitations of existing law that prevent mortgages having maturities in excess of 15 years, and those on properties valued at more than $20,000, being eligible as collateral for Federal Home Loan bank loans. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the House bill.

Section 8 of the House bill required all receipts of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to be deposited in the Treasury subject to an annual appropriation after July 1, 1935. Section 9 of the Senate amendment provided that the receipts of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board derived from assessments on the banks and from other sources (except receipts from the sale of consolidated bonds and debentures) should be deposited in the Treasury subject to withdrawal by the Board for administrative expenses, and that such receipts should not be construed to be Government funds or appropriated moneys. The conference agreement retains the provisions of section 9 of the Senate amendment with the exception of the last clause which stated that the receipts of the Board should not be construed to be Government funds or appropriated moneys.

Section 10 of the Senate amendment liberalized the provisions of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 so that home mortgages on real property upon which there is located a dwelling or dwellings for not more than four families and which is used in whole or in part by the owner as a home or held by him as a homestead may be eligible as collateral. Under existing law there was some question as to whether mortgages on property improved by not to exceed four small dwellings (the so-called "bungalow courts") instead of by a single dwelling for not more than four families would be eligible, and there was also some doubt as to the status of mortgages on property used in part for business purposes. Section 9 of the House bill covered only the latter aspect of the problem. The conference agreement retains the provisions of section 10 of the Senate amendment.

Section 10 of the House bill provided for increasing the borrowing power of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation from $3,000,000,000 to $4,750,000,000 to provide for applications heretofore filed, and for applicants who in good faith sought relief prior to the date the bill becomes law and who file their applications within 60 days thereafter. Section 11 of the Senate amendment made certain clarifying changes and provided that the additional funds might be used to provide for applications heretofore filed and for those filed within 60 days after the amendment takes effect, thus removing the limitation of the House provision that the applicants must have sought relief prior to the time the bill becomes law. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment with one exception, namely, that new applications must be filed within 30 days after the amendment takes effect instead of within 60 days.

Section 12 of the Senate amendment provided that for the purposes of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 assessments levied upon real property by special districts organized in any State for public improvements should be treated as general tax levies; and that liens created by such improvement districts on real property to secure the payment of such levies should be considered as attaching at the time fixed for payment of the levies and not before. It was further provided that the reasonableness of the total annual burden of taxes and assessments of all kinds upon property offered as security for a loan by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and their effect upon the loanable value of the property are matters for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Board to determine; that no deduction should be made from the loanable value of any property for improvement-district assessments or levies not due at the time of making the loan where the total annual taxes and assessments on the property did not exceed a sum which, in the discretion of the Board, is a reasonable annual tax burden for the property; and that in arriving at the loanable value of the property no deductions should be made on account of such improvement-district liens, taxes, and/or assessments not due at the time of making the loan where the aggregate amount of annual taxes, levies and assessments of all kinds did not exceed 5 percent of the value of the property fixed by the Corporation's appraisement. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement clarifies the language of the Senate amendment, leaves it to the Board to determine the reasonableness of the annual tax burden on property securing loans by the Corporation, and removes the prohibition against making a deduction from the loanable value of the property where the aggregate amount of annual taxes, levies, and assessments does not exceed 5 percent of the value of the property as determined by the appraisal.

Section 11 of the House bill prohibited the Corporation from appointing, or retaining for more than 90 days, any officer, employee, attorney, or agent "in any regional or State office or congressional district of the Corporation who was, at the date of the establishment of such office, not a resident of the region or State or congressional district, respectively, served by such office, or who is an officer or director of any firm, corporation, or association engaged in lending money on real estate." Section 13 of the Senate amendment provided that no person should be appointed or retained as an officer, employee, agent, or attorney, at a fixed salary, in any regional or State office of the Corporation who is an officer or director of any firm, corporation, or association engaged in lending money on real estate. The conference agreement retains the provisions of section 13 of the Senate amendment and adds a provision that no person shall be appointed or retained as an officer, employee, agent, or attorney in any State or district office of the Corporation who has not been a bona fide resident of the State served by such office for a period of at least 1 year immediately preceding the date of his appointment.

Section 14 of the House bill authorized the payment of obligations due the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to be made at any branch agency of the Corporation or at any post office or substation. This provision was eliminated by the Senate amendment. The conference agreement also eliminates this provision of the House bill.

Section 17 (a) of the Senate amendment authorized the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to purchase (1) Federal home-loan bank bonds, debentures, or notes (including consolidated bonds or debentures), (2) full-paid income shares of Federal savings and loan associations on the same terms and conditions and within the same limitations as in the case of purchases of such shares by the Secretary of the Treasury after the funds made available to the Secretary have been exhausted, and (3) shares in any institution which is a member of a Federal home-loan bank and whose accounts are insured under title IV of the National Housing Act, if the institution is eligible for such insurance. The Corporation was also authorized to make deposits and purchase certificates of deposit and investment certificates in institutions of the latter class. The total amount to be available to the Corporation under this section was fixed at $300,000,000, to be used without discrimination in favor of federally chartered associations. Section 17 (b) of the Senate amendment repealed a section of the act of April 27, 1934, which was inconsistent with the foregoing provisions as to the total amount to be made available to the Corporation. Section 16 of the House bill contained a provision similar to section 17 (a) of the Senate amendment with a maximum limit of $250,000,000 upon the amount available for such purposes to the Corporation, but it did not require the building and loan associations, and others whose shares might be purchased by the Corporation, to be members of a Federal home-loan bank and to have their accounts insured under title IV of the National Housing Act. There was no provision in the House bill corresponding to section 17 (b) of the Senate amendment. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment with one exception, namely, that institutions whose shares may be purchased by the Corporation must be either members of a Federal Home Loan bank or have their accounts insured under title IV of the National Housing Act if the institutions are eligible for such insurance.

Section 18 of the Senate amendment added a new provision not contained in the House bill which would permit State-chartered institutions which are converted into Federal savings and loan associations to continue to make loans in the territory in which they made loans while operating under a State charter. The conference agreement retains this provision.

Section 19 of the Senate amendment, like section 17 of the House bill, increased by $200,000 the amounts made available to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for the purpose of encouraging the promotion, organization, and development of Federal savings and loan associations, but the provision of section 17 of the House bill that such funds should be used impartially in the promotion and development of local thrift and home-financing institutions, whether State-chartered or Federal, was omitted. The conference agreement retains the provision of the House bill which was omitted by the Senate amendment.

Section 21 of the Senate amendment extended the penalties of section 8 (e) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 to cases where a charge is made against persons applying to the Corporation for a loan for the difference between the par value and the market value of the bonds issued by the Corporation. A similar provision with a smaller penalty was contained in section 19 of the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment with the smaller penalty contained in section 19 of the House bill.

Section 22 of the Senate amendment authorized the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation to use the franking privilege for its official business and provided that the Corporation should determine its necessary expenditures and the manner in which they should be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other law governing the expenditure of public funds. The provision with respect to free use of the mails was contained in section 20 of the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 23 of the Senate amendment liberalized the reserve provisions applicable to associations whose accounts are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation by extending the period within which the 5-percent reserve must be built up from 10 years to 20 years. A similar provision was contained in section 21 of the House bill. There was also a provision in section 23 of the Senate amendment allowing such associations to declare dividends for any year when losses are chargeable to such reserves if such declaration of dividends is approved by the Corporation. The House bill removed the restriction prohibiting the payment of any dividends if any losses were chargeable to such reserves. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment with a clarifying change.

Section 27 of the Senate amendment authorized the Corporation in its discretion to make loans to, purchase the assets of, or make a contribution to, an insured institution in order to prevent a default or in order to restore an insured institution to normal operation, but the amount of any such contribution was not to exceed that which the Corporation finds to be reasonably necessary to save the expense of liquidating the institution. Section 25 of the House bill contained a similar provision except that the Corporation was authorized to make advances to any such institution instead of a contribution, and there was no limitation expressed as to amount. The conference agreement retains the provisions of section 27 of the Senate amendment.

Section 28 of the Senate amendment extended the time from January 1, 1936, to April 1, 1936, within which loans must be made in order to be eligible for insurance under section 2 of the National Housing Act. This part of the section is the same in substance as section 29 of the House bill. The section also provided that loans up to $50,000 would be eligible for such insurance if they are made for the purpose of financing alterations, repairs, and improvements with respect to real property "improved by or to be converted into apartment or multiple family houses, or improved by hotels, office, business, or other commercial buildings, hospitals, orphanages, colleges, schools, churches, or manufacturing, or industrial plants." A similar liberalization of existing law was contained in section 26 of the House bill. The existing law was also clarified by the Senate amendment by providing that the installation of new equipment and machinery might be considered to be "alterations, repairs, and improvements." The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment with minor changes.

Section 29 of the Senate amendment authorized the Federal Housing Administrator in his discretion to require a mortgagor whose mortgage is insured under title II of the National Housing Act to pay a premium charge in such amount as the Administrator determines to be equitable in the event that the principal obligation of the mortgage is paid in full prior to maturity, but the amount of such charge is not to exceed the aggregate amount of the premium charges that the mortgagee would otherwise have been required to pay if the mortgage had continued to be insured until the maturity date. The section also contained an amendment clarifying existing law. There was no provision in the House bill relating to such payment of a premium charge by a mortgagor. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment and also amends the National Housing Act so as to provide that interest on the unpaid principal of an insured mortgage may be included in determining the amount of debentures to be issued to a mortgagee who has delivered the property to the Administrator, but such interest is to cover only the period from the date foreclosure proceedings were instituted or the property was otherwise acquired by the mortgagee with the consent of the Administrator to the date of such delivery, less any amount received on account of interest accruing between such dates. The rate of interest in any such case is to be the same as that provided for in the debentures.

Section 28 of the House bill authorizing a national mortgage association to issue notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations in an aggregate amount not to exceed 15 times the aggregate par value of its outstanding capital stock, instead of 10 times such aggregate par value under existing law, was eliminated by the Senate amendment. The conference agreement authorizes the issue of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations by a national mortgage association up to 12 times the aggregate par value of its outstanding stock.

Section 31 of the Senate amendment provided that in case of loans by the Land Bank Commissioner under section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 farm property may be valued at an amount representing a prudent investment consistent with community standards and rentals, if the person occupying the property is not entirely dependent upon farm income for his livelihood and if the farm income from the property, together with earnings from other dependable sources ordinarily available in the community to a person operating the property, would be sufficient to support his family, to pay operating expenses and fixed charges, and to discharge the interest and amortization payments on the loan. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

POWER OF FEDERAL COURTS

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The Consent Calendar is in order today. It is a very important calendar. I shall not object to the 5 minutes asked by the gentleman from Washington, but I shall to any other request. It is not right to compel all these people who are here expecting their bills to be called up to wait on somebody making a speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, during the last three sessions I have heard a great deal of complaint about our delegating authority to the Executive. The complaint has usually been made by a rather conservative group. For decades, we have delegated our express constitutional authority to coin money and regulate the value thereof to a small group of bankers, and yet this conservative group to which I refer has not complained of that.

For over a hundred years the Federal courts of this country have usurped the legislative power of the Congress and no complaint has come from anyone. By these decisions labor legislation has been hampered and often prevented. By the decision with reference to the income tax we find that the burden of taxation was placed for years upon those least able to bear it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have a decision in the railroad case which jeopardizes absolutely all of our social legislation.

I am introducing today a constitutional amendment to take this power away from the Federal courts. A few days ago the gentleman from Texas called this communistic. Communistic? Listen, you Democrats, to your patron saint, Thomas Jefferson:

It has long been my opinion, and I have never shrunk from its expression, that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is the judiciary, an irresponsible body working like gravity, by day and night, gaining a little today and gaining a little tomorrow, and advancing its noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisprudence, until all shall be usurped.

Prophetic words!

Listen, you Republicans, to your patron saint, Abraham Lincoln:

The candid must confess that if the policy of the Government, upon vital questions affecting the whole people, is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their government into the hands of that tribunal.

Listen, all of you who will agree with me that we honor and love the greatest jurist of all times, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. I quote from him:

I do not think the United States would come to an end if we (the Supreme Court) lost our power to declare an act of Congress void.

Now, I have too high a regard for my position and for our Government to suggest anything subversive. Some people will call names, but calling names gets us nowhere. Let us leave that to the past masters in that art, the Hugh Johnsons, the Huey Longs, and the Percy Gassaways. [Laughter.]

I want to respectfully submit seven questions to the opponents of this amendment:

First. Is it not a fact that at four distinct times the constitutional convention definitely refused this power to the judiciary?

Second. Is not our Federal Government one of express powers and where in the Constitution is such power given the courts?

Third. Is there any other important democratic government in the world which permits such power to its courts?

Fourth. In a democracy should the power of legislation repose in the direct representatives of the people, responsible to them at stated intervals, or should it be lodged in a small group of appointed men responsible to no one and holding office for life?

Fifth. Is it possible that all knowledge of the Constitution reposes in the members of the bench and none in the lawyers of the legislative halls?

Sixth. In a divided decision (and most of the important ones are such) which of the two groups is infallible?

Seventh. When Justice Shiras, in the income-tax decision, changed his mind within the month, at which time was he infallible? And when Justice Sutherland differs with Senator Sutherland on railroad pensions, when is he infallible?

Some people and some newspapers, no doubt, have a great deal of contempt for Congress. I suggest that Congress take back unto itself this function of legislating, independent of both the Executive and the judiciary, and we will not only regain our own self-respect, but we will also have the respect of the people throughout the country and restore confidence in representative Government. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. KNUTE HILL] has expired.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

NUISANCE TAXES

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the anniversary of a great American institution. I refer to the fifty-second anniversary of the coming of the greatest show on earth, Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey show, that is now in this city. [Applause and laughter.]

I want you to know that this organization paid last year $500,000 to the United States Government in amusement taxes. This $500,000 did not come from the circus but it came from the nickels and dimes of the kiddies who saved those nickels and dimes throughout the entire year to go to this greatest of American amusement institutions. I say, that this tax is vicious and iniquitous and ought to be repealed. All amusement taxes ought to be repealed. I have introduced a bill for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to insert a copy of my bill therein. I hope that this Congress will take recognition of this intolerable situation, not only with regard to circuses but with motion-picture theaters, where the dimes and nickels of the kiddies are collected to go to the United States Government. We should repeal every amusement tax and replace it with a tax on wealth and swollen incomes. [Applause.]

You may ask what is my interest in the American circus. While serving as director of agriculture for the State of Ohio in 1923-29 one of my several jobs was to manage and direct the Ohio State fair. In addition to a splendid racing program daily, the grandstand exhibitions were featured by outstanding circus and vaudeville acts, not only because of the drawing power of such attractions but also because they were always clean, moral, and wholesome. One year the immortal John Philip Sousa and his band delighted Ohio State fair patrons with their programs. Another year witnessed the greatest and largest rodeo and stampepe ever staged in the East. A little later the Hagenbeck-Wallace circus was the feature attraction at the grandstand. Through these associations, through experience and observation, I have come to regard these institutions as worthy of the support of all those interested.

And so, if you ask me again what is my interest, my reply will be none other than that mentioned and the desire to insure the perpetuity of an institution that for more than 50 years has visited annually the American people in all of its tinsel and bespangled glory; an institution that for more than 50 years has presented its annual wares to the amusement-loving public without ever requiring a censor of any of its acts or performances; an institution that might well be termed the tented city of not only amusement and entertainment but a tented city of wholesome knowledge and learning, representing and depicting as it does not only the most finished acts and specimens of the outdoor amusement world but likewise the animal exhibits of all countries gathered together and assembled here from the far-flung corners of the earth.

This allusion refers not alone to the great circus which I refer to today but to others who have survived and who still carry on despite the most costly and depressing panic in our country's history. Today there are only four large traveling railroad circuses. Many others travel by motor caravan. To all of them, of course, the Federal amusement tax is a nuisance to their patrons—the farmers, the workingmen, small business men—this tax is a heavy burden. So why not repeal this tax now? Surely the revenue that might be lost by such action would not bankrupt the Nation. It could easily be replaced by a proper tax on wealth and income. I direct the attention of every Member of the House of Representatives, every Member of the United States Senate, and the particular attention of the Ways and Means Committee to the bill which I am introducing today and which will effectively cure this evil.

A bill to preserve and encourage a declining national institution which is of great educational and recreational benefit to the people of the Nation, particularly farmers, wageworkers, and small producers, popularly known as the "circus"; to enable our people, particularly farmers, wageworkers, and small producers and their children to receive the benefits herein mentioned without being taxed by the Government; to accomplish this end by removing the tax on admissions thereto as provided by section 500 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended

Be it enacted, etc., That section 500 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, be, and is hereby, amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and substituting therefor a semicolon and adding the following: "or (3) any admissions to any performance of a traveling company exhibiting miscellaneous shows, performances, and entertainment consisting of menageries, acrobats, horsemen, etc., performing in 'rings' or 'sideshows'; in other words, that class of educational and recreational amusement known as the 'circus'."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX]?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

REPATRIATING NATIVE-BORN WOMEN

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 4354, to repatriate native-born women who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, and I shall object for this reason: This bill is not necessary. We have an abundance of statutory law controlling this situation at the present time.

I do not want to take much of the time of the House to go into this in detail. The departments of the Government are not in unison with reference to it. It has no recommendation from the State Department. The Labor Department is laying great stress on the fact that it is trying to compose a law that will coordinate the many immigration bills, and for that reason I object.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection that I may discuss the bill for a moment?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make an explanation.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to bring relief to American-born women who have lost their American citizenship through the operation of a legal technicality. It is not a bill which has for its purpose the giving of citizenship to any person who has not heretofore enjoyed American citizenship.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman intend to offer his amendment to the bill?

Mr. GEARHART. I do.

Mr. Speaker, under the ancient law of nations when a woman marries an alien she loses her citizenship and becomes a citizen of the nation of which her husband is a citizen. Prior to 1922 all American women who married foreigners lost their citizenship; but in 1922, on September 22 of that year, Congress enacted a law to the effect that all women married after that date would be deemed to retain their American citizenship. Since that time there has been no objection whatsoever to the retention of citizenship by those women.

It is hoped to accomplish by the pending bill an extension of the same privilege to those American-born women who married foreigners prior to 1922, the same privilege which already has been accorded to those women who married foreigners after 1922.

There is a defect in the bill as it now stands and I have drawn a perfecting amendment which, I am informed, the committee is willing to accept; and at the proper time in the consideration of the bill I will offer the amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation of objection, I wish to state that the gentleman's statement is correct in part only. The present law is entirely adequate to take care of women who lost their citizenship prior to the passage of the Cable Act in 1922; the law is amply sufficient to permit them becoming American citizens and there is absolutely no necessity for the proposed bill. It applies to a certain group only. For instance, it does not include every woman who lost her citizenship before 1922. I do not know whether the gentleman's amendment cures this defect or not. This is a very complicated piece of legislation. I feel that the office of the Secretary of State is not in favor of this bill as it now reads. As I say, I have not had time to pass upon the gentleman's amendment. I think it contains one good provision—the proposed bill applies only to women who have been back here 3 years. This amendment applies to all women. Now, if we are going to clarify this situation why not clarify it entirely? why not do it in a way that it will do what is intended that it should do?

Is not the author of the bill willing to have it passed over without prejudice until I can study this amendment and confer with those who are interested in the subject? This is a complicated piece of legislation, and for a Member to rise on the floor and insert an amendment into a complicated piece of legislation is just like tinkering with a complicated piece of machinery.

Mr. Speaker, in order that we may have a chance to study the bill further and the effect of this amendment, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

CITIZENSHIP

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3023, to provide for citizenship to persons born in the United States, who have not acquired any other nationality by personal affirmative act, but who have heretofore lost their United States citizenship through the naturalization of a parent under the laws of a foreign country, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. McLEAN, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF CERTAIN WESTERN RIVERS FOR FLOOD CONTROL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4077, authorizing a preliminary examination of the Nehalem, Miami, Kilchis, Wilson, Trask, and Tillamook Rivers, in Tillamook County, Oreg., with a view to the controlling of floods.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make an explanation.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] on the last consent calendar day asked that these bills, providing for a preliminary examination with a view to flood control of certain rivers in western Oregon, be passed over without prejudice until he could have an opportunity to give them a little closer study. He has now given study to those bills and is not objecting to them today.

May I say now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI], who has been so kind as to withhold his objection, that these bills are the usual authorization bills, not for a flood-control survey at all but merely for a preliminary examination. Now, a preliminary examination is not the same thing as a survey. A preliminary examination merely authorizes the district engineer resident in the district where these streams are located to make a report to the Chief of Engineers at Washington and to forward to him the data that he has in regard to the flood situation on the streams in question. It costs no additional money to do this and many times it is not even necessary for the district engineer to do more than to compile the data which he already has in his office, because a part of the business of district engineers is to collect and to keep data in regard to flood conditions of all the streams in their districts.

This is a necessary authorization, without which no future legislation in regard to flood control can be considered, and it is one which does not cost the people anything at all. It will merely result in the submission of information which will officially show what can or what ought to be done in the future in the way of flood control on the streams named in the bills. As the gentleman knows, a part of the money in the public-works bill will be used for flood-control work upon such streams as P. W. A. may find to be in need of flood-control work.

Before the Public Works Administration takes any action whatever in regard to flood control on any stream, they request the Army Engineers for a report. The Army Engineers are not authorized, under the law, to make such a report unless they have had authorization by Congress to make a preliminary examination. That is all these bills provide for. This does not cost the Government of the United States any additional money whatever, and cannot possibly do harm or injury to anyone.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, this type of bill should go to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and I still object.

Mr. MOTT. That matter has been definitely settled. The Rivers and Harbors Committee has no jurisdiction whatever over a bill of this kind. The matter is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Flood Control Committee, to which it has been referred by the Speaker and from which this bill has been favorably reported to the House.

Mr. SCHULTE demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF THE UMPQUA RIVER, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5651, authorizing a preliminary examination of the Umpqua River, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object. This is the type of bill that should go to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and I am going to object to every one of these bills.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF THE COQUILLE RIVER, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5773, to authorize a preliminary examination of Coquille River and its tributaries, in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman who has objected to the preceding two bills that he is laboring under a misapprehension. I am a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. What the gentleman states is absolutely correct so far as preliminary surveys for navigation are concerned, but with reference to flood control our committee has never raised a jurisdictional question and the gentleman will find that under the rules of the House the Flood Control Committee is the proper committee to have jurisdiction over bills of this character.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, the act creating the Committee on Flood Control provides especially for these preliminary surveys and the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, like the gentleman from California, know, and the Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee on the floor of the House concedes, that these bills should be referred to the Flood Control Committee where the preliminary examination is for the purpose of flood-control projects.

Mr. LESINSKI. Has this matter been taken up with the engineering department?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Every one of them, and there is a favorable report.

Mr. LESINSKI. Where is that report?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. This matter has gone through the Corps of Engineers with reference to flood control on these various streams. Many emergencies exist. Last year one of these preliminary surveys was made in the State of Vermont and the money was allotted to go in and undertake this as an emergency project. There is no other committee that can handle this particular phase because the navigation on those streams is not at all involved. Every member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors favors this matter.

Mr. SCHULTE demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. I object.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF ROGUE RIVER, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5774, to authorize a preliminary examination of Rogue River and its tributaries, in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say this same question rose last year with respect to the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and the Flood Control Committee. I followed the same course at that time that the gentleman is following now with respect to this matter, thinking I was safeguarding the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I went into the matter very fully and deeply with both committees, and I found that there were innumerable cases where there was no overlapping of jurisdiction. I have gone over these bills very carefully, and I find the bills now on the calendar involve no question concerning jurisdiction. I have in mind several bills on the calendar, which have to do with inland rivers, concerning which there is no question of jurisdiction so far as harbor development is concerned. For this reason I have raised no objection to these bills, and I hope the gentleman from Michigan will see them in the same light.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice all of these bills contain a provision that the cost thereof shall be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examination, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is right.

Mr. McFARLANE. That being true, if the engineers feel that a preliminary survey should be made and could be made without additional expense, as the gentleman from Oregon indicated a while ago, none of these bills would be necessary; but the fact that these authorization bills are now before us for consideration is a very clear indication to me that each of these bills will require thousands of dollars of additional expense to be paid by the Government. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SCHULTE demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. I object.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF THE SIUSLAW RIVER, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5775, to authorize a preliminary examination of Siuslaw River and its tributaries, in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman from Texas, in answer to the question he asked a moment ago, that if this bill is passed authorizing a preliminary survey, all the district engineer will do will be to submit his report recommending whether or not in his opinion a flood-control survey should be made. If he recommends against a survey, that settles it. If he recommends that a survey be made, then it would take another bill and another authorization from the Congress to make the survey. This bill calls for nothing but a report from the district engineer. It is technically called a preliminary examination. I repeat, it does not cost the Government any additional money to do this, because making these examinations and reports is a part of the regular work and business of the district engineer's office.

Mr. BLANTON. This has the usual provision that is put in all of these bills?

Mr. MOTT. Certainly. All of them are identical. It is the same thing we have been doing ever since the Flood Control Committee was organized. These bills are jurisdictional, for, without authorization for a preliminary examination, no subsequent flood-control legislation can even be considered.

I do hope the gentleman, in view of the explanation that has now been given and which certainly cannot be open to question, may see fit to withdraw his objection to the consideration of these bills which surely cannot harm him or his people, but which are vitally necessary to the welfare of the people of the districts where these rivers are located.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF YAQUINA RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5776, to authorize a preliminary examination of Yaquina River and its tributaries, in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF SILETZ RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5777, to authorize a preliminary examination of Siletz River and its tributaries, in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods.

Mr. LESINSKI. I object, Mr. Speaker.

EMERGENCY CONSERVATION WORK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 60, to authorize the disposal of surplus personal property, including buildings, of the Emergency Conservation Work.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, there is an identical Senate bill on the Speaker's desk, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill (S. 82) may be substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of Procurement, United States Treasury Department, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to Federal agencies, either permanent or emergency, personal property which is no longer required for use by the Emergency Conservation Work, including equipment, tools, materials, and buildings, when so declared surplus by the Director of the Emergency Conservation Work: Provided, That upon the recommendation of the Department under which the technical work of the camp was organized and supervised any such surplus property that is not desired by any Federal agency may be transferred without cost, except for expenses incident to transfer, to the forestry, park, conservation, or educational departments of the States, or to counties or municipalities, or to organizations engaged in the promotion of education, recreation, and/or health.

Sec. 2. Surplus property of the Emergency Conservation Work not required to serve any of the above purposes will be disposed of by the Director of Procurement through sale or in any other manner he may direct.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, there appeared in yesterday's papers a news item relating to the transfer of certain Mexican consuls, two in particular, Hermolao E. Torres, who was consul at San Bernardino, Calif., and who was transferred to Denver, Colo., and another, Alexandro V. Martinez, consul at Los Angeles, Calif., who was transferred to another city of the United States, which, I believe, is Tucson, Ariz.

The item in the newspapers said in part:

Torres, who was charged . . . with trying to prevent the holding of a religious procession in San Bernardino—was transferred to Denver. He was assigned there on a special mission to attempt a solution . . . of Mexican labor troubles in that State. New posts to which other consuls have been assigned were not known here.

Last December—

The news item further stated:

The Mexican Embassy officials said the shake-up was routine as a result of the change of administration in Mexico, and that the changes were being made over a period of time.

The activities of these two men came to the attention of the Special Committee Investigating Un-American Activities, of which I was chairman, and in our report we incorporated the fact that certain actions violating international law, if established, or if the information were correct, had been committed by both of these Mexican consuls in the United States.

The information was called to the committee's attention the latter part of December, the committee expiring, so far as its investigatorial powers were concerned, on January 3 of this year, too late for the committee to make an investigation.

The committee called this evidence to the attention of the State Department and requested the State Department to make an investigation. I have followed the matter very closely and the State Department has been making such an investigation. Whether or not the investigation has disclosed that the information called to the attention of the committee is correct, I am unable to state at the present time, although it is my understanding there has been substantiation.

In any event, there was called to the attention of the committee, of which I was chairman, evidence which seemed to show indisputably that sometime last December the Mexican consul, Mr. Torres, in San Bernardino, made a statement which was published in a newspaper in that city, and which he requested to have published, calling upon the people of that city, who were of Mexican blood whether citizens or not, not to participate in a religious procession that was being held in connection with the celebration of the patron saint of Mexico.

In addition to this, the information showed he made a radio speech along the same lines, and in addition he went to the mayor and the chief of police of the city of San Bernardino for the purpose of trying to stop the religious procession. This happened in the United States, not in Mexico. If any of these charges are substantiated, demand for the recall of such consul should be made immediately by the State Department.

I have a telegram from the mayor of San Bernardino stating that he was approached by the Mexican consul, and which is a reply to a communication I sent him for information, and which reads as follows: "Both the chief and myself were contacted. Have a copy of the protest", signed "Mayor Secombe."

The Mexican consul, Mr. Martinez, in Los Angeles, issued a statement in a newspaper, which statement was published at his request, calling upon the Mexican people resident in the United States, whether they were permanently residing here as Mexican people expecting to become citizens, or Americans of Mexican blood and descent, not to participate in a religious procession that was taking place in that city in connection with the same celebration.

I have been following this matter and I would not have spoken on this occasion, although I intended to later, if it were not for the fact that there appeared in yesterday's papers reference to the activities of the special committee, and also the fact that these two Mexican consuls have been transferred to other cities of the United States to perform routine business. I called up the State Department this morning and was informed that these two men at the present time have no official status in the United States; that they have no official status in this country as consular officers, or otherwise.

The State Department further informed me that "it has no official information as to whether they are traveling, or what they expect to do in this country." The State Department also said "it had been notified by the Mexican Embassy that their services had terminated at San Bernardino and Los Angeles, and that recognition of any transfer has not been given by the State Department; and that their appointments in San Bernardino and Los Angeles have been canceled by this Government. Any change has not been recognized by this Government", which is essential. The exequatur must be approved by the State Department, and the Government of the United States. Whenever the appointment of a consul has been canceled by the government he represents, any transfer of that consul to another place in the country to which he was originally accredited—and in the case of these two Mexican consuls, the United States—must receive the approval of our Government.

If what has been conveyed to the special committee is correct, both of these consuls have violated international law. Those violations of international law occurred in the United States. I do not expect that consuls accredited to this country are going to inject themselves into the internal affairs of this country, whether of religious processions of any creed or processions not pertaining to religious ceremonies or in any other improper manner. In the United States we guarantee the constitutional right of freedom of religious conscience, and we do not expect consuls accredited to this Government to interfere with the free exercise thereof, either by any citizen of the United States or by any person living within the confines of our country. We want good will to exist among all nations. It is impossible for a nation to possess the good will of the people of other nations when it engages in persecutions of its people because of religion or race. Only a few days ago President Roosevelt in a message of good will to the world declared:

It must be the honest endeavor of all peoples to arrive at a sympathetic understanding of others' problems.

He further said:

The progress of the human race from barbarity to civilization has been slow and painful.

That is true. That statement could be added upon. The progress of the human race from civilization to universal tolerance, understanding, and appreciation has been and is still slow and painful. While the progress from barbarity to civilization has been slow and painful, the progress of eliminating some of the curses of civilization, one of the most prominent of which has been and is misunderstanding and intolerance, with resultant persecution, has been slow and painful.

It is the American viewpoint that persecution because of religion or race is contrary to the law of nations. Such a viewpoint is entertained by all broad-minded persons. The right of freedom of religious conscience is a guaranty, a right that we all enjoy under the Constitution of the United States. It has attracted to our shores millions of persons who sought relief from persecution. It has been repeatedly stated, and I am in agreement, that the right of a free religious conscience, and the right of free expression thereof, has been the main factor in our great progress as a nation. When all the nations of the civilized world guarantee to their people this right, together with protecting the power of exercise of religious conscience, the main step in the removal of misunderstanding, and the establishment of good will, will have been taken throughout the civilized world. While it is technically true that one nation cannot concern itself with what are strictly the internal affairs of another nation, there is plenty of precedent for our Government extending its good offices, where an acute and dangerous situation, the result of persecution, exists elsewhere. Furthermore, the denial of the right of religious freedom, and the free exercise thereof, does not extend to the citizens of another nation, particularly a friendly one. Persecution, wherever it exists, arouses a feeling of repugnance and resentment in the minds of all decent thinking, broad-minded persons. Whether in Mexico, some of the States of which have passed persecutory laws against religion, as such—not one creed, but all creeds—or in Germany, where groups are subjected to persecution because of both religion and race, or in any other country where similar conditions might exist in the future, broad-minded persons of all nations, otherwise friendly, or disposed to be friendly, are bound to have their friendly state of mind obscured or subordinated to their repugnance of persecution, and their contempt for those in control of Government, who are trying to destroy what is generally recognized, and which we of the United States recognize, as an inalienable right.

A tolerant person is intolerant only in one respect. He or she is intolerant against intolerance. Rulers of nations or those in control of government engaging in such practices, policies, and attacks against groups of their people cannot complain against an opposed tolerant and enlightened world opinion. Such an opinion has many effective ways of making itself felt and in a proper manner.

The people of the United States want to be friendly with the Government of Mexico. The most effective way to accomplish that would be for the Mexican Government to extend to religion its proper rights, within its proper sphere, within its jurisdiction. Under no conditions will the people of the United States tolerate Mexican consuls, accredited to the United States, attempting to or interfering with the religious freedom guaranteed to every person resident in the United States, whether citizen or not. The Mexican Government, or any other government engaged in persecution of its people, cannot expect the friendly state of mind of all the people of the United States unless and until such policies cease.

For either one or both of these consuls to attempt to interfere with a religious celebration conducted in the United States was not only a violation of international law but a violation of one of the fundamental guaranties of the Constitution of the United States, and which is recognized as the cornerstone of our liberties. Such men, with the facts established, should not be permitted by our Government to continue their offices in the United States. If a request is made to approve their exequaturs, assigning them to another city of the United States, that approval should be denied. Our Government should go further. With the facts established, our State Department should demand their recall, conveying to the Mexican Government, in emphatic terms, that religious freedom and the free exercise thereof is an inalienable right guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to all persons, citizens or aliens, subject to our jurisdiction. If the facts are established that either one of these consuls did any of the things complained of, the State Department should act immediately and in no uncertain manner. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, NINTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5917) to appoint an additional circuit judge for the ninth judicial circuit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. This matter has been very carefully investigated by the judicial conference, by the Department of Justice, and it has been unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary because of the great need for this additional judge. The need is very great. There has been no objection from any source which has made an investigation, and I do hope the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DUFFEY] is a colleague of mine and a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. I should like to ask the gentleman if his committee did not consider impeachment charges that were filed against three Federal judges, James H. Wilkerson, Walter D. Lindley, and Charles A. Woodward. Is that true?

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. The subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary has thoroughly investigated that matter and made a report to the full committee, which was accepted and approved. Near the end of this session the full Committee on the Judiciary expects to make a report back to the House of Representatives.

Mr. TRUAX. I should like to remind the gentleman that my colleague at large, Mr. Young, made the following charges, that these three Federal judges were guilty of offenses involving moral turpitude, and have shown themselves utterly unfit to occupy the high judicial positions to which they were intrusted.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF SETTLEMENT OF NORTHWEST TERRITORY

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 208, to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787 and the settlement of the Northwest Territory.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that I have discussed this bill with the author of the resolution, my colleague from Ohio, Mr. SECREST, and I have discussed with him certain amendments which, in my judgment, should be made a part of the bill if it is enacted into law. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECREST] indicates that he does not wish to consider those at this moment. He has indicated that he has an amendment of his own to offer which will reduce the amount of the authorization from $100,000 to $75,000. I am opposed to this amendment. I do not object to the amount of the authorization, but I object as to the manner in which it is proposed to spend the money. I would say to the gentleman, and he knows it, that I want to offer an amendment that will authorize $25,000 of that appropriation of $100,000 to be used at the 1937 Ohio State fair in fitting commemoration of this event. I am unwilling to authorize an expenditure of $100,000 to be directed by former Governor George White. Those of us who are familiar with this bill and its background know perfectly well that this is true. We know that the active manager of this celebration has already been selected by White and that they propose to spend at least $25,000 in salaries and expenses for this manager and his staff. We know that they propose to make this a 3-year job, when it could be efficiently promoted, staged, and produced in less than 1 year. They propose to spend from $30,000 to $40,000 for the purchase and distribution of maps in the six States that will be affected by this bill. As usual, these tax spenders, running true to form, want no restrictions or limitations placed on their spending proclivities.

During his 4-year term as Governor of Ohio, Mr. White displayed every characteristic that now crops out in this bill. He had absolutely no regard, mercy, or sympathy for the overburdened taxpayers of his own State, but was always solicitous for the welfare of big business, the racketeering bankers, and the 36-percent loan sharks. Instead of adequately taxing these public enemies, he forced upon our citizens by repeated sessions of the legislature a thoroughly iniquitous, vicious, and obnoxious sales tax.

Enact this bill into law, and it will be only a repetition of the dreary Ohio exhibit at the Chicago Exposition.

I propose another amendment that will limit the amount to be used for salaries and expenses of directors and their assistants to not more than 15 percent of the authorization of $100,000. I also wish to amend the bill by stipulating that no officials, managers, and directors shall serve for more than 1 year, as that is ample time to promote, produce, and complete the celebration. I am unalterably opposed to $25,000 or more of this appropriation to be used solely for the purpose of providing a 3-year job for those interested. My amendment to spend $25,000 of this sum at the 1937 Ohio State fair will be welcomed by all those who recognize this fair as the world's greatest agricultural and livestock exposition, who will know that if a portion of this project is held in cooperation with the management of this magnificent exposition, the Ohio State fair, that its success will be assured; that, instead of using Government funds and taxpayers' money for jobs, publicity, and personal aggrandizement of a selfish few, this money will be used for the benefit of the six States affected, the entire State of Ohio, and the citizenship of each and every one of the 88 counties of Ohio.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice until the gentleman from Ohio and I can further discuss the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX]?

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, I must object to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TRUAX. Then I object to the present consideration of the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS FOR NATIONAL ARCHIVES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6836, to provide for the printing and distribution of Government publications to the National Archives Establishment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] to explain the necessity for this, and whether there is any duplication of effort on the part of the commission that is obtaining this money?

Mr. KELLER. There is not. I have an amendment to cut out the word "Establishment", which does not belong in the bill. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] objected to it on that ground the last time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, let us see what the amendment is.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KELLER. The amendment is simply to strike out the word "Establishment."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What word does the gentleman propose to put in place of it?

Mr. KELLER. None at all. Just strike it out.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the last session at which this bill was considered I asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] to ascertain if this work could not be handled without an additional appropriation. I will now ask the gentleman if he has obtained any information along that line?

Mr. KELLER. I have. I have a letter from the Public Printer to this effect:

MAY 20, 1935.

HON. KENT E. KELLER,
House of Representatives, United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KELLER: In reply to your letter of May 16, asking for information in reference to H. R. 6836, a bill to provide for the printing and distribution of Government publications to the National Archives Establishment, I am pleased to advise that the passage of this bill will not require any extra help in the Government Printing Office.

The extra expense involved will be that for paper, presswork, binding, and folding, and it is believed that the $4,000 estimate furnished by this Office is ample to cover this additional expense.

As stated in your letter, it would be impossible to figure the exact expense involved, and that any attempt to do so would cost more than the amount involved. As stated, it is believed that the $4,000 is sufficiently high to reimburse the Government Printing Office for the additional burden that will be imposed by the passage of the act. If it proves to be too high, any surplus will, of course, revert to the general fund of the Treasury.

Respectfully,

A. E. GIEGENGACK,
Public Printer.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has done a good job in getting this information, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain to me what type of publications will go into the Archives?

Mr. KELLER. Of course, the first object of the Archives is to use, as far as possible, originals every time, but very often originals are not obtainable. Where they are not obtainable we always get a printed copy, and where there is likelihood of their being lost we always get a duplicate, so that we will always have permanently, for all time, these publications, either originals or copies of them, for consideration and study.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will these publications be the same as the publications that are sent automatically to the Congressional Library?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; surely.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will there not be duplication?

Mr. KELLER. There will not. There will be no extra expense except the presswork.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Why keep these publications in the Archives and also in the Congressional Library?

Mr. KELLER. For this reason: The Archives is for the purpose not of general work; the Library is the place for that. Therefore the copies that go to the Library are for the general use of everybody who wants to study them. In the Archives they are kept under lock and key in such a way that if you go there to study them you must show that you have that right. They remain there so as to be sure that there will be a copy of everything that is obtained, and they will not be destroyed.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will a copy of every publication go to the Archives?

Mr. KELLER. Every one of them.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Where will we find enough room to put them?

Mr. KELLER. It is of immense importance to be able to trace the steps by which a bill becomes a law; and each step, step by step, should be shown. Over in the Library there are many years that are missing entirely. This situation ought never to exist in the Archives.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I merely wanted an explanation of it. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations for the Legislative Establishment, I know that we are spending a lot of money to preserve every report of every committee and everything that is published. We are filling up rooms in the old House Office Building. For this purpose, an increase in the appropriation was asked this year. If this is going to continue, we will fill up 10 buildings in Washington.

Mr. KELLER. No; there is a limit. The purpose is to have the originals always available. They are not in the Library of Congress.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. How many copies will be filed in the Archives?

Mr. KELLER. I think two.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. The Congressional Library gets three copies.

Mr. KELLER. But those are used and broken to pieces in using them. The copies in the Archives will be protected against such use.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN). Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title 44 of the Code of Laws of the United States be, and is hereby, amended by adding a new section as follows:

"SEC. —. That there shall be printed and delivered by the Public Printer to the National Archives Establishment for official use, which shall be chargeable to Congress, two copies each of the following publications:

"House documents and public reports, bound; Senate documents and public reports, bound; Senate and House journals, bound; United States Code and Supplements, bound; Statutes at Large, bound; Official Register of the United States, bound; Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, bound; and all other documents bearing a congressional number, and all documents not bearing a congressional number printed upon order of any committee in either House of Congress, or by order of any department, bureau, independent office or establishment, commission, or officer of the Government except confidential matter, blank forms, and circular letters not of a public character; and one copy each of all public bills and resolutions in Congress in each parliamentary stage.

"The Superintendent of Documents shall furnish without cost copies of such publications as may be available for free distribution."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "one copy" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two copies."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLER: Page 1, lines 6 and 7, after the word "Archives" in line 6, strike out the word "Establishment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WHITE SWAN SCHOOL DISTRICT, YAKIMA COUNTY, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4297, to provide funds for cooperation with White Swan School District No. 88, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, these bills from Calendar No. 74 to Calendar No. 87, inclusive, with the exception of Calendars Nos. 84 and 92, and Calendar No. 113, were called on the last Consent Calendar day. At that time I asked that these bills be passed over without prejudice for the reason that I felt they should be put into an omnibus bill. I have had the matter up with the committee since then and they seem to think it is not desirable to bring them up in an omnibus bill. As I said at that time, I have no objection to the merits of the bills, but I objected only to the manner in which they were being brought in. For this reason I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not inclined to object to this group of bills, and I hope they can be disposed of in the same way so as to save time. I do want to ask a few questions and will appreciate the gentleman's answer. I should like to know if this will not result in a difference in the treatment of schools in different parts of the country? These bills, in the matter of providing for the education of Indian children, are different from any bills that have been called up since I have been paying attention to these matters. Heretofore, as I understand it, the Indians were provided with their own Indian schools. Now, for some reason or other, it is decided to send the Indians to public schools. The Indian land is free of taxation. This being the case you are going to allow the Indians to go to school with the white people, or the American people, whatever you want to term them; the Indian lands are not subject to taxation; the Indians make no contribution whatever. Are not the people in these sections bound to raise objection on the ground that they are having to educate these children without the Indians participating in the expense? How can you Members from the Indian country explain this to your constituents?

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, the idea is that the Government pretty generally, through its administration of the Wheeler-Howard bill and, as a matter of fact, starting some 2 or 3 years previous to the passage of that bill, adopted a policy of sending the Indian children to State schools supported by taxation there; and until they became overcrowded, the State schools made no objection, and they got along fine; there never was and there never has occurred any race turmoil or race prejudice whatever. Now these schools are becoming overcrowded, and additions must be built to the present buildings in order to continue to accommodate both the Indian and white patrons. If the additions to the buildings are provided the schools are willing to supply the equipment, although the Indian population and the Indian patrons of the schools are free from tax burden. The only requirement is that the buildings be extended.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will not this result in this group of schools receiving aid from the Government to the exclusion of other schools throughout the country? Is not the result going to be that these schools for the white and Indian children will be built by the Government? In no other section of the country does this obtain. Everywhere else the people pay for their own school buildings.

How much is it expected this will ultimately cost? Is it not somewhere between $700,000 and $800,000?

Mr. AYERS. The entire cost for all these 15 schools is figured at $751,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Seven hundred and fifty-one thousand dollars is going to be given for the purpose of building schools in certain sections of the United States upon different terms than in other sections of the country.

This proposition ought to come before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with the Department of the Interior. I do not want, of course, simply to thrust my own views upon the House, but what I have said is what appears to me is going to happen—that the children in these sections of the country are going to be furnished with educational facilities, school buildings, paraphernalia, and equipment paid for by the Government—a condition which does not exist anywhere else.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it not a fact that this bill is similar to a bill which was considered a year ago, rather a group of bills, providing schoolhouses for the Indians where there formerly had been adequate schoolhouses which had been given up; is not this one of those bills?

Mr. AYERS. It is one of the same bills which was up on Consent Calendar at the last session of Congress and objected to; yes.

Mr. TABER. And was not that the situation?

Mr. AYERS. Yes; the gentleman is correct as far as he has stated the situation; and let me add that the situation came about in this way: Previous to the enactment of the Wheeler-Howard bill there had been, since 1931, a general policy of the Indian Department for the placing of Indian children in white schools and to have them associate with and educated with white children. Since the adoption of that policy many—I cannot say many; but a large number of the Indian schools on the reservations had been abandoned and the Indian children were sent to white schools. This policy has now been pretty generally adopted, and in all instances the white schools have given their full cooperation. No complaint nor request for help occurred until the schools became overcrowded.

Bear in mind that none of these State schools were under any obligation to take these Indian children. Their parents were not taxpayers as Indian property is exempt from taxation, and then these Indian children were wards of the Government, but for the benefit of such children the State schools accepted them. Now the schools are overcrowded and the Indian schools have been abandoned so there is nothing the Government can do to educate its wards except cooperate with the State schools.

In each of these instances the bill involves a State school now sadly overcrowded.

Mr. TABER. In other words where we formerly had an adequate building, and I do not know but what that exists now, we are going ahead and for the same identical purpose appropriate money to build another building for the same purpose?

Mr. AYERS. No; the purpose is not to build another building. It is simply to enlarge the present State schools. They are overcrowded and the Indian children will be crowded out and they will get no educational benefits unless this legislation is passed. They cannot go back to Indian schools for those buildings have been salvaged.

Mr. SCHULTE demanded the regular order.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this bill has been passed over until the next call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, I ask unanimous consent that all of the school bills may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that under the unanimous consent request the bills on the Consent Calendar numbered 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 85, 86, 87, 92, and 113 are passed over without prejudice?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

PROCTORS AND MARSHALS' FEES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 29, to amend the laws relating to proctors and marshals' fees and bonds and stipulations in suits in admiralty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 824 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 572) is amended by adding after the first paragraph of such section the following new paragraph:

"On appeals in admiralty, where the amount involved is not over $1,000 a proctor's docket fee of $20; where the amount involved is from $1,000 to $5,000 a proctor's docket fee of $50; where the amount involved is over $5,000 a proctor's docket fee of $100. On such appeals cost of brief of successful party to be taxed, where amount involved is not over $1,000 at not exceeding $25; where amount involved is between $1,000 and $5,000 at not exceeding $50; where amount involved is over $5,000 at not exceeding $75."

Sec. 2. Section 829 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 574; Supp. VII, title 28, sec. 574), is amended by striking out of such section the paragraph which reads as follows:

"When the debt or claim in admiralty is settled by the parties without a sale of the property, the marshal shall be entitled to a commission of 1 percent on the first $500 of the claim or decree, and one-half of 1 percent on the excess of any sum thereof over $500: Provided, That when the value of the property is less than the claim such commission shall be allowed only on the appraised value thereof."

Sec. 3. Section 941 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 754), is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That the parties may stipulate the amount of the bond or stipulation for the release of a vessel or other property on libel in admiralty to be not more than the amount claimed in the libel, with interest, plus an allowance for libellant's costs: Provided further, That in the event of the inability or refusal of the parties to so stipulate the amount of the bond, the court shall fix the amount thereof, but if not so fixed then a bond shall be required in the amount hereinbefore prescribed in this section."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, after line 16, insert the following: "and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'In all cases in which the vessel or other property is sold by a public auctioneer or by some party other than the marshal or his deputy, the fee herein authorized to be paid to the marshal shall be reduced by the amount paid to said auctioneer or other party.'"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STOCKBRIDGE AND MUNSEE TRIBE OF INDIANS (WISCONSIN)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5229, directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate, hear, and determine claims of the individual members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians of the State of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do this to ask a question, I do not remember of ever having a bill like this come before this body in my time where the Secretary of the Interior is given power to consider Indian claims. One of his chief duties is to deal with the Indians. That was in ordinary times, and before he got so many other things to do in connection with the recovery program. In this report I notice he says that he would like to handle these claims and recommends that the bill be passed. May I have some explanation?

Mr. BOILEAU. There is a precedent for this in that a similar bill was passed in the Seventieth Congress authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and report on the claims of individual members of the Sioux Tribe of Indians. This bill is distinguishable from the next bill only in that this one deals with the claims of the individual members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians in Wisconsin, and H. R. 5230, the next bill, provides that the tribal claims go to the Court of Claims. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that a bill was introduced in the Seventy-third Congress giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction not only over the claims of the individual Indians but also of the tribe. In the report on that bill the Secretary of the Interior stated:

These additional claims have not been specifically formulated, and hence report cannot be made on their merits at this time. However, they appear to be matters for administrative examination and appropriate recommendation to Congress at a later date for a direct appropriation should the claims prove to be meritorious. Also it is not customary to refer individual Indian claims to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

The purpose of this bill is to do exactly what the Secretary of the Interior at that time suggested should be done; in other words, that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and empowered to examine and investigate these claims, because at that time the Secretary of the Interior said that there was not sufficient information available, without administrative investigation, to determine whether or not the claims should be approved.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And the Secretary of the Interior has now changed his mind?

Mr. BOILEAU. In the report he sent to the committee he stated he knew of no claim, and that was the only reason he objected, although I think there must have been some misunderstanding, because before the committee Mr. Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recommended that the committee report the bill favorably. In the report made during the Seventy-third Congress it was stated that "it is understood these Indians have other tribal claims involving timber receipts" and that various members of the tribe have individual claims growing out of timber sales, the allotting of land, and so forth. Those are the identical claims we want him to examine. If he does not find them meritorious, the claims should not be paid. If he does find them meritorious, the claims may be incorporated in a bill and reported back to the Congress.

Mr. LESINSKI demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, hear, and determine the claims of the individual members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians of the State of Wisconsin: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make all rules and regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided further, That the claims which shall be investigated under this act shall be individual claims for allotments of land and for loss of personal property, timber or logs, or improvements on allotments belonging to any such Indian. In the event the original claimant is dead, such claim or claims may be presented by his or her heirs. If any such claims shall be considered meritorious, the Secretary of the Interior shall adjust and pay the same where there is existing law therefor, and such other meritorious claims he shall report to Congress with his recommendations.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to bring to the attention of the House the reference to the Stockbridge Indians that appears in this bill. It so happens that my home town in western Massachusetts is the original home of the Stockbridge Tribe of Indians.

About 1723 we find the first record of any whites occupying western Massachusetts, but it was not until 1735, 200 years ago, that we find any definite record of the relations between the Indians then living in that territory and the whites. John Sargent, then a student in Yale College, was ordained as the first missionary to the Stockbridge or Housatonic Indians and remained with them until his death in 1749. He was succeeded by Jonathan Edwards, who had preached such strong doctrine to the whites of Northampton that the missionary authorities thought he would be of more use among the Indians further west. While in Stockbridge he wrote his celebrated treatise on the Freedom of the Will. He died soon after becoming president of Princeton University.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KENNEY. I simply wanted to make this observation, which I have no doubt the gentleman recalls: One of the greatest friends of the Stockbridge Indians was Ephraim Williams, who later founded Williams College, in the Berkshires.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no question about the accuracy of the gentleman's statement and, as a graduate of Williams College, the gentleman has a right to be proud of Ephraim Williams, as I am also equally proud of Mark Hopkins, who was born and brought up in Stockbridge and later became president of Williams College.

The relations between the Stockbridge Indians and their white neighbors were very cordial, although there were early efforts to secure land from them. The section known as "Southern Berkshire" passed into the hands of a white committee in 1724 for the sum of £450, 3 barrels of cider, and 30 quarts of rum. The chief of the tribe was Konkapot, who in 1734 was commissioned a captain by Governor Belcher.

In 1749 the Indian population of Stockbridge consisted of 53 families and over 200 individuals. If time permitted, it would be of great interest locally to trace the movements of the Stockbridge Indians from that time up to the present. Let me, however, make very brief reference to it.

Following the Revolutionary War there was more or less interchange of visits between the Indians in western Massachusetts and those in central New York. Between 1783 and 1788 the Stockbridge Indians joined the Oneidas in Madison County, N. Y., and settled a town called "New Stockbridge." In 1818 they removed to Ohio, but remained there only temporarily. Some moved to Green Bay, Wis., in 1821, and by 1829 all the members of the tribe joined them. In 1831 we are told that two townships were set up on the east side of Lake Winnebago for the use of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes.

I wish, however, to recall a few reminiscences of the period during which the Indians resided in Stockbridge, Mass., my birthplace. All historical references agree that they were well treated by our ancestors, were called a comparatively peaceful tribe, and were amenable to the religious influences of the missionaries and the prominent whites. It is interesting to note that our colonial legislature, known as the "general court", passed considerable legislation to prevent any unfair disposition of their land.

On March 9, 1784, John Bacon, Jahleel Woodbridge, and John Sargent by statute were appointed commissioners to examine such sales and only to approve them when the Indians' rights were properly cared for. It so happens that I possess a deed covering a transaction of this nature, approved by the board of commissioners. I also have in my possession a very remarkable warrant authorizing a deputy sheriff under the authority of the selectmen to notify all Indians competent to vote for representative in general court to cast their ballots on a certain date. I hope some day to be able to trace the execution of that valuable document and to find out how many Indians actually voted at town meeting.

The burial place of the Stockbridge Indians in Stockbridge is marked by a natural boulder and bears an inscription.

Possibly nothing more typical of the development of this country can be found than the life and migration of the Stockbridge Indians, inhabiting as they did the beautiful hills and valleys of western Massachusetts, wandering freely over its rugged mountains in quest of game for their subsistence. Civilization has gradually crowded them further and further away from their original haunts. Nature itself alone has remained in that region as they occupied it. But today we find it a hive of industry and its natural attractions appreciated by visitors in search of recreation during the summer months. [Applause.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF THE STOCKBRIDGE AND MUNSEE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5230, to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear claims of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask a question of the author of this bill. It seems to me this legislation is very far-reaching. At the outset it waives the statute of limitations and gives the Department here all legal and equitable rights to settle these old claims, when at this time, no doubt in many cases, the files have been stripped and perhaps the evidence on the Government side of the case is practically all gone.

If we make an exception in a case like this I see no reason why we should not be asked in the future to make a lot of other exceptions which, in effect, would indirectly, perhaps, nullify the work of the Court of Claims.

Why should not these Indian claims take the same course as all other claims and be filed in the Court of Claims under existing law?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman this is the ordinary jurisdictional bill and practically the identical language used with respect to all these Indian tribes that have come to the Congress and asked for such jurisdictional bills. The language is identical with many we have passed in the Congress during the last several sessions I have been here. There is nothing unusual about it, and so far as the language being in broad terms is concerned, it is understood that in giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction we realize that it is necessary to give the tribes some unusual rights so far as jurisdiction is concerned.

Mr. McFARLANE. What is the reason they have not filed their claims within the statutory requirement?

Mr. BOILEAU. I may state to the gentleman that practically all of these Indian tribes have had the same difficulty. They have been more or less at the mercy of Government officials. They have legitimate claims, but we find that over a period of years their business matters have been neglected and practically every tribe in the country at one time or another has come in and asked for a similar bill so that their rights may be adjudicated.

We ask that these claims be decided upon their merits and that the Government, who is the guardian of the Indians, waive the statute of limitations. Certainly, it does not seem to be reasonable that a guardian should be permitted to plead the statute of limitations as a defense to any action brought on the part of his ward. Had the Indians been considered legally competent to manage their own business affairs, the Government would not have found it necessary to become the guardian of the Indians.

Mr. McFARLANE. And this deals only with guardianship?

Mr. BOILEAU. This bill authorizes the Indians to bring suit against the United States Government for acts on the part of the United States Government as the guardian of the Indians and demand an accounting. The bill gives the tribe an opportunity to be heard upon the merits of its claims, and unless we waive the statute of limitations, the Indians would not be able to demand settlement of a just claim against the guardian.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and it is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitations, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims arising under or growing out of any treaty or agreement between the United States and the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians, or arising under or growing out of any act of Congress or Executive order in relation to Indian affairs or for the misappropriation of any of the funds, lands, or property of said tribe, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe any money or other property due, which said Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, which claims have not heretofore been determined or adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States: Provided, That claims asserted in actions brought under the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 644), may be filed under this act and shall be tried on their merits.

Sec. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit or suits be instituted or petitions be filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within 5 years from the date of the approval of this act, and such suit or suits shall make the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant. The petitions shall be verified by the attorney employed by said Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with said tribe of Indians, made and approved in accordance with existing law.

Sec. 3. Official letters, papers, documents, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney of said Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians to such treaties, papers, correspondence, and records as may be needed by the attorney in the prosecution of any suits under this act.

Sec. 4. In said suit or suits the court shall hear, examine, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians, and any payment which the United States may have made to or for the benefit of said Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians prior to the date of adjudication shall not operate as an estoppel but may be pleaded as an offset in said suit.

Sec. 5. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to any such suit any other tribe or band of Indians deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy.

Sec. 6. That upon the final determination of any suit instituted under this act, the Court of Claims shall decree such amount or amounts as it may find reasonable to be paid the attorney so employed by said Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians for the services and expenses of said attorney rendered or incurred subsequent to the date of approval of this act: Provided, That in no case shall the aggregate amounts decreed by the said Court of Claims for services be in excess of the amount or amounts stipulated in the contract of employment, or in excess of a sum equal to 10 percent of the amount of recovery against the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RELIEF OF OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS, SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2024) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain, and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I think this bill should be passed over without prejudice until we can obtain some specific information. I have asked the question of several Members as to the amount of money required to finance this bill if it is enacted into law. I have received only one answer, and that comes from the gentlewoman from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY], that possibly it might cost $5,000,000. At the present time the Committee on Pensions, of which I am a member, is holding hearing on the Smith bill, which seeks to restore the pensions of the Spanish War veterans to their status prior to the enactment of the Economy Act. If that bill is reported out favorably by the committee, it will require funds of about $50,000,000 per year. It will be necessary before that bill can be enacted into law to have the approval of the President and General Hines. We are now attempting to determine the exact cost of that bill to the Treasury. I think it would be most unwise and unsound to pass this bill now, which will call for an authorization of at least $5,000,000 and thereby prejudice this pension legislation now being considered by the committee.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that temporarily?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman agrees, I take it, that it is of paramount importance that Congress carry out the original agreement with the Spanish-American War veterans with respect to this matter, does he not?

Mr. TRUAX. I might say to the gentleman that many of us think that the Government should fulfill its obligation and contract with the World War veterans by the enactment into law of the Patman bonus bill.

Mr. WEARIN. That is beside the point.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE JUDICIAL CODE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7050) to amend the Judicial Code.

There being no objection to the bill, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that part of the Judicial Code, as amended (46 Stat. 820, sec. 184), which reads as follows:

"Terms of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania shall be held at Easton, Pa., on the first Tuesdays in June and November of each year: Provided, however, That all writs, precepts, and processes shall be returnable to the terms at Philadelphia and all court papers shall be kept in the clerk's office at Philadelphia unless otherwise specially ordered by the court, and the terms at Philadelphia shall not be terminated or affected by the terms herein provided for at Easton: Provided further, That this authority shall continue only during such time as suitable accommodations for holding court at Easton are furnished free of expense to the United States."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all of page 1 down to and including line 6, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the act of June 27, 1930, entitled 'An act to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania' (ch. 634, 46 Stat. 820) is amended to read as follows:

"Terms of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania shall be held at Easton, Pa., on the first Tuesdays in June and November of each year: Provided, however, That all writs, precepts, and processes shall be returnable to the terms at Philadelphia and all court papers shall be kept in the clerk's office at Philadelphia unless otherwise specially ordered by the court, and the terms at Philadelphia shall not be terminated or affected by the terms herein provided for at Easton."

The amendment was agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to amend the act of June 27, 1930 (ch. 634, 46 Stat. 820)."

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1414) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is a bill creating an additional district judge for the eastern district of Virginia. It seems to me that a careful survey should be made of the Federal judiciary to the end that we may have a proper redistributing of the Nation so as to redistribute the work and stop the creation of these additional judgeships.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This is the bill of our distinguished colleague, Governor MONTAGUE, of Virginia. For several years they have been trying to get a new Federal judge at Richmond, Va. Business there has been so congested that litigants who have business in the Federal court have refrained from bringing that business in the Federal court. Our colleague has been trying for a long time to get this judge. I hope my colleague will let this particular bill go by.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I have just stated, I feel it my duty to object. (In all suits brought in State courts the litigants are better off, they may thus get them decided in their lifetime—and in the Federal courts it is doubtful, in many cases, whether this can be done.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. The Supreme Court of the United States has made a careful survey of the entire situation. There is a report of the Judicial Conference dated September 1934, which goes into all the facts and circumstances in the most minute detail. The report recommends the passage of this bill and several other bills which are on the calendar. If the gentleman thinks there should be some duplication of the efforts of the Supreme Court Justices and the senior circuit court judges all over the United States and the circuit court of appeals, well and good, but I do not think that is essential.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I have read this report of our committee, and I still object.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES FOR THE SOUTHERN AND EASTERN DISTRICTS OF NEW YORK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7057, to provide for the appointment of 2 additional judges for the southern district of New York and 1 additional judge for the eastern district of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2049, to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims", approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 555).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have this bill explained as to why these broad powers are given. I will reserve the objection until the bill is explained.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced at the request of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota. It has the approval of the Department of the Interior as well as the Indian Bureau. It simply extends the time for filing certain papers in a suit pending in the Court of Claims.

Mr. McFARLANE. What is the reason those papers were not filed in the proper time?

Mr. KNUTSON. This simply extends the time. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COMPENSATION FOR CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA FOR LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2046, to compensate the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for lands set aside by treaties for their future homes and later patented to the State of Minnesota under the Swamp Land Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PATMAN). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill calls for the authorization of $223,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. Then I object.

Mr. PITTINGER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. I will withhold it, but I shall object.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, why does the gentleman object? The Government admits that they owe this sum to the Indians. Land that was ceded by the Indians to the Federal Government should have been sold and the Indians should have been reimbursed at the rate of $1.25 an acre.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. TRUAX. Would the gentleman favor the issuance of tax-exempt bonds to pay this?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $223,162.62, said amount to be credited to the trust fund of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota arising under the provisions of section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, in full payment for 178,530.10 acres of land embraced within reservations established by the treaties of March 11, 1863 (12 Stat. 1249), May 7, 1864 (13 Stat. 693), and March 19, 1867 (16 Stat. 719), for the future homes of said Indians, and later patented to the State of Minnesota under the provisions of the amendatory Swamp Land Act of March 12, 1860, without compensation to said Indians.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been objected to.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRUAX. Was Calendar No. 103 objected to?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That bill was not objected to.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I objected to that bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. I objected to that bill and then I withdrew my objection, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] renewed his objection to the bill.

Mr. PITTINGER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order; the objection comes too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will continue reading the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. This bill was objected to. I object to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman did not object at the proper time.

Mr. TRUAX. I did not have an opportunity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair put the question, "Is there objection?" and there was no objection heard. The Clerk will continue reading the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRUAX. Is a motion to recommit this bill to the committee in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be at the proper time, when the bill is read.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of order of no quorum, temporarily.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will continue reading the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to determine just and proper compensation to the respective attorneys representing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota in the prosecution of their claims against the United States for the services rendered in the prosecution of said claim, said compensation to be based upon the nature, extent, character, and value of said services, and to pay such amounts, if any, as he may find said attorneys to be entitled to receive out of the trust funds standing to the credit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill to the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion to recommit is not in writing.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, that objection is perfunctory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TRUAX moves to recommit the bill H. R. 2046 to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TRUAX) there were—ayes 30, noes 52.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. TRUAX. A point of order, Mr. Speaker; the last division showed there was not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 105, nays 234, answered "present" 1, not voting 91, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The doors were opened.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs are absent because the committee is in session. The members of the committee asked that this fact be noted.

BATTLE OF ACKIA, MISSISSIPPI

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3003, to provide for the commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Ackia, Miss., and the establishment of the Ackia Battleground National Monument, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to verify a conversation I had with the author of the bill to the effect that the amount of the bill is to be reduced from $25,000 to $15,000 and that an amendment accomplishing this result will be offered.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman read the bill?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I have read the bill and I have also read the report wherein it says Ackia has been referred to as one of the decisive battles of the world.

Instead of appropriating $15,000 for the commemoration of this battle by making it a national monument, I think it would be more appropriate to use the $15,000 for the compensation of those who had the temerity to write a report so characterizing a little battle where approximately 500 men fought the Chickasaw Indians.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes; I will withhold it and permit the gentleman to make an explanation, but I shall press my objection eventually.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand that.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not object. This is an important measure, and it has the approval of the departments and of the Bureau of the Budget.

In 1736, just before the French-Indian War, the French Crown conceived the idea of uniting the French colonies in Canada, Indiana, and Louisiana and taking possession of the entire western half of this continent. In order to do this they had either to placate or subdue all the intervening Indian tribes.

They succeeded with all except the Chickasaws. The Chickasaws had fought De Soto at practically this very point almost 200 years before. They had become the friends of the English-speaking white men, and to this day no Chickasaw Indian has ever shed the blood of an English-speaking white man, except when they were fighting on our side against Great Britain in the War of 1812.

Bienville, then Governor of the Louisiana Territory, gathered his army together and moved up the Tombigbee River to what is now Cotton Gin Port. He had another expedition come down under D'Artaguet, accompanied by Vincennes, after whom the town of Vincennes, Ind., was named. The Chickasaws met D'Artaguet and his expedition on May 20, 1736, a few days before Bienville arrived, engaged them in battle, and destroyed the expedition, killing both D'Artaguet and Vincennes.

On the 26th day of May 1736 Bienville engaged the Chickasaws in the Battle of Ackia. The French have claimed that there was an English flag inside that fort. Be that as it may, the Indians defeated the French, drove them back, and broke up forever and eternally the French attempt to consolidate their colonies and take possession of the western half of this country.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. May I ask my friend and colleague from Mississippi whether the State of Mississippi has ever appropriated any money to commemorate this decisive battle?

Mr. RANKIN. No; the State of Mississippi has not. This battle was fought nearly 100 years before Mississippi became a State. For the gentleman from Ohio to get up here and refer to this battle, which I submit settled the destiny of more territory than probably any other battle ever fought on American soil, with the possible exception of Gettysburg and probably Bunker Hill, certainly manifests a lack of information on this proposition. Read the histories of the world, the histories written by men who have studied this question, and the gentleman will find that this is regarded as one of the outstanding achievements of the world, so far as settling the destiny of territory is concerned.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I certainly will.

Mr. YOUNG. Does the gentleman from Mississippi seriously state today that the Battle of Ackia is one of the decisive battles of the world?

Mr. RANKIN. Why, certainly. The Battle of Ackia probably decided the destiny of more territory than any other battle ever fought on American soil, with the probable exception of the battles of Gettysburg and Bunker Hill.

We are asking for this small measure of recognition of the Chickasaw Indians, who fought our battles in those far-off years and who have proved themselves to be the best friends the white people of this country have ever had.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert the committee report at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

In order that the Congress and the country may understand just what is involved, I insert here the following report of the Committee on Public Lands, which includes a report made by the War Department a few years ago:

REPORT

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3003) to provide for the commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Ackia, Miss., and the establishment of the Ackia Battleground National Monument, after careful consideration of same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass the House without amendment.

A similar bill (H. R. 8718) was reported from this committee during the second session of the Seventy-third Congress.

H. R. 8718, second session, Seventy-third Congress, was approved by the Department of the Interior and also by the Director of the Budget. The original bill asked for $100,000, but at the request of the Bureau of the Budget it was reduced to $25,000, and the present bill (H. R. 3003), on which this report is made, appropriates $25,000.

History of this legislation, H. R. 3003, is as follows:

The War Department, in 1930, also recommended the passage of a bill to erect a monument on this battlefield, and it was included in a bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs but which never came to a vote for passage. Later these battlefield parks and monuments were placed under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. This measure was carefully investigated, and the bill was reported and recommended for passage in its amended form. The bill provides for the commemoration in May 1936 of the two hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Ackia.

Ackia has been referred to as one of the decisive battles of the world. It is certainly one of the most important ever fought on American soil prior to American independence. Early in the second quarter of the eighteenth century, about 1730, the French Crown conceived the idea of connecting her colonies in Canada, Indiana, and Louisiana and taking possession of all the land on this continent west of the connecting line. In order to do so it was necessary to either pacify or subdue all the Indian tribes between those settlements.

They succeeded in pacifying all the Indian tribes except the Chickasaws, who occupied the territory now comprising northern Mississippi, northwest Alabama, and southern Tennessee. The Chickasaws were perhaps the most enlightened of all the American tribes. They had progressed in government, morals, and in influence to an amazing degree. They occupied a fertile area, and their abundant crops of Indian corn were known for hundreds of miles around even as early as the expeditions of De Soto, who spent the winters of 1540 and 1541 in their territory.

Trouble had arisen between the French in southern Mississippi and Louisiana and the Natchez Indians, which resulted in the Natchez Tribe leaving their territory and making their homes with the Chickasaws. The French gave as one of their reasons for invading the Chickasaws' territory that of punishing the Natchez Indians for former depredations.

Having succeeded in pacifying all the Indian tribes between their various colonies except the Chickasaws, an expedition from Fort Vincennes, now in the State of Indiana, was sent out under the leadership of D'Artaguet, Lieutenant Governor of the Mississippi Territory, accompanied by Vincennes, to descend the Mississippi River and debark at a point opposite the Chickasaws' territory and proceed overland to Ackia, Chickasaws' capital, and there join the forces of Bienville for the attack on the Chickasaws.

Bienville, the Governor of the Mississippi Territory, with a large expedition ascended the Tombigbee River to what was later known as "Cotton Gin Port", where he debarked and marched against Ackia. The Chickasaws met D'Artaguet and his expedition a few days before Bienville arrived, engaged them in battle and overcame and destroyed the expedition, killing both D'Artaguet and Vincennes.

On the 26th of May 1736, Bienville engaged the Chickasaws in the Battle of Ackia. The battle raged all day long and finally resulted in a victory for the Chickasaws. Bienville retreated and abandoned the expedition. This ended the attempt of the French to connect their colonies and take possession of the western half of this continent.

Bienville, in his report on the battle, said there was an English flag inside the fort and strictly intimates, if he does not say, that the English were aiding the Indians in the fight. Whether that is true or not, we do know that the Chickasaws never shed the blood of English-speaking white men. They remained true and loyal to the Americans after the Revolution. In 1815 they opened up their territory for the passage of Jackson's army to New Orleans and many of their brave men joined the American colors and followed Jackson until the close of the war. When the time came for the United States to take over their territory they submitted to the will of the "Great White Father" in Washington, relinquished their territory, and moved away to their new home in the West.

Bienville, probably the greatest colonizer ever sent from the Old World to the New, remained Governor of the Louisiana-Mississippi Territory until his struggling colony was well established and on its way toward prosperity and independence.

It is proposed to make this marker a monument to the valor of both the Chickasaws and the French, as was done in honoring Wolfe and Montcalm in the erection of a monument to them on the Plains of Abraham.

When this matter was brought before the Military Affairs Committee, the War Department sent Lt. Col. H. L. Landers to investigate the history of this battlefield and make a report. He did so, and we insert at this point that part of his report which relates to the Battle of Ackia.

"HISTORY OF THE CAMPAIGN OF THE FRENCH AGAINST THE CHICKASAWS IN 1736"

"The progress of civilization in the valley of the Mississippi blossomed into a magnificent growth during the first half of the eighteenth century, under the leadership of two notable sons of Charles Le Moyne, one of the grand seigniors of La Nouvelle France, that vast domain which encompassed all the lands that drain into the St. Lawrence. The names of Pierre Le Moyne, Sieur de Iberville, and Jean Baptiste Le Moyne, Sieur de Bienville, bring to mind an empire in the Mississippi Valley of such grandeur that its superiority in magnitude and wealth stands unchallenged in our country. To follow the footsteps of these versatile adventures, explorers, legislators, and administrators from their home in Montreal through New France and later into the basin of the great river is to engage in a venture fraught with the heroic lust of conquest and the patriotic desire to promote the political and commercial interests of one's own government. For more than 40 years did one member of this family fight, conquer, govern, and build; and no name in the early history of our country is more widely and everlastingly wrought into its soil than is that of Bienville. From Fort Toulouse to Fort Tombecbe in Alabama, thence down to the settlements established at Mobile, Biloxi, New Orleans, Natchez, and Natchitoches, the fame of this soldier of fortune and crusader for France warms the heart with pride that it was such men as he who created this Nation.

"The prize of empire in America was eagerly sought by three great countries of Europe, and their many wars at home were reflected and reenacted in the new America. There was almost perpetual strife and conflict in some portions of the wide and deep savannas and broad forests stretching from the Floridas to Texas, for it was in this region that the overseas possessions of England, France, and Spain met or overlapped. Warfare made up in bitterness and sanguinarity what it lacked in numbers of white troops engaged. Alliances, more frequently unholy than holy, were made with the aboriginal occupants of the soil, for without the accretion of such allies an army of inferior strength would suffer defeat. Slaves were armed, and these black warriors occasionally gave feeble aid in the contest. They did learn the lust of slaughter, which sometimes was directed in wild outbreaks against their masters.

"The prosperity of the transplanted colonists depended upon food and trade. Those nearest the frontiers of the red man found their existence interwoven with his. Close trade relations were followed by close alliances for war. Additional strength in war was sought from the red man, later to be dispossessed of his heritage by his white ally. Indeed, this dependence upon the Indians reached a most unfortunate climax during the second war with Great Britain, when Tecumseh and the Prophet were used by that nation to build a barrier of carnage against the United States from the Lakes to the Gulf.

"Nature endowed the Indian with many noble qualities. In their own environments, before the coming of the whites, the human equation of races and individuals made some Indians better, some worse. With the coming of pale-faced peoples from Europe, the simple minds of these forest-and-stream people were subjected to strains, the results of which were evident in their increased savagery, while the causations remained obscure. Difficult enough the problem would have been had but one nation of whites imposed its civilization, business ethics, morality, and religion upon the red nations, but these difficulties were intensified many times when three European nations sought to dominate the same, or contiguous, nations of aborigines.

"The simple mind of the red man was observant of more than it could understand. He learned the artifices of diplomacy, suspicion, broken promises, and treachery. His mind could not cleave a way through the maze set up by conflicting demands of nations of whites, each bidding, in deadly rivalry with the others, for his temporary friendship and alliance. He had not the mental faculty to judge which group of whites offered the most favorable proposition, nor the capacity to choose it had he known. He could not understand, and soon his lack of comprehension led him to distrust, to become vengeful; then his latent qualities for violence led him into orgies of slaughter to sicken the world. The Indian, in war, was actuated by emotional violence to commit deeds of barbarity that were repugnant to the civilized mind. It is true that the whites, in retaliation, sometimes committed equally diabolical acts, with the result that the history of Indian warfare in our country is a motley picture of heroism and savagery, wanton cruelty with but rare compassion for the wounded, a lust to kill that not only exterminates life, but horribly mutilates the body from which the soul has fled.

"FRENCH SETTLEMENTS IN AMERICA"

"The discoveries made by Columbus in the New World became known throughout Europe during the last years of the fifteenth century, and within a brief period thereafter the eastern coast line of the new continent, from far north down to the Equator, was explored by the hardy adventurers of England and Spain. The participation of the French Government in the partition of this new empire was belated, restricting its activities, when it did seek some of this territory, to the far north, where its settlements along the St. Lawrence River and in Acadia, in the seventeenth century, were given the name La Nouvelle France. New France acquired a population of 25,000 inhabitants before La Louisiana, the name applied to the vast empire drained by the Mississippi, had begun to outgrow the tribulations attendant upon the establishment of new settlements. In 1539 the Spaniard, De Soto, began a tour of exploration that lasted 3 years, which for venturesome hardihood stands unrivaled in the history of America. Landing at Tampa Bay at the head of a large army, he wintered in 1539-40 at Apalachen. In the spring he started on his great voyage of discovery, passing from Florida to the Carolinas by way of the Savannah River, thence back to the Mobile River where he ruthlessly killed thousands of the aboriginal inhabitants at Mauvilia, and from there across the Mississippi into Arkansas and Oklahoma, thence back to the Mississippi where in 1542 he died. For more than a century following the explorations of De Soto no serious attempt was made to investigate the middle and upper portions of the Mississippi Valley until Frontenac, Governor of New France, in 1673 sent the trader Joliet and the missionary Marquette westward to the headwaters of the Mississippi to explore its course and outlet. These voyagers descended this stream to the mouth of the Arkansas, but feared to continue further lest they fall into the hands of the Spaniards. Nine years later, in 1682, La Salle crossed from the St. Lawrence to the Mississippi and descended that river to its mouth. In 1687 he lost his life in an attempt to plant a French colony on its borders.

"During the war of the Palatinate, Louis XIV showed little desire to develop La Salle's scheme to plant a colony near the mouth of the Mississippi, but after the treaty of Ryswick was signed in 1697, the French Government determined to send an expedition to the Gulf of Mexico to forestall the English, who were reported about to take possession of the mouth of that river. The command of this expedition was entrusted to Iberville, who had already established his fame as a military leader of great energy. In January of 1699, Iberville's fleet appeared before the harbor of Pensacola, which had been fortified by Spain a few months previous, and demanded admission. The request was refused and the expedition proceeded to what is now Dauphin Island, at the mouth of Mobile Bay, where it tarried a short time. From thence the voyagers continued their way westward, exploring the outlets and main body of the Mississippi, and finally turning back to a bay on the eastern extremity of which a settlement was established and named Biloxi, from the Indians dwelling nearby.

"THE BEGINNING OF THE PROVINCE OF LOUISIANA"

"It was the intention of Iberville to fix the principal establishment of the colony at this point, and a fort with four bastions was completed in May of the same year. The armament of the fort, when the census of 1704 was taken, consisted of 16 iron cannon of 12 and 8 pounds caliber. With the completion of the fort, Iberville returned to France, leaving Sauvole and Bienville, the latter 19 years of age, in charge of the colony.

"Upon Iberville's return to the Province in January 1700 he brought a commission appointing Sauvole governor of the colony. Early that year Iberville ascended the Mississippi as far as the Natchez settlement, and there decided upon a location which he viewed as most suitable for the capital of the new Province. He selected a site for a town, to which he gave the name of La Ville de Rosalie aux Natchez, and then returned to the fort at Biloxi. Iberville once more returned to France, toward the last of May 1700, leaving Sauvole to govern the Province, assisted by Bienville. Sauvole fell a victim to an epidemic of fever on August 21, 1701, and Bienville took control of the colony as acting governor, removing from a fort in the Mississippi which he had occupied to the capital at Biloxi. Parties of the Choctaw and Mobile Indians came to visit him a few days after his arrival, their object being to solicit his aid against the Chickasaws. Bienville considered his colony too weak to become embroiled in the quarrels of the Indian tribes nearby and declined to form an alliance, but instead sent an officer and a few Canadians to afford the Choctaws his good offices as mediator.

"In December of 1701 Iberville arrived with supplies and reinforcements of troops and, in pursuance of the king's instructions, moved the headquarters of the colony to the western bank of the Mobile River the following year, making settlements near the present city of Mobile and on Dauphin Island. Later, in the same year, Iberville again returned to France with the fleet, leaving Bienville in control of the Province as governor.

"The situation which arose in Europe following the death, in 1700, of Charles II of Spain, without issue, resulted in another period of prolonged hostilities, which became known as the "War of the Spanish Succession" (1703-13). The war areas in America were much more extensive than were those in Europe, despite the fact that most of the European nations were embroiled. In the southern part of America, the West Indies, the frontiers of the Carolinas, Florida, and Louisiana, and in the northern part the New England border, Acadia, Newfoundland, and Hudson Bay were the scenes of conflict. The English in the Carolinas sent emissaries to prevail upon the Chickasaws to send war chiefs among the Indians in the vicinity of the French settlements on the Gulf, to induce them to form an alliance with England. The English commandant of the fort at Albany prevailed upon the Iroquois to attack the frontier settlers in Canada. The historian Martin says, referring to one of the phases of the prolonged Indian warfare which ensued, "The Choctaws had scarcely returned home when their country was invaded by 2,000 Cherokees, commanded by an English officer from Carolina. Several of their villages were destroyed and 300 of their women and children led away into slavery."

"The success of the settlement attempted in Louisiana not having answered the hopes of the court of France, it was determined to make a considerable change in the government of the colony. Iberville fell a victim to yellow fever and died at Habana July 9, 1706, and De Muys, an officer who had served with distinction in Canada, was appointed Governor of Louisiana. The death of this official occurred during the passage to his new station. About this time Diron D'Artaguet was sent to the Province as commissary general, with instructions to inquire into the conduct of the former administrators of the colony, and to make such changes as he deemed advisable. As the settlement near the fort on the Mobile suffered from the overflow of that river, he ordered this place to be abandoned and a new fort built.

"LOUISIANA TURNED OVER TO ANTOINE CROZAT

"D'Artaguet returned to France in 1711, convinced that the slow progress of the colony could not be accelerated by Bienville with the feeble means at his command. Food supplies failed to mature, especially wheat, the raising of which was attempted a number of years. Women to make homes in this pioneer country were few in number. Many of the French soldiers and of the voyagers from Canada allied themselves with the Indian women and lost much of their natural ambition. Year after year famine stalked the colony and disease took toll of its numbers, until finally the King decided to rid himself of the tax on his purse of maintaining this puny offspring of the state. Accordingly, the Crown granted a charter dated September 14, 1712, to Antoine Crozat, a merchant, giving him the exclusive right to engage in commerce in the Province for a term of 15 years. At this period there were, in Louisiana, 2 companies of infantry of 50 men each, and 75 Canadian volunteers in the King's pay. The rest of the population consisted of 28 families and 20 Negroes. These, with the King's officers and clergy, made an aggregate of about 380 persons. This small number of individuals was dispersed throughout a vast extent of territory, divided by the sea, by lakes, and by wide rivers. Five forts had been erected for their protection—at Mobile, Dauphine Island, Biloxi, Ship Island, and in the Mississippi. The population of La Nouvelle France and Acadia reached 25,000 at this time.

"The ship carrying Crozat and Duclos, the new commissary general, arrived at Habana, in May 1713, and on the 5th of the following month anchored at Port Dauphine. A third person of importance was aboard, Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac, who had been notified several years previous of his appointment as Governor of this Province, and only now succeeded in joining. This latter officer had served with distinction in Canada, having established the post of Detroit in 1701, which he commanded for 3 years. His arrival, in company with the owner of the concessions and his chief business investigator, was at an unfortunate time. In the previous year the harvest of corn and other grains failed throughout the Province, and Bienville had been obliged to send the entire garrison into the woods 30 leagues to seek a living among the Indians by hunting.

"After surveying conditions in the colony for 4 months, Duclos wrote from Fort Louis on October 9 to Pontchartrain, Minister of Marine and Colonies, declaring 'that the country is not now sufficiently populated or considerable enough, since there are now not more than 35, both at Fort Louis and on Dauphine Island, to need a governor.' 'So I think,' he continued, 'that a commandant would be sufficient here. M. Bienville, the King's lieutenant, who has been commandant here for a long time, has all the qualities and all the knowledge necessary for him to be continued in this post. He possesses more than any other person in the world the art of governing the Indians and doing what he wishes with them by means of the long acquaintance that he has with them, and because of the fact that he understands and speaks their language perfectly.' This tribute to Bienville was deserved at the time, and as additional decades passed his value to the province increased to an immeasurable degree. His method of handling the Indians was practical and efficient. He first applied himself to becoming acquainted with the most powerful Indian nations and the ones that could be the most useful, or do the greatest harm to the colony. He took care to send young men to them to learn their language and to inform him of every happening. He endeavored to satisfy their warlike cravings by encouraging embroilments between his nearby allies and the more distant hostile tribes. His payments for services rendered by his allies were in keeping with his promises.

"When peace was concluded in 1713 by the treaty of Utrecht, the British in Carolina became energetic in extending their trade among the Indian nations on their frontiers. The Choctaws, whose towns were near Mobile, were generally favorably disposed to their neighbors, the French. North of the Choctaws were the Chickasaws, whose towns were on the ridges dividing the waters of the Tombigbee from those of the Tallahatchie. This tribe was closely allied with the Cherokees, and both came under the influence of British traders from the Carolinas, who passed through the lands of the Alibamons to reach the Chickasaws. These traders erected storehouses as far as the Natchez and Yazous. The Chickasaws from time to time made treaties with the French, but none of any endurance. They seemed better satisfied with the terms which they made with the English settlers.

"In execution of the King's order Bienville, in 1714, assumed command of all the establishments on the Mississippi and the rivers flowing into it. As yet there was but one small fort on the Mississippi, located not far from the sea. He was instructed to erect two others, one among the Natchez and the other on the Wabash. The connection of Louisiana with Canada was a favorite project at court, and it had been very strongly recommended to both colonial governments. In execution of this purpose Bienville ascended the Mississippi to confer with the Natchez Indians, and in June 1714 a fort was built on the spot which Iberville had chosen for a town, and named Fort Rosalie. In the same year Fort Toulouse was built in the country of the upper Creeks, near the confluence of the Coosa and Tallapoosa Rivers, and a depot established where furs were bought from the Indians and floated down the Alabama River to Mobile.

"De L'Epinay was appointed Governor of the Province on March 3, 1716, to succeed Cadillac, and served for a period of about 11 months. He arrived in Mobile Bay on March 9, 1717, accompanied by M. Hubert, the new commissary general. De L'Epinay soon became engaged in dissensions with Bienville, just as Cadillac had done before him, both being jealous of the superior position held by Bienville in the affections of the settlers and Indians. After about 5 years of operation Crozat, disappointed in the expectations he had entertained, surrendered his charter to the King on the 23d day of August 1717. In referring to this period in the life of the struggling settlements, Martin says that neither the commerce nor agriculture of the colony was increased. The troops sent out by the King and the colonists who came from France did not swell its population to more than 700 persons.

"THE WESTERN CO. ACQUIRES CONTROL OF LOUISIANA

"A few days after the Crown accepted the surrender of Crozat's charter a new corporation, styled the "Western Co.", controlled largely by John Law, succeeded to its privileges. This company was granted the exclusive commerce of Louisiana for 25 years. On February 9, 1718, three vessels of the Western Co. arrived at Dauphine Island, bringing orders for the recall of De L'Epinay and the appointment of Bienville to succeed him. It was with heartfelt satisfaction that the troops and settlers saw the chief command of Louisiana once more restored to their well-beloved chief, who, after almost 20 years spent in the colony, knew more of its wants and resources than did any other individual. In 1718 Bienville visited the banks of the Mississippi to select a spot for the principal settlement of the Province, and the site on which New Orleans now stands was designated. He continued as Governor for 8 years, when in 1726 he was again replaced, this time by Perier, sent over from France by the company.

"The Western Co. was no more successful in developing the colony as a speculative enterprise than Crozat had been. Heavy financial losses were suffered, and the scandals and hardships which followed upon the failure of Law's bank brought the enterprise to a ruinous termination. Added to the financial burdens was the constant menace of hostile Indians and the terrible inroads they made upon the population. One of their most diabolical orgies of slaughter occurred on the 28th of November 1729, when the Natchez Indians, under pretext of trade and friendly greetings with the settlers who had established a town in their midst, drew their knives and guns upon an unsuspecting populace and massacred 138 men, 35 women, and 56 children. A large number of women, children, and blacks were carried off into slavery. In retaliation for this barbarous act French troops drove the Natchez from their country. Some found shelter west of the Mississippi, while others sought refuge with the Chickasaws. The charter of the trading company was returned to the King in 1732.

Its further prolongation seemed to offer no hope for success in consummating the company's plans. Perier proved a feeble administrator in dealing with the Choctaw and Natchez Indians, and they were constantly breaking promises and engaging in hostile acts. During the 14 years that the Western Co. controlled the Province of Louisiana the white population increased from 700 to upward of 6,000, and the blacks from 20 to 2,000.

"THE KING AND BIENVILLE AGAIN IN CONTROL

"The sadly harassed settlers and garrisons welcomed once more their tried and able leader when again, in 1733, the governorship was restored to his hands. He found so much hostility on the part of some of the Indians that drastic action was necessary. The Chickasaws belonged entirely to the English and the Choctaws were fast drifting the same way. The Natchez, who had found refuge among the Chickasaws, now resumed their predatory warfare on the distant settlements of the colony, and together with the Chickasaws greatly obstructed communication by the Mississippi to the Illinois, the Wabash, and to Canada. As the Province could enjoy no tranquillity as long as these outrages went unchallenged, Bienville sent an officer to the principal village of the Chickasaws to demand the surrender of the domiciled Natchez to the French Government. This emissary was informed that the Natchez could not be given up, as they had been received by the Chickasaws and now formed a part of that nation. When Bienville learned of the attitude of the Chickasaw Nation, he decided that it was time to punish the Natchez and to make the Chickasaws understand that they could no longer obstruct the free passage of the French from the mouth of the Mississippi to the Great Lakes.

"To insure the success of any campaign conducted against the Chickasaws, it was necessary to have the Choctaws as allies, as the total strength of the French troops in the Province was only 13 companies of from 35 to 40 men each. Of these, 3 companies were at the Illinois, 1 at Natchez, 1 at Natchitoches, 4 at New Orleans, 1 at the mouth of the Mississippi, and 3 at Mobile, from which was sent a detachment of 30 men to the Alibamons at Fort Toulouse. Only recently four English traders had been introduced into the nation by two chiefs of prominence, Red Shoe and Alibamon Mingo, either of whom would sell his warriors to English or French, dependent upon which paid last. The great chief of the Choctaws did not countenance these dishonorable practices on the part of his underlings, but both Red Shoe and Alibamon Mingo had too strong a following for the great chief to attempt forceful measures in dealing with them. In writing to the ministry on February 10, 1736, Bienville said that all his letters to the Government about the Choctaw Nation for 2 years "appear so full of contradictions that when one compares the different plans that I have set forth in them either to terminate the war with the Chickasaws or to frustrate the measures that the English are taking to win over our nations, one might with some appearance of reason charge me with instability or with irresolution." The difficulty was far less attributable to Bienville than to the wily cunning and treachery of many of the chiefs of the Choctaws.

"All these circumstances made Bienville apprehensive lest the Choctaws would in the end succumb to the enticing propositions coming from the English, particularly those under the aggressive leader Oglethorpe of Georgia, and he resolved to march against the Chickasaws as soon as the Tombigbee River, which led to their country, could be navigated. By this route the expedition would arrive within 20 leagues of the Chickasaws without being very much fatigued. In the latter part of 1735 Bienville went to Mobile to perfect his plans and establish his base at that port. He laid his plans before the Choctaw chiefs who came to see him in Mobile, and when they promised to support him in this expedition he dispatched a pirogue in the month of December to Pierre D'Artaguet at Fort Chartres, directing him to assemble all the forces of the Illinois and lead them against the Chickasaws at the end of the following March. D'Artaguet was ordered to reach the Prud'homme Bluffs on the 10th or 15th of March. At the same time it was determined to proceed with the establishment of an intermediate base in the land of the Tuscaloosas, a project which Bienville had given thought to for some time, and Captain De Lusser was sent with men and supplies to organize this depot.

"Bienville returned to New Orleans the early part of 1736 to carry forward preparations for the campaign. Before leaving Mobile he had decided that it would be necessary to postpone navigation of the Mobile and Tombigbee Rivers from February to April, before which date there would not be sufficient high water to insure navigation of the streams. Immediately on his return to New Orleans, therefore, he dispatched a second courier to D'Artaguet to order him to delay his departure from the Illinois until the end of April. The only information Bienville possessed of the situation of the enemy which he proposed to attack was that the Chickasaws were located in a rather large plain, divided into seven villages, of which five had a stockade fort and all had several fortified cabins. The Natchez lived in two small villages, of which the smaller had no fort and was in the middle of the plain, and the other, which had a good fort, was at one extremity of the eastern side.

"Preparations went on apace both at Mobile and New Orleans to make ready the boats, wagons, provisions, and guns necessary for a campaign covering so much ground; and Bienville found the days slipping by far too rapidly, for, should additional delay occur in the execution of his plans, the upper reaches of the Tombigbee would not be navigable. Under the most favorable circumstances the scheme of operations was a bold one, involving the passage of D'Artaguet's force over 450 miles of river and land and Bienville's over 540 miles, with no intercommunication between the two parties.

"Bienville withdrew from the garrisons of the Natchez, Natchitoches, and the Balise all the officers and soldiers that could be spared without stripping these posts too much. He formed a company of volunteers of young men and voyagers who were then at New Orleans and another company of militia from the citizens who were not married and had them set out for Mobile. He likewise made the troops leave for the same destination as fast as the boats were ready, and finally, on the 4th day of March, he himself left New Orleans for Mobile, leaving behind four French companies which he ordered De Noyan to lead to Mobile as soon as the rest of the boats were ready. These troops met adverse winds, and it was not until the 22d of the month that they reached Mobile. A large force of bakers was dispatched through the Choctaw country to the new fort named Tombecbee, which De Lusser was then engaged in building on the west bank of the Tombigbee River, about a half mile north of the present village of Epes. This was not the site originally proposed by Bienville for the establishment of an advanced depot, but was 15 leagues farther upstream. The new position lay between the two roads which the English took to go to the Choctaw villages, at a distance of 1 day's journey from the easternmost villages.

"The army which accompanied Bienville on this campaign consisted of a company of grenadiers made up of 45 French and Swiss, 8 companies of French troops, each having a strength of 30 or 31 men, a Swiss company of 130, a company of militia from New Orleans 45 strong, and another of 40 men from Mobile, and a company of 42 volunteers and voyagers, the total being 544 men exclusive of officers. They left Mobile on the 1st of April, covering the 300 miles of winding rivers and arriving at Fort Tombecbee on the 23d of the month. Delay had been occasioned by the unexpected current in the rivers and continual rains. While waiting for the Choctaw chiefs who were to join him at Tombecbee, Bienville selected a garrison to be left at the post, organized a company of grenadiers, and formed a company of 45 armed Negroes to which he assigned free Negroes as officers. On the evening of the 26th of April the first Choctaw chiefs arrived, Alibamon Mingo being one of the number. When Bienville received these chiefs the following morning they all began their speeches with great protestations of attachment to the French and finished by asking for the ammunition, vermilion, and provisions which they claimed to have been promised them. Bienville replied that powder, bullets, and vermilion would be supplied, but that he had warned them, when first he spoke of going to war, that they would have to bring their own provisions, as he could carry only sufficient for the French.

"On the 28th of April the great chief of the Choctaws appeared with several others, among whom was Red Shoe, and the former spoke in the same terms of affection as had those who preceded him. Bienville knew, however, that after his departure from New Orleans, Red Shoe had burned, under the cannon of the fort, the cabins of the Offogoulas who were refugees there, but he preferred to ignore this incident, not judging the time appropriate for reproaching him. At the end of his speech the great chief spoke of the rumor that had circulated in the Choctaw Nation of a pretended French plot to betray them to the Chickasaws. Color was lent to this rumor by the report of scouts who had seen, in the direction of the north, a great French path. Bienville told him of the orders sent to D'Artaguet to descend the Mississippi with the nations of the north and join him in a combined attack on the Chickasaws, and that it was his party which had made this great path. It was apparent that D'Artaguet had not received the second messenger sent to delay his march. The great chief seemed reassured by this explanation, and when he asked for provisions Bienville gave him the same reply that he had made to other chiefs the preceding day.

"On the 30th of April Bienville assembled a council of war which condemned to death a sergeant and a soldier of Lusser's company who were guilty of conspiring against the lives of the officers of the post and plotting desertion. The Swiss company also held a council and condemned two of their soldiers who were accomplices of the sergeant. By the 1st of May all the Choctaw chiefs had arrived, and it was agreed that 14 days hence they were to lead their warriors to the Octibia, a little river that formed the frontier between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations 40 leagues above Fort Tombecbee. That night nearly all the chiefs set out for their villages. The next day was spent in completing the unloading of the boats, the distribution of provisions, and arranging the many details necessary for the departure.

"On the 3d of May, Bienville left Fort Tombigbee, and making progress more rapidly than he had expected, reached the Octibia on the 14th. Here 2 days were spent drying provisions, and on the 17th word was received that the Choctaws were on their way. In the course of the next few days parties of warriors made their appearance, all of whom had been retarded almost to the point of discouragement by the rains that had fallen for 9 consecutive days. On the 19th Bienville continued his ascent of the Tombigbee, leaving word for all incoming warriors that they were to join the French at the old portage, farther upstream. On the 22d the new portage was reached, beyond which the boats could not pass, and here Bienville disembarked his command and effected a junction with his Indian allies, 9 leagues from the Chickasaw villages.

"On the 23d at daybreak Bienville had a number of posts cut and outlined a small fort which was erected at once for the defense of the boats. A detachment of 20 men was selected from the several companies to remain as a garrison, together with the guard of the storehouse, the captains of the boats and some who were sick. Here Bienville had time to notice, as he looked at all the Choctaws assembled together, that they had not come in such great numbers as they had said and that there were scarcely more than 600 warriors.

"On the 24th of May the allied forces set out from the portage in afternoon, carrying in the column of troops 12 days' provisions for the French. Two leagues were made before camp was pitched. On the 25th, in a distance of 5 short leagues, the army passed through three deep ravines where there was water waist deep. That night camp was made on the edge of a prairie at 2 leagues from the nearest Chickasaw villages, in a country that Bienville speaks of as the 'most beautiful in the world.'

"Early on the morning of the 26th Bienville set out, and at the first halt the great chief came to ask what village would be attacked first. Bienville replied that he had orders from the king to go first against the Natchez, as they were the authors of the war. The great chief was very desirous of attacking Chukafalaya, as that village would be encountered first on the route of march, and it was the nearest to the Choctaws. It made more trouble than did all the others, and it was there he had lost his son and his uncle. The most important reason of all, however, was that a large supply of provisions would be found there, without which the Choctaws would no longer be able to continue the campaign, having consumed all the food which they brought with them. In spite of the eagerness of other chiefs to support this proposal, Bienville persisted in his determination to go against the Natchez first, and gave his promise that the Natchez once defeated, he would return to attack the town of Chukafalaya. Apparently the Choctaws agreed to this plan, but they deliberately failed to execute it. Their guides conducted the army by a circuitous path through the forest as if to lead it to the great prairie where the main part of the Chickasaw and Natchez villages was, and finally led it to a prairie of approximately a league in circumference, in the middle of which were seen three small villages situated in a triangle on the crest of a hill, at the foot of which ran an almost dry stream. This small prairie was about a league distant from the large one and separated from it by a wood.

"A halt was made at noon during which the chiefs conferred. The Choctaws were determined to attack these villages first; they would not pass them by, and many of the French officers joined with the Choctaws in this demand. Finally Bienville gave a reluctant consent, demanding from the chiefs in return a promise that they would follow him against the Natchez after taking these three villages. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon he gave the command to the assaulting party, under Chevalier de Noyan, to attack. De Noyan's party comprised the company of grenadiers of 50 men, a detachment of 15 men from each of the 8 French companies, 60 Swiss, and 45 men of the volunteers and militia, a total of 275 whites.

"During the halt, which was made at a distance of a good rifle shot from the villages, the Choctaws warned Bienville that aid from the villages of the great prairie had appeared and that there were many warriors. It was seen that some English were present in the three Chickasaw villages, and upon the arrival of the French an English flag had been raised in one of these villages. Bienville directed De Noyan to avoid firing on this village and to give the English therein an opportunity to retire if they wished. He then ordered the first attack to be made on the village opposite to that which showed the English flag.

"When these arrangements had been made, toward 3 o'clock in the afternoon Chevalier de Noyan's command set out with drums beating and flags flying, and reached the hill under the protection of several mantlets, which, unfortunately, were not in use long, because the Negroes who were to carry them to a certain place, having had one of their men killed and another wounded, threw them down and ran away. On entering the village called Ackia, the head of the column and the grenadiers were exposed to the enemy fire and were very badly handled. Chevalier de Contrecoeur and a number of soldiers were killed at this time and many others wounded. However, De Noyan captured and burned the first three fortified cabins and several small ones that defended them, but when the time came to cross from that village to the others, he perceived that he had almost no one with him except the officers of the units at the head of the column, a few grenadiers, and about a dozen volunteers.

"The death of Monsieur de Lusser, as well as the loss of a sergeant of grenadiers and a small part of his men while attempting to cross to another village, caused the troops to become terrified. The soldiers crowded behind the cabins that had been captured and their officers were unable to draw them away. This resulted in the handful of men in the advance being unsupported, and the officers at their head were almost all disabled. The Chevalier de Noyan, M. D'Auville, captain of the grenadiers, the Sieurs de Ville, de Grondel, and de Montbrun were wounded. It was in vain that Chevalier de Noyan, wishing to maintain his ground, sent Sieur de St. Juzan, his adjutant, to rally the panicky soldiers. This officer was killed near them and only succeeded by his death in increasing their terror.

"Finally the wound of De Noyan obliged him to retire behind a cabin. He sent a messenger to Bienville, telling him of the grievous state in which he found himself, and gave warning that if aid were not sent at once or a retreat sounded, the rest of the officers of his detachment would soon meet the fate of those who headed the column. Already 60 or 70 men had been killed or wounded. On receipt of this information, and being able to see to some extent what was going on, Bienville sent M. de Beauchamps with 80 men to cover the retreat and carry away the dead and wounded. When this supporting force arrived at the place of attack scarcely any soldiers were found. The officers, abandoned by their men, still held together at the cabin nearest the fort. De Beauchamps made them retire and the entire party returned to camp in good order, the Chickasaws and English not venturing to come out of the fort to attack. The Choctaws, who up to this time had remained under cover of the slope of the hill, awaiting developments in the fight, now arose and fired some shots. Their losses were 27 men killed or wounded, and this eventually contributed no little to disgust them.

"Bienville, in his report to the King, gave a description of the fortifications prepared by the Chickasaws, under the direction of the English. After having surrounded their cabins with several rows of large piles, they dug out the earth within in order to sink down up to their shoulders, and fire through loopholes which were made almost on a level with the ground. But they had a still greater advantage from the natural situation of their cabins, which were separated from each other and permitted a cross fire on any attacking force. The covering of these cabins was a mortar of earth and wood, proof against fire-arrows and grenades, and of such construction that only a bomb could injure them. As the French had neither cannon nor mortars, and had already suffered material losses, Bienville decided to abandon further operations and withdraw.

"The next morning, May 27, litters were made to carry the wounded, and an hour after noon the French and their allies marched away in two columns, as they had come. The soldiers, fatigued and burdened with their baggage, had great difficulty in carrying the wounded, and when a halt was made at night only a league and a half had been covered. This slow march displeased the Choctaws, and Red Shoe and other chiefs did all in their power to induce their people to abandon the French. Bienville put forth every exertion to break up this plot and persuade the Indians to have some regard for their promises. He urged them not to abandon the people who were their friends and had done so much for them. The reply of the great chief was that the wounded retarded the march too much, upon which Bienville proposed that the wounded be carried by his warriors. After much objection this was agreed to and the column made better progress.

"On the 29th of May the upper portage was reached, from which Bienville had set forth 5 days before. The French reembarked the same day and found the river so low that it was only with the greatest difficulty they were able to proceed downstream. Fort Tombecbee was reached on the 2d of June. Monsieur de Berthet, in command of a garrison of 30 French and 20 Swiss, was left there, with provisions to last a year, and some merchandise to establish a trading post. Bienville left with him plans for a fort, with orders to expedite its construction. On the 3d he departed from Fort Tombecbee, arriving at the Tomes on the 7th, where he learned from an Indian the first news of the disaster which had happened to D'Artaguet. This news was confirmed upon his arrival at Mobile the following day.

"Bienville closed his report with the following comments: 'Monseigneur will have seen by this recital of a campaign the most difficult in the world that in the plan, in the execution, and in the retreat I used all the means imaginable, and he will also have noticed that after having suffered delay in the preparations that I could not have anticipated I could still less foresee the cowardice of the troops that I had under my command. It is true that when one considers the pitiful recruits of blackguards that are sent here one ought never to flatter himself that he can make soldiers of them. The unfortunate thing is to be obliged with such troops to compromise the glory of the nation and to expose officers to the necessity of getting themselves killed or of dishonoring themselves. The recruits who came by the Gironde are even worse than the ones preceding them. There are only one or two men more than 5 feet in height. The rest are under 4 feet 10 inches. As to their ideals I can add that of their number of 52 more than half have already passed through the courts for theft. In brief, they are useless mouths living on the provisions of the colony which will derive no service from them. The retreat which I have had carried out without any loss is the only thing with which I am content, since I brought back a good number of honest men who are to be saved for another occasion.'

"D'ARTAGUETTE LEADS AN ARMY FROM THE ILLINOIS TO THE CHICKASAW TOWNS

"The orders sent to D'Artaguet by Bienville to join him in the campaign against the Chickasaws directed the former to take what troops he could from his garrison, and gather together the Illinois Indians and the inhabitants of the district. These forces were assembled at Fort Chartres, from which post the expedition departed on the 22d of February. D'Artaguet's command comprised 8 officers and 27 soldiers, 110 militia, 38 Iroquois, 28 Arkansas, 100 Illinois, and 160 Miami, making a total of 145 French and 326 Indians. The officer left in command at the Illinois during D'Artaguet's absence was given orders to assemble a group of 180 Illinois Indians and lead them to Ecors a Prud'homme, where D'Artaguet would wait for them. This place was reached on the 28th of February and a small palisade fort built. A small detachment was left here as guard upon the departure of the army for the Chickasaw country the 5th of the following month.

"When D'Artaguet was about 18 leagues from the Chickasaw village, he sent a reconnoitering group of Indians to learn the position of their forts, the number of their cabins, and whether or not Bienville was in the neighborhood. These scouts reported that they had seen about 15 cabins on a little hill, 5 or 6 on another, a small fort about 40 feet long by 30 wide, and that they believed there might be 30 to 35 cabins more in that village. There was no indication that the expedition from the south had yet reached the vicinity. A council of war was held with the Indian chiefs, and the Iroquois, who were recognized by the other tribes as the most skillful in the art of war, answered D'Artaquette for all the tribes. 'Since you wish', said the Iroquois chief, 'to know what we think, we will tell it to you. The march which we have just made, having been longer than we expected, has used up our provisions. We have no more of them; and if we intend to wait for M. de Bienville, who perhaps will not come for 10 or 11 days, we run the risk of dying from hunger. To prevent this danger, it is necessary to attack the Chickasaw village which we found. When we have taken it, we will find there means of subsistence, and we can entrench ourselves in the fort that we have captured while waiting for M. de Bienville.' This very sensible plan was adopted and the march resumed. At 9 o'clock on the evening of March 24 the column arrived at a league's distance from the fort of the Chickasaw town of Ogoula Tchetoka and halted. Four Iroquois were sent to reconnoiter, and during their absence several gunshots were heard from the direction of the village, which made D'Artaquette think that perhaps Bienville had come up on the other side of the settlement.

"The Iroquois spies, upon their return at 3 o'clock in the morning, reported everything quiet, and the little army began marching again and came within an eighth of a league of the fort, where a halt was made and the horses which carried the baggage and extra ammunition unloaded. A small guard was left over this property, and between 6 and 7 o'clock on Palm Sunday morning, March 25, formation for attack was made. The center of the army was composed of a force of 26 officers and soldiers from the companies and 73 militia. The Arkansas, followed by the Illinois, constituted the right wing, and in the left wing were the Iroquois, followed by the Miamis. The little army marched in this order against the fort at Ogoula Tchetoka. When it drew close to the fort a chief of the Chickasaws came out with three calumets, but the Illinois and Miamis fired on him without listening to his harangue and killed him. Four or five cabins were taken possession of and the fort attacked. Immediately the Chickasaws sought cover of their defenses and continued their fire through the loopholes prepared for this purpose. At the end of a quarter of an hour's fighting there appeared on the hills four or five hundred Chickasaws who came to the rescue of their people, and these so frightened the Illinois and Miamis that they fled from the battlefield. D'Artaquette, seeing himself abandoned at one stroke by more than 250 Indians, was obliged to call a retreat to the place where the baggage and munitions had been left. While falling back he had three fingers of his right hand cut off by a bullet.

"The Chickasaws, encouraged by the flight of the Illinois and Miamis, pursued this small force under D'Artaquette with great fury and surrounded it. D'Artaquette received a second bullet wound, this time in his thigh, which obliged him to lean against a tree, and there he bravely strove by his words to animate his troops. Many of those who were near him advised him to save himself. His servant led his horse to him and, with some of the militia, tried to induce him to mount, but he insisted on staying where he could encourage his handful of men to stand firm. While he was exhorting them he received a third gunshot wound in the abdomen and his apparently lifeless body fell to the ground.

"After the disaster to their leader, M. de St. Ange and other officers exerted all their efforts to repulse the Chickasaws, but finally succumbed to the force of numbers, and most of them were killed near where D'Artaquette lay. The greater part of the militia officers perished here also. The small number of soldiers who remained, seeing themselves without officers, saved themselves by flight. The Chickasaws pursued them for nearly 4 leagues, but rain, which had fallen in great quantity since 10 o'clock, prevented them being overtaken.

"This fight lasted from between 6 and 7 in the morning until 9 a. m. The Iroquois and the Arkansas behaved in a praiseworthy manner and, owing to their valor during the retreat, more than 20 wounded, who would otherwise have been killed or made prisoners, were carried in safety to Ecors a Prud'homme, where the remnant of the army arrived, part on the 29th of March and the rest the following day.

"One of the militia officers captured by the Chickasaws was Drouet de Richardville, who lost 3 brothers in the fight, and himself suffered 3 wounds before he was taken. Richardville was one of two French prisoners kept alive by the Chickasaws for the purpose of exchanging them for one of their warriors whom the French had taken prisoner some time before. After 18 months' detention among the Indians, Richardville and the other Frenchman escaped, and after many hardships the former finally reached Montreal on the 10th of June 1739. It was from his reports that the many rumors as to what had occurred to the French prisoners were cleared up. Of the 22 French who were captured, all but Richardville and one other were burned to death. From 3 in the afternoon until midnight of the day of the fight D'Artaquette, Father Senat, Vincennes, St. Ange, and others, to the number of 20, were thrown alive into the two fires which the Indian women had prepared. An Indian girl, who had been a slave among the Chickasaws and who later was rescued from them by the Alibamons, was brought to Bienville where she related the story of this barbarity. She said that during the preparation for this tragedy the French sang in the same manner as do the Indians, 'who judge the valor of a warrior only by the strength or weakness of his voice at the time when they are about to put him to death.'

The Sieur de Courselas, who had been left to guard the ammunition and baggage, wandered into a Chickasaw village without knowing where he was going and, being taken prisoner, was burned to death 3 days later.

"Sieur de Richardville reported that from Ecors a Prud'homme to the 9 Chickasaw villages was about 60 leagues, much of the path leading over low ground overgrown with ash. These 9 villages were located on a plain cut by several small ridges, and at a distance of 2, 3, and 4 arpents on from the other. The grant village was a half league from these, beyond a village of the Natchez. There was a total of about 600 warriors in all the villages. Each of the 9 villages had a fort around which cabins were constructed. The forts were square and without bastions, 50 or 60 feet on a side. The enclosure was made of posts extending 7 or 8 feet above the ground, and braced at the back by forked stakes. These posts were set 2½ feet in the ground in double rows, and were pierced with loopholes. The cabins were built of oak posts with but one small opening, set up in circular form. The roof was made of mud shaped into a dome, and was covered over with straw. There were no streams in any of the villages but springs which were made into wells supplied them with water. Forage was to be found everywhere, horses were plentiful, and all the warriors had guns, powder, and bullets which English traders furnished in exchange for furs."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to be at a meeting of the Building Commission at 3 o'clock. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bills in which I am interested when I return to the floor after that meeting.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have two gentlemen who have studied these bills called to committee meetings. Some of the bills that the gentleman from Illinois is interested in may be beyond the point we expected to go today. I do not care to object to the gentleman's bills, but I do object to taking them up out of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will make the request as to the individual bills of the gentleman from Illinois, and then permit the Members to object or not object at that time. I object to the gentleman's request, however.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with my extension of remarks I ask unanimous consent to show the fact that this bill in reference to the Ackia battlefield was approved by the War Department, the Interior Department, and the Bureau of the Budget.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

SIoux INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6771, to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that the Secretary of the Interior has already conducted hearings and has awarded this amount to the Sioux Indians.

Mr. WERNER. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And this is under a previous authorization made by this Congress?

Mr. WERNER. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why does the gentleman from Ohio desire this bill to be passed over without prejudice when there is not one iota of opposition to the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. There was no objection to a previous bill which we passed authorizing some $223,000 when it is diametrically opposed to the President's policy. The Comptroller General has stated that he is opposed to the bill and it is not in accord with the President's fiscal policy.

Mr. WERNER. Is that in connection with this bill?

Mr. TRUAX. No; the previous bill. This bill is along the same lines.

Mr. WERNER. We are not talking about the previous bill. This simply carries out an authorization of a previous Congress. The work has been done, and the committee has come back here giving the facts upon which the payment should be made.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. This bill provides for an appropriation of $79,002.19. This would mean that we would have to borrow that amount of money from the bankers and it will cost more than that to pay the interest, and so forth. I think we better get on a better fiscal basis before we pass such bills.

Mr. WERNER. But we owe the money. Why do we not pay it?

Mr. McFARLANE. What are we going to use for money? The regular order was demanded.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. May I say that a letter we have from the Secretary of the Interior endorses this bill and it has already passed the Senate.

Mr. TRUAX. That makes no difference. They will pass anything over there in the Senate.

Mr. GREENWOOD. There has been an audit made showing the exact amount to be paid in connection with this matter.

Mr. TRUAX. Where are we going to get the money?

Mr. GREENWOOD. We can always get the money.

Mr. TRUAX. Where are we going to get the money? We are broke now.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

FORGING OR COUNTERFEITING POSTMARKING STAMP

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5049, providing punishment for forging or counterfeiting any postmarking stamp.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall forge or counterfeit any postmarking stamp, or shall make or knowingly use or sell, or have in possession with intent to use or sell, any such forged or counterfeited postmarking stamp, die, plate, or engraving, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 4, after the word "stamp", insert the following: "or impression thereof with intent to make it appear that such impression is a genuine postmark"; on page 1, line 7, strike out the word "such", and on page 1, in line 8, after the word "engraving", insert the words "or such impression thereof."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OBTAINING MAIL BY FRAUD OR DECEPTION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5162, providing for punishment for attempts to obtain mail by fraud or by deception.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill the necessity for such additional penal legislation at this time? The first-class mail is the only mail of that Department that is paying expenses. All other departments are being carried at a tremendous loss; yet here is legislation subjecting everybody that handles the mail to some sort of crime. I think the crime is that we let these departments go on running at a tremendous deficit amounting to millions of dollars without doing our duty and readjusting rates on the different postal rates. We should balance the Budget on second-, third-, and fourth-class mail of the Department rather than to try to penalize some little Government employee.

I think Congress ought to penalize itself for not doing its duty by amending the law and putting the Post Office Department on a sound fiscal basis with respect to the chain stores, mail-order houses, and the newspapers of the country as well as all others.

Mr. TRUAX. If they did that they could reduce the first-class postage rates from 3 cents to 2 cents and do some good for all the people of the country.

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes, sir; and this Congress should do this before adjourning.

Mr. TRUAX. Why do they not recommend some legislation of that kind?

Mr. McFARLANE. They seem to be putting in all of their time on matters of this sort.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. MEAD. May I ask the gentleman to withhold his request for a moment so that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS] may explain the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the gentleman to withhold his request so that we may explain the purpose of the bill.

This is a very simple and inoffensive bill so far as law-abiding people are concerned. It is designed to get at a racket that is growing up in the country—

Mr. McFARLANE. Which one?

Mr. DOBBINS. Of attempting to obtain mail by fraud and deception. For instance, a great many pension checks and the retirement pay checks of retired Government officers and employees are involved; and instead of going to the post office to which the letters are addressed and attempting to get them there by fraud, miscreants will file forged forwarding orders in the names of the addressees and have the letters containing the checks sent to another post office where the offender is not known. They then come to that post office and it is easy to obtain the mail not intended for them. If they succeed in obtaining the mail, they have committed an offense under present laws, but if they are detected in the act beforehand and they give up in the attempt, there is nothing for which they can be prosecuted.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOBBINS. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. I have just learned that some of our bankers are taking checks out of the mail and endorsing them and cashing them even though they are not addressed to them. I think if this bill will stop that practice, it is a good bill.

Mr. DOBBINS. Maybe this bill will stop it—I hope it will.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman who spoke briefly about the first-class mail adding to the revenues of the Department, this bill is for the avowed purpose of protecting that class of mail and the patrons who are providing the revenues for the operation of this Department.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the Chairman of the Post Office Committee yield for a question?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. When is the gentleman going to bring in a bill to reduce the first-class postage rate from 3 cents to 2 cents?

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that our committee has never gone on record increasing the first-class postage rate from 2 cents to 3 cents. Our committee opposed the increase as a committee.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why does not the gentleman bring in a bill and let us reduce it?

Mr. MEAD. The matter is now before the Ways and Means Committee, and the increase was applied by way of a tax by that committee rather than by our committee as an increased postal charge. It is a tax, as I understand, for the duration of the emergency.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why does not the gentleman's committee bring in a bill to reduce the rate and let us get the matter before the Congress? Your committee has jurisdiction of such legislation. I am sure we can pass a measure amending the law by reducing first-class postage rates from 3 cents to 2 cents.

Mr. MEAD. So far as our committee is concerned, first-class postage is 2 cents. The matter is entirely up to the Ways and Means Committee where the third cent is applied as a tax.

Mr. McFARLANE. I believe that is the committee that has come in with this 2-cent check nuisance tax and a lot of other nuisance taxes like that.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first clause of section 194 of the act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1125), as amended (18 U. S. C. 317), be amended to read as follows: "Whoever shall steal, take, or abstract, or by fraud or deception obtain or attempt so to obtain from or out of any mail, post office or station thereof, or other authorized depository for mail matter, or from a letter or mail carrier, any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or shall abstract or remove from any such letter, package, bag, or mail, any article or thing contained therein, or shall secrete, embezzle, or destroy any such letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or any article or thing contained therein;"

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "mail", insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CUSTODIANS OF GOVERNMENT MONEYS AND PROPERTY

The clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5360, providing for punishment for the crime of robbing or attempting to rob custodians of Government moneys or property.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in reading this bill I have come to the very definite conclusion it is about the worst-drafted bill I have ever read.

The committee amendment makes the bill somewhat ambiguous and uncertain concerning its operation. I want to call the committee's attention to the fact that in line 6 they have crossed out "matter, money" and in line 7 have written in "matter or of any money", and in line 10 they have left the wording as it was. It would seem to me that to be consistent an amendment should be offered to insert in line 10, after the word "mail", the words "or of any", so that the bill would read the same as it does in line 7.

I might say also that in line 6, on page 2, which has to do with the penalty, it provides for a penalty of 25 years, no more and no less. I have drafted an amendment which would make the punishment not more than 25 years, to make it consistent with the laws of every State and of the United States that I have ever read concerning punishments for crime. If the committee will accept these two amendments, one to insert, after the word "mail", in line 10 on page 1, the words "or of any", and in line 6 on page 2, the words "not more than", I shall have no objection to the bill. I am not doing this because I have any objection to the merits of the bill, but I think it is a badly drafted bill.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. DOBBINS. Both the matters which the gentleman has discussed were considered in committee. I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that after the nature of the mail and other matter has been defined in lines 6 and 7 on page 1, the use of the word "such" in line 10 has the effect of adopting that same definition. That is the reason the words were not repeated, but I see no harm in repeating them and will offer no objection to doing it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the language of the bill before it was amended is better.

Mr. DOBBINS. The trouble with the language as originally written "custody of any mail matter, money, or other property of the United States" is that it might limit the offense to mail matter of the United States, whereas it is designed to include within the protection of the section all mail matter, whether it belongs to the United States or is mail belonging to a private citizen and is temporarily in the custody of the United States while being in the United States mails. The criticism in respect to the severity of the punishment appeals strongly to the committee, and the only reason we did not change it was because that is the existing law and has been the law for many years.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that to be the case. I have no objection to the severity of the punishment; in fact, I would prefer to see it not less than 25 years or more than 50, but I think there should be some discretion left in the court in cases where there are mitigating circumstances.

Mr. DOBBINS. I do not have any objection to either one of the amendments suggested by the able gentleman from Michigan and the chairman of our committee agrees with me in that statement.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I really think that the whole bill should be redrafted. Let me read it to the House:

Whoever shall assault any person having lawful charge, control, or custody of any mail matter, money, or other property of the United States with intent to rob, steal, or purloin—

And so forth. That is not so good.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. LUCKEY. This bill was presented to the committee by the Post Office Department.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I cannot help who sent it to the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And the next worse bill that I have ever read was sent down here in the Seventy-third Congress by the Department of Justice. That does not excuse the matter.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TLINGIT AND HAIDA INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2756) authorizing the Tlingit and Haida Indians of Alaska to bring suit in the United States Court of Claims, and conferring jurisdiction upon said court to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment upon any and all claims which said Indians may have, or claim to have, against the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I object.

STATUARY KNOWN AS "INDIAN BUFFALO HUNT"

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5263) to purchase and erect in the city of Washington the group of statuary known as the "Indian Buffalo Hunt."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, and that the right to call up the bill later be granted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] upon his return to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object to that request. This bill is well known and has been in this House for years.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman's request and ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT JUDGE FOR MASSACHUSETTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4665) to authorize the appointment of a district judge to fill the vacancy in the district of Massachusetts occasioned by the death of Hon. James A. Lowell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have no particular objection to the merits of the bill, but I wish we could clear up the situation which exists with reference to several of these courts which I do not understand and I do not think many Members understand. We seem to have a practice in some jurisdictions whereby we establish a certain judgeship, and when there is a vacancy through death or otherwise the President is authorized to make an appointment.

Then we have other judgeships, and a judge is named to that judgeship and upon his death there is no vacancy because the judgeship dies with the judge. Then we have a third classification where a temporary judge is authorized, wherein the temporary judgeship does not die with the judge. I think probably the President would have authority without any action of Congress to appoint a successor. I wish the gentleman would clear up that feature in my mind.

Mr. HEALEY. I should be very glad to do that. Judge Lowell was appointed in 1922 to a judgeship which did not survive him. He was appointed for life, and at his death that judgeship terminated. There were a number of judges appointed at that particular time throughout the country—I think probably some 15 or 20. They were merely temporary judges, and upon their death the judgeships terminated. This is that type of judgeship. Judge Lowell died in November 1933, and since that time the court in Massachusetts has only had two Federal judges, although we have a population of approximately 4,300,000. There is not any State in the Union with that population or even approximately that population that has less Federal judges. There are 19 States with less population that have as many judges, and 10 States with less population that have more judges.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that I have studied the bill carefully, and I think there is need for this judgeship in Massachusetts, because the three judges divided their work into a criminal branch, a civil jury branch, and the civil nonjury branch. I think there is need for it, but because that need will be continuing from year to year, I was wondering whether it would not be better legislation to create the position permanently rather than to do it in this way?

Mr. HEALEY. I think this bill will take care of that situation. That will create a permanent judgeship.

Mr. McFARLANE. Reserving the right to object, this, in effect, is creating a permanent Federal district judgeship in Massachusetts, and I would like to ask the gentleman the number of cases that are being disposed of by the two judges in Massachusetts at this time, and, if he can, to tell us how that compares with the other judgeships over the Nation. I have this in mind, that we ought to make a careful survey of the Federal district judgeships over the Nation and redistribute the work and stop creating these district judgeships. I think we have enough judgeships now if the work was fairly and equitably distributed over the Nation, and we could stop creating these judgeships and save this additional expense.

Mr. HEALEY. May I say to the gentleman that because of the tremendous amount of work before the court the dockets are terribly congested. It has been impossible to hold a session of the criminal court this year. In answer to the gentleman's question, in the year 1931-32 there were 1,937 cases, excluding bankruptcy, filed; in the year 1932-33 there were 1,825 cases, excluding bankruptcy proceedings, filed. In 1932-33, 1,693 cases were terminated, and at the end of the fiscal year 1932 there were pending 1,810 cases. At the end of the fiscal year 1933 there were 1,942 cases pending. In addition to these the court handles a large amount of naturalization petitions and bankruptcy matters.

Mr. McFARLANE. How much work were those judges turning off? How many jury cases were they disposing of?

Mr. HEALEY. Oh, they are trying all the jury cases that it is humanly possible for two judges to try.

Mr. McFARLANE. How many?

Mr. HEALEY. I think the report indicates the number. For instance, during the year 1934 there were 1,033 cases exclusive of bankruptcy proceedings, terminated by the court. During that same year there were over 2,000 bankruptcy cases commenced, and some 1,924 were terminated. I believe that will indicate to the gentleman that the court is trying its utmost to keep the work current.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think it has been explained that this is not the creation of a new judgeship, and it is not the continuation of a judgeship with regard to which any member of the committee has any question of necessity, so far as I know. The gentleman is advised that one of the two judges sitting there died, and by reason of his being a temporary appointment—

Mr. McFARLANE. The court died with him?

Mr. HEALEY. Yes. The judgeship died with him.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We must have this legislation to permit the President to fill the position that was occupied by this judge who died.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why can we not make a careful survey and study of these different judicial districts over the Nation and reapportion or redistribute the work among the different Federal district judges and save the creation of additional judgeships. That is what I am interested in.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman is right about that; but in this particular situation I think every member of the committee and everybody who has studied it agrees that three judges are necessary to do the work in this State. I do not think there is any doubt in the mind of any member of the committee that that is true. We made an exception of this particular bill because of that situation. There are 13 or 14 judges included in the omnibus bill. Because of the pressing necessity in that State, this bill was cut out from the omnibus bill and placed so that it could be put through without being involved in these other cases.

Now, we are not making any new judgeship and we have not in this bill any judgeship that anybody who has examined the figures has any doubt about. That is the situation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, why cannot this bill be passed over without prejudice, along with several other bills now on the calendar?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There is objection to some other bills. There is objection by some Members to the general policy of the committee directed to what is called "the omnibus bill." There is objection to that bill in New York, California, and from other States.

Mr. TRUAX. What about the one in Oregon?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not informed as to that at the moment. This bill, as said by my friend, was cut loose from the general group of bills that were similarly involved in order that the people affected might have the proper number of judges to take care of the business of the courts.

Mr. WERNER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is: Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a district judge to fill the vacancy in the district of Massachusetts occasioned by the death of Hon. James A. Lowell.

DESCHUTES NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4459, to include within the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, certain public lands within the exchange boundaries thereof.

There being no objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 1680) was substituted for the House bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing the adjustment of the boundaries of the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes", approved February 2, 1922, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"Sec. 2. Such lands in public ownership within 6 miles of the exterior boundaries of the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, as may be found by the Secretaries of Agriculture and of the Interior to be chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes, may be added to the Deschutes National Forest by proclamation of the President, subject to any valid existing claims in such lands."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 4459) was laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF CERTAIN RIVERS IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3285, authorizing a preliminary examination and survey of the Oswego, Oneida, Seneca, and Clyde Rivers in Oswego, Onondaga, Oneida, Madison, Cayuga, Wayne, Seneca, Tompkins, Schuyler, Yates, and Ontario Counties, N. Y., with a view to the controlling of floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Oswego, Oneida, Seneca, and Clyde Rivers in Oswego, Onondaga, Oneida, Madison, Cayuga, Wayne, Seneca, Tompkins, Schuyler, Yates and Ontario Counties, N. Y., with a view to the control of floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, at the end of line 7, add a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Amend the title so as to read: 'A bill authorizing a preliminary examination of the Oswego, Oneida, Seneca, and Clyde Rivers in Oswego, Onondaga, Oneida, Madison, Cayuga, Wayne, Seneca, Tompkins, Schuyler, Yates, and Ontario Counties, N. Y., with a view to the controlling of floods.'"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bills, Calendar Nos. 49 to 55, inclusive, for the reason that the bill we have just passed is of exactly the same type, providing for preliminary flood-control examinations. The fact that no objection was made to this bill shows that those who objected to the previous bills do not now object to the principle involved, and I take it have reconsidered their action.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to object to the request of the gentleman from Oregon, understanding, as I do, the reason for the request; but if we grant a request to return to reconsider a bill for one Member we shall have to do it for all, and in the interest of orderly procedure I am constrained to object at this time.

INTERSTATE REFERENCE BUREAU

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 156) to make available to Congress the services and data of the Interstate Reference Bureau.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LXXIX—496

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, COHASSET, MINN.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1342, to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to Board of County Commissioners of Itasca County, Minn., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the road between the villages of Cohasset and Deer River, Minn."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved May 1, 1923, authorizing the Board of County Commissioners of Itasca County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the north line of section 35, township 144 north, range 25 west, on the road between the villages of Cohasset and Deer River, Minn., be and the same is hereby revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge herein referred to be commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of approval hereof.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1855, to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing H. C. Brenner Realty & Finance Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Cherokee and Osage Streets, St. Louis, Mo.", approved February 13, 1931.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object on account of this being a toll bridge. The Department of Agriculture enters an objection.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the Senate. On February 13, 1931, it passed both branches of Congress. The bridge would have been erected had it not been for the depression.

Allowing this act to become a law will provide employment at a time when employment is needed most, and I am confident money to build the bridge will be raised and that the bridge will be built.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Agriculture takes the position that an additional bridge across the Mississippi River at this point is not needed and that a publicly owned bridge could be constructed and financed from tolls and be free in a shorter time. For these reasons I object to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Is the gentleman not also aware of the fact that the Secretary of War, who is in charge of navigable rivers, is in a better position to know the need for bridges than the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAIBORNE. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman favor the retention of toll bridges?

Mr. CLAIBORNE. In this instance; yes. I have never objected to any bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order so I can object and put a stop to this discussion.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS RAINY RIVER AT BAUDETTE, MINN.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6834, to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing Vernon W. O'Connor, of St. Paul, Minn., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rainy River at or near Baudette, Minn."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. This bill was once passed by Congress, and Mr. O'Connor started to build a bridge across the Rainy River at Baudette, going so far as to build the piers and abutments to the bridge. Canada had agreed to have this bridge built, and they had built their road down to the bridge. The time limit expired. We are asking that the time be extended within which the bridge may be completed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. According to the report, the Mayor of Baudette advises that the Ontario Government is ready to assume one-half the cost of constructing a free bridge if the other half of the cost is provided on this side of the boundary. If there is any possibility of building a free bridge there, I should object to any extension of time for the construction of a toll bridge.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. I would rather have a free bridge myself, but where are we going to get the other half of the money? If Congress will give us the other half of the money we will throw up our hands. I would ask that we hold up this until we can see if we can get a free bridge.

Mr. CHAPMAN. The Department of Agriculture, the Department of State, and the War Department have all given their approval to this bill.

Mr. TRUAX. The Department of Agriculture says they are opposed to this bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I may say to the gentleman that the Department of Agriculture for years has been opposed to a great many of these bridge bills. If we are going to be compelled to have a favorable report from them before we pass any bills, or pass only those bridge bills to which the Department of Agriculture does not object, there would not be many bridge bills passed. Just as the gentleman from Missouri indicated, the controlling factor in connection with the passage of a bridge bill is, what does the War Department say about obstruction to navigation? The plan of the Department of Agriculture is a plan to link up their various roads. They do not press their objection and are not insistent. They make the objection because it is not consistent with their road policy, and we on this side have not objected because the Department of Agriculture has objected. We maintain that there are other factors more important.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman favor toll bridges?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am in favor of toll bridges if they are owned by municipalities, or by counties, or States, or public agencies, but not by individuals, unless it can be shown that these individuals are acting in the public interest. I have always been against granting franchises to individuals to be peddled around to the one who would give them the greatest profit.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. If we do that you might just as well kill it, because we will not get to it again.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN AND PHILIPPINE LABOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7348, to protect American and Philippine labor and to preserve an essential industry, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT GARRISON, N. DAK.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1222, to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Garrison, N. Dak.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Garrison, N. Dak., authorized to be built by the State of North Dakota by an act of Congress approved February 10, 1932, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 14, 1933, and June 12, 1934, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 12, 1935.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT OMAHA, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1987, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., authorized to be built by the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees by an act of Congress approved June 10, 1930, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 20, 1931, June 9, 1932, February 24, 1933, and March 5, 1934, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 10, 1935.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4528, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La., authorized to be built by George A. Hero and Allen S. Hackett, their successors and assigns, by act of Congress approved March 2, 1927, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 6, 1928, February 19, 1929, June 10, 1930, March 1, 1933, and March 5, 1934, are hereby extending 1 and 3 years, respectively, from March 2, 1935.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "by", insert "an."

On page 2, line 1, strike out the word "extending" and insert in lieu thereof the words "further extended."

On page 2, lines 3 and 4, insert the following new section: "Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS DES MOINES RIVER AT ST. FRANCISVILLE, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5547, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill whether or not this is a toll bridge?

Mr. CHAPMAN. It will become a toll bridge.

Mr. McFARLANE. When it is opened it is to be a free bridge?

Mr. ROMJUE. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that the money has been raised by bond issue in the State of Iowa, but has been declared illegal. The people since that time have constructed a road practically up to the river. The State of Missouri is working on its road and the State highway commission has provided about three-quarters of the money.

Mr. McFARLANE. How much money has to be paid off before it is a free bridge?

Mr. ROMJUE. They have all but something like $8,000. They have nearly all of it raised. They had about seven-eighths of the money raised when the bonds in Lee County, Iowa, were declared unconstitutional.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo., authorized to be built by Roy H. Campbell, Charles H. Brown, G. H. Wilsey, and Dr. H. O. Strosnider, by an act of Congress approved February 14, 1933, heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 24, 1934, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from February 24, 1935.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 2, strike out the figure "24" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "14."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT RIO GRANDE CITY, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6630, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WEST. Why does the gentleman object?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Because the Department of Agriculture objected some 6 years ago. Since that time nothing has been done in the way of construction. Now, if they cannot do anything in the way of construction in 6 years, it is time they allowed somebody else to do something.

Mr. WEST. The Government now maintains a conveyance back and forth there. They use a little hand boat.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. This is to be a toll bridge?

Mr. WEST. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. To be constructed by a private company and operated by a private company, and there is no provision for amortization.

Mr. WEST. The gentleman will find that this is a bridge between two countries, namely, the United States and Mexico.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does this private company want to take all of the profits?

Mr. WEST. Yes; absolutely. Of course.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think the Mexican Government ought to be given a break.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LAWRENCE RIVER NEAR OGDENSBURG

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6780, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N. Y.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear an explanation of this bill with respect to whether or not it is to be a toll bridge.

Mr. SNELL. What information would the gentleman like to have?

Mr. McFARLANE. What can you give me? [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. Well, I can give the gentleman a good deal of information, if it is necessary. To start with, the location of this bridge was decided by a commission appointed by the then Governor of the State of New York, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, and is the only one between Niagara Falls and Montreal. The bridge is to be built by the Bridge Commission of New York State.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why do they not build the bridge?

Mr. SNELL. This is to be a public bridge; and takes time to straighten out the international features.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why all the delay—why have they not built it?

Mr. SNELL. Well, there you are asking quite a serious question. We had an allocation of $2,750,000 from the P. W. A. to build this bridge. We thought we were going to start it last year, but there were some complications in connection with the Canadian Government. There were some people in Canada who wanted one at Ogdensburg and some who wanted one at Thousand Islands and one up at Kingston, and all these objections had to be considered. There is need for one bridge, and nearly everyone agrees to that. This is the location that the commission set up by the Governor of the State of New York decided upon and they were unanimous in their decision, and as far as I know there is no opposition to the building of it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is it to be a toll bridge when completed?

Mr. SNELL. It is to be a public, toll bridge; yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. What is it going to cost?

Mr. SNELL. About $3,000,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. How much of it will the Canadian Government pay?

Mr. SNELL. I cannot tell the gentleman that because it has not been decided.

Mr. McFARLANE. Which probably means very little.

Mr. SNELL. Comparatively little. We have the money promised from the P. W. A.

Mr. McFARLANE. You did not get any P. W. A. money from Canada, did you?

Mr. SNELL. Not from Canada; no.

Mr. McFARLANE. How much will Canada pay?

Mr. SNELL. I told the gentleman they had not made any arrangements in regard to that, but the bridge will be paid for out of tolls. There is not a bridge across the St. Lawrence River from Niagara to Montreal.

Mr. McFARLANE. Since you have not been able to get any action during all this time I do not see why we ought to fool along with them any further. Maybe we can get a contract and get somebody else to work on it.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman ought to give a little more reason than that for objecting.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am going to ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SNELL. There is no prejudice about it, the gentleman can either object to it or not.

Mr. McFARLANE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I shall withhold my objection if the gentleman will allow me to call up Calendar 126, H. R. 6780, and I shall also withdraw my objection to three other bills.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. If we are going to return to any previous numbers on the calendar I shall object unless I am allowed to return to Calendar No. 49.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection? This is another bridge to be constructed between two States. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and the Clerk will report the bill.

ADVANCEMENT BY SELECTION IN THE STAFF CORPS OF THE NAVY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5382, to provide for advancement by selection in the staff corps of the Navy to the ranks of lieutenant commander and lieutenant; to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the equalization of promotion of officers of the staff corps of the Navy with officers of the line" (44 Stat. 717; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 34, secs. 348 to 348t), and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, personally I have not had time to study this bill. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Vinson] wished to take it up. I wish, because of that, that the gentleman from Georgia would make a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, under the gentleman's reservation of objection, I will be glad to do so. I will state to the House that this is a departmental measure, unanimously reported to the House by the Naval Affairs Committee. It merely applies to the staff corps. It extends selection down in the staff corps to the lower grades, the grade of lieutenant and lieutenant, junior grade, and makes it uniform with reference to that of the line and that of the Marine Corps. It also seeks to equalize some injustice that was done in what is known as the "equalization bill." This is a departmental measure and it brings about an annual saving of about $1,400 a year.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Darrow] is thoroughly conversant with the facts. The entire committee has gone into the matter carefully, and it is highly important that this bill be passed as early as possible, so that the selection in the staff can be carried out this year in accordance with the provisions of this bill.

Under the law today in the rank of lieutenant and lieutenant, junior grade, if this bill does not become effective, it is possible for an officer to hold that rank until he is 64 years of age. This would eliminate him if he is not qualified professionally in this particularly technical work.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Reserving the right to object, a few moments ago I objected to five or six bills purely as a retaliatory action against an unwarranted objection that was made to a bill on the calendar, no. 126, and I would like to say a word or two about it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not have the floor.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. This bill simply extends the time to build a very important bridge in northern New York and Canada where thousands of tourists from all over the country go each year and are oppressed by very high ferry rates in order to get from the United States into Canada. The result was that a New York State act was proposed originally by your President on the Democratic side, Mr. Roosevelt, with a Democratic commission. It is a public bridge, and I cannot understand why anybody in the House would object to extending the time for the construction of such a bridge, which is obviously for the public good.

Mr. RANKIN. Is it a free bridge?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It is a toll bridge until the bonds are paid off.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I hope the gentleman will be successful in getting it through.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. But I am under the impression that I will object to all other bills unless I can now secure unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 126.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me say to the gentleman that he should not penalize other meritorious bills because he has not been fortunate enough to secure the passage of his bill. The bill now before the House is not an individual bill of mine. It is a departmental measure.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gentleman's statement I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the Record at this point and not read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of existing law as amended by this act with reference to advancement in rank by selection in the staff corps are hereby extended to include and authorize advancement to the ranks of lieutenant commander and lieutenant of officers of the next lower ranks who are eligible for consideration by a selection board. Each selection board appointed to recommend staff officers of the ranks of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade) for advancement, shall recommend all the eligible officers of said ranks who in the opinion of at least two-thirds of the members of such board are fitted to assume the duties of the next higher rank.

Sec. 2. Boards for the selection of staff officers for recommendation for advancement to the ranks of lieutenant commander and lieutenant shall be composed of not less than 6 nor more than 9 officers above the rank of commander on the active or retired list of the staff corps concerned: Provided, That in case there be not a sufficient number of staff officers of the corps concerned legally or physically capacitated to serve on a selection board of such corps as herein provided, officers of the line on the active list above the rank of commander may be detailed to duty on such board to constitute the required minimum membership.

Sec. 3. Staff officers of the ranks of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade) who shall not have been recommended for advancement to the next higher rank by the report of a selection board as approved by the President prior to the completion of 14 or 7 years, respectively, of commissioned service in the Navy, shall be ineligible for consideration by a selection board on June 30 of the current fiscal year: Provided, That no such officer shall become ineligible for consideration by reason of length of commissioned service until he shall have been once considered by a selection board for advancement to the next higher rank.

Sec. 4. Except as provided in section 6 of this act, staff officers of the ranks of commander and lieutenant commander who shall not have been recommended for advancement by the report of a selection board as approved by the President prior to the completion of 28 or 21 years, respectively, of commissioned service in the Navy, shall be ineligible for consideration by a selection board on June 30 of the current fiscal year: Provided, That for the purposes of this section, the length of such commissioned service for officers of the ranks of commander and lieutenant commander in the Construction Corps and Civil Engineer Corps shall be 30 or 25 years, respectively: Provided further, That no staff officer of the rank of commander or lieutenant commander shall become ineligible for consideration by reason of length of service until he shall have been considered by three selection boards for advancement to the next higher rank, at least one of which boards shall have been appointed after the date of this act.

Sec. 5. All staff officers who have not been recommended for advancement and who, after the completion of the designated periods of service as prescribed for their respective ranks and corps, become ineligible for consideration by a selection board in accordance with this act, or who, if recommended for advancement, undergo the required examinations for advancement and are found not professionally qualified, shall be transferred to the retired list of the Navy.

Sec. 6. When the number of involuntary transfers in any fiscal year from the ranks of commander and lieutenant commander in the staff corps to the retired list pursuant to this act, exclusive of officers who have failed professionally on examination for advancement to the next higher rank, would otherwise exceed the figures in the following tabulation, the selection board concerned shall designate by name such excess of officers for retention on the active list until the end of the next fiscal year, and officers so designated shall retain their eligibility for selection and advancement during said year: Medical Corps, 7 commanders and 12 lieutenant commanders; Supply Corps, 4 commanders and 7 lieutenant commanders; Chaplain Corps, 1 commander and 1 lieutenant commander; Construction Corps, 2 commanders and 3 lieutenant commanders; Civil Engineer Corps, 1 commander and 1 lieutenant commander; Dental Corps, 1 commander and 2 lieutenant commanders. If the officers so designated are not recommended for advancement or again designated for retention on the active list, they shall be transferred to the retired list in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Sec. 7. If at the end of any fiscal year the number of involuntary transfers to the retired list from the ranks of commander or lieutenant commander of the staff corps would exceed the limits set forth in section 6 of this act, and there has been no selection board convened during the fiscal year to recommend officers of those ranks for advancement in the staff corps concerned, special boards shall be convened by the Secretary of the Navy on or about June 1 preceding the end of the fiscal year to designate by name such excess of officers to be retained on the active list as provided in section 6 of this act. Each such board shall be constituted as provided by law for selection boards for the staff corps concerned.

Sec. 8. All transfers to the retired list pursuant to this act shall be made as of June 30 of the current fiscal year. Officers retired pursuant to this act shall receive pay at the rate of 2½ percent of their active-duty pay, multiplied by the number of years of service for which they were entitled to credit in computation of their longevity pay on the active list, not to exceed a total of 75 percent of said active-duty pay: Provided, That a fractional year of 6 months or more shall be considered a full year in computing the number of years of service by which the rate of 2½ percent is multiplied.

Sec. 9. As soon as practicable after the date of this act, boards for the selection of staff officers for advancement to the ranks of captain and commander shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with existing law. Each such board shall recommend for advancement to the ranks hereinafter listed in the corps for which it was appointed, from those staff officers of the next lower rank in said corps who are eligible for consideration, such officers, not to exceed the number furnished it by the Secretary of the Navy. The number furnished the boards appointed in execution of this section, in addition to such numbers, if any, as would otherwise be furnished such boards as the result of computations required by law for the corps and ranks concerned, shall be: For the Medical Corps, 11 for advancement to the rank of captain and 18 for advancement to the rank of commander; for the Supply Corps, 1 for advancement to the rank of captain and 10 for advancement to the rank of commander; for the Civil Engineer Corps, 1 for advancement to the rank of commander; for the Construction Corps, 4 for advancement to the rank of captain. If a selection board does not recommend a number of officers for advancement to any rank equal to the number furnished to that board for that rank by the Secretary of the Navy, the difference between the number actually recommended by the board and the number furnished the board by the Secretary of the Navy may be added by the Secretary of the Navy to the number furnished by him to the next succeeding board.

Sec. 10. That section 10 of the act approved June 10, 1926 (44 Stat. 720-721; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 34, sec. 3481), is hereby repealed.

If the running mate of a staff officer be promoted to a higher rank and such staff officer be considered by a selection board for such rank but fails to be selected for advancement thereto, by the report of such board as approved by the President, such staff officer shall have assigned as his new running mate the line officer not promoted who was next senior to his former running mate in the rank in which the staff officer remains; if there remain in that rank no line officer who was senior therein to such former running mate, such staff officer shall not have assigned a new running mate, but shall retain his former running mate who has been promoted: Provided, That if subsequently selected such staff officer when advanced to the higher rank, shall have assigned as his running mate that line officer who would have been his running mate had said staff officer been recommended by the selection board which first considered him for the higher rank; except that if the running mate who would be so assigned him be senior to the running mate of an officer in his own staff corps made next senior to him in the higher rank, as determined by the order of their selection for advancement thereto, the running mate assigned him shall be that officer who had been assigned as the running mate of said next senior staff officer on the latter's advancement, and officers of the same staff corps thereby having the same running mate shall have precedence in said higher rank as determined by the order of their selection for advancement thereto: Provided further, That those officers of the staff corps with the rank of captain, who when eligible for consideration by a selection board for the rank of rear admiral, are not selected, shall retain their running mates; and if subsequently advanced to the rank of rear admiral shall have running mates assigned as required by the proviso next preceding. The provisions of this section shall be applicable to the cases of all staff officers now on the active list who have been advanced or have been eligible for consideration by a selection board for advancement to the rank of commander and above since June 10, 1926: And provided further, That no officer shall, by virtue of this section, receive any increased pay or allowances for any period prior to the date of this act.

Sec. 11. That section 4 of the act approved June 10, 1926 (44 Stat. 719; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 34, sec. 348c), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Hereafter all staff officers in the Navy, when of the same rank as their running mates or of the rank for which their running mates have been selected, shall take precedence with all other line and staff officers of the same rank from the dates stated in the commissions or which in due course will be stated in the commissions of their running mates in said rank, and ahead of all line officers junior to their respective running mates. Such staff officers of a higher rank than the rank held by their running mates until their running mates have been selected for such higher rank shall take precedence with all line and staff officers of the rank then held by them in accordance with the date stated in the commission of the junior line officer in such higher rank; staff officers of a lower rank than the rank held by their running mates shall take precedence with all line and staff officers of the same rank in accordance with the dates stated in the commissions that had been held by their running mates in such lower rank, and ahead of all line officers in such rank who were junior therein to their respective running mates: Provided, That except as otherwise provided herein, officers having the same rank and the same date of precedence in that rank shall take precedence in the following order: (a) Line officers, (b) medical officers, (c) officers of the supply corps, (d) chaplains, (e) naval constructors, (f) civil engineers, (g) dental officers: Provided further, That staff officers assigned running mates in accordance with this act, if thereafter assigned new running mates, shall have with respect to other staff officers who also have as their running mates the new running mates so assigned, the precedence held by them prior to the assignment of such new running mates."

SEC. 12. If any staff officer who has been recommended for advancement to the rank of captain or commander by the report of a selection board as approved by the President fails to receive such advancement by reason of failure to qualify upon examination therefor or because of his removal from the active list for any cause, the number to be furnished the next ensuing selection board for the corps and rank concerned shall be increased accordingly.

SEC. 13. That all laws or parts of laws, so far as they are inconsistent with or in conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: On page 3, line 2, strike out the word "once" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twice."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 3, line 20, strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 126.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EMIGRATION OF CERTAIN FILIPINOS

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 6464) to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States, with an amendment.

The Clerk read the bill and the amendment, as follows:

A bill to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States

Be it enacted, etc., That any native Filipino residing in any State or the District of Columbia on the effective date of this act, who desires to return to the Philippine Islands, may apply to the Secretary of Labor, upon such form as the Secretary may prescribe, through any officer of the Immigration Service for the benefits of this act. Upon approval of such application, the Secretary of Labor shall notify such Filipino forthwith, and shall certify to the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War that such Filipino is eligible to be returned to the Philippine Islands under the terms of this act. Every Filipino who is so certified shall be entitled, at the expense of the United States, to transportation and maintenance from his present residence to a port on the west coast of the United States, and from such port, to passage and maintenance to the port of Manila, Philippine Islands, on either Navy or Army transports, whenever space on such transports is available, or on any ship of United States registry operated by a commercial steamship company which has a contract with the Secretary of Labor as provided in section 2.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts with any railroad or other transportation company, for the transportation from their present residences to a port on the west coast of the United States of Filipinos eligible under section 1 to receive such transportation, and with any commercial steamship company, controlled by citizens of the United States and operating ships under United States registry, for transportation and maintenance of such Filipinos from such ports to the port of Manila, Philippine Islands, at such rates as may be agreed upon between the Secretary and such steamship, railroad, or other transportation company.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this act, to enter into the necessary arrangements with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, to fix the ports on the west coast of the United States from which any Filipinos shall be transported and the dates upon which transportation shall be available from such ports, to provide for the identification of the Filipinos entitled to the benefits of this act, and to prevent voluntary interruption of the journey between any port on the west coast of the United States and the port of Manila, Philippine Islands.

SEC. 4. No Filipino who receives the benefits of this act shall be entitled to return to the continental United States.

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. All amounts so appropriated shall be administered by the Secretary of Labor, and all expenses, including those incurred by the Navy and War Departments, shall be charged thereto.

SEC. 6. No application for the benefits of this act shall be accepted by any officer of the Immigration Service after December 1, 1936; and all benefits under this act shall finally terminate on December 31, 1936, unless the journey has been started on or before that date, in which case the journey to Manila shall be completed.

SEC. 7. Nothing in this act shall be construed as authority to deport any native of the Philippine Islands, and no Filipino removed from continental United States under the provisions of this act shall hereafter be held to have been deported from the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was first reported by the committee my opposition to it was based on the ground that there was no section in the bill providing that after the Filipinos had been deported they could not be readmitted. Many of us believed it would not be right to spend the public funds to send these people home if they could return in a short time or at any time. Since then, however, it has been agreed that an amendment would be offered to the bill which would make it impossible for these Filipinos to return to the United States; and with this amendment it occurs to me that this is a good bill.

A great deal has been said on the floor of the House challenging some of the figures I have quoted in reference to the number of aliens who are illegally in the country. The best estimates that I have been able to procure show that there are at this very moment nearly 1,500,000 aliens on public relief.

In the city of New York alone there are 55,000 aliens being supported by public funds; and while we are preparing to spend nearly $5,000,000,000 for the purpose of putting 3,500,000 people to work, it must be interesting to the American people to consider that from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 aliens are living from public funds. There is not another country on the face of the earth that would tolerate this condition. Many other countries have enacted laws providing that no alien can work unless the alien secures a permit to work, and the alien cannot secure that permit if there is any citizen of that country unemployed and capable of filling the job.

We have in this country, according to the best evidence, 7,500,000 aliens, 6,000,000 of whom are deriving their livelihood directly or indirectly from jobs that American citizens could fill and would fill if we had the same laws in this country that are in force in other nations.

The Governor of the great State of Colorado has recently issued a proclamation to the effect that unless the situation is relieved in his State, we will call out the National Guard to rectify it; and the State of California has passed a resolution calling upon the Congress of the United States to deport aliens in that State who came into the United States in defiance of the laws of the land.

It seems to me there could not be any reason why anyone would oppose this bill. The aliens are here; they are willing to leave. They should be provided with funds to leave if at the time they leave we say to them: "You cannot reenter the United States of America." If I had my way about it, and if some Members of the House had their way we would not stop with making it voluntary, we would go further and provide by law that all aliens who defied the laws of this country when they entered, knowing at the time what our laws were, and those who were smuggled in shall be deported. In fact we have figures to show that 500,000 aliens deserted as seamen in the past 13 years and were lost in the population of the United States. In 1900 we had 105,000 Mexicans in the United States; in 1930 we had 1,440,000; in 1920 we had about 457,000 Mexicans; and between 1920 and 1930 we admitted about 416,000 while the census of 1930 showed 1,422,533. Yet there are those who say that the estimate that there are 3,500,000 aliens unlawfully in this country is incorrect, when between 1920 and 1930 more than 500,000 Mexicans entered illegally, and this does not take into consideration the known departures. I would refer them to the records. If they take the number of Mexicans who legally entered the United States from the year 1900 to the year 1930 and compare it with the number who left, according to the records of the Department, and the number shown by the census of 1930 they will get some idea of the number of aliens illegally here. I think, therefore, it is a conservative estimate to say that there are at least 3,500,000 of these aliens in the United States. My own belief is that there are many more. Those who are criminals and those who entered this country unlawfully should be deported the same as Germany deports this class of aliens, the same as France does, the same as England does. There are few enlightened and progressive countries on the face of the earth—and I challenge anybody to deny this statement—that do not provide by law or policy that an alien cannot work so long as there is a citizen of that country capable of holding the job.

I submit that if we are going to use public funds to undertake to put 3,500,000 people to work, we should deport the 3,500,000 aliens unlawfully in our midst, who are either holding jobs or are on relief. Today, in the United States, we are perplexed and struggling with the unemployment problems which were transferred to the United States from foreign lands.

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I have such a bill now pending before the Committee on Labor.

I would like for my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, to insist that the bill be reported out, in order that we may have an opportunity to vote on it here in the House.

Mr. DIES. I will tell the gentleman what we are going to do. We are going to have an opportunity to vote on these bills in this House. There is no use for anyone to undertake by subterfuge or parliamentary strategy to continue to delay this matter. I have bills pending before the Immigration Committee that I have not been able to secure a hearing on. There is none of us who is harsh or inhuman about this matter. In my bill I have provided methods to reunite families under proper safeguards, if they are not public charges, and do not take jobs away from American citizens. In the United States today there are about 16,500,000 foreign born. Anyone with any mathematical accuracy at all may figure out that if they had been refused admission there would not be any serious unemployment problem in the United States today.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If I understand my colleague, who is posted on this subject, there are 16,000,000 foreign-born people today in the United States?

Mr. DIES. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. There are 6,500,000 aliens who are now holding jobs here or else are on relief?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman said, and it is a fact, the best evidence we have here is that there are 3,500,000 aliens unlawfully in this country?

Mr. DIES. That is true. I can prove by the figures of the Department itself and by simple mathematics that there are 3,500,000 aliens in this country unlawfully. When we undertake to provide for adequate deportation laws, there are some who say, "Oh, you are narrow minded and bigoted." They say it is based on racial prejudice or religious bigotry. Those statements are made in spite of the fact that every other country today is deporting such aliens. France has deported thousands of aliens. You talk about France not having an unemployment problem. One reason that France has only 313,000 unemployed, as compared with our 10,000,000 unemployed, is that France writes on your passport when you go there "Not good for any salaried job" and she has been deporting them and sending them across the border. Under the laws of Germany when you live in that country today they can make you transfer your property to Germany and accept marks in return. Germany will not permit an alien to hold a job so long as there is a German citizen to fill it. The same thing is true in the Netherlands and even Mexico will not admit anyone unless they can show they have 20,000 pesos and they cannot take a job there that a native Mexican can fill. In England, Belgium, and other enlightened nations aliens cannot hold jobs which their own citizens can fill.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SADOWSKI. What was the population of this country in 1873?

Mr. DIES. The population of this country after the War between the States was 31,000,000 people. Of that 31,000,000 people one-eighth was foreign stock. Today one-third of your population is foreign stock. I have no prejudice against them.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Will the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. DIES. I have answered the question.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Does the gentleman know what our population was in 1873?

Mr. DIES. I have answered the gentleman's question. After the War between the States the population was about 31,000,000. There was not much immigration between 1860 and 1873.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my colleague the distinguished gentleman from Texas 5 minutes additional.

Mr. SADOWSKI. We had a great depression in 1873. Our population then was about 30,000,000 less than it is now.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman is an advocate of the theory that the more people you get here the more consumers you will have.

Mr. SADOWSKI. No; I do not advocate that, but the gentleman's argument is not logical when he says that the depression is caused by the great volume of foreign-born people here.

Mr. DIES. I did not say the depression was caused by immigration. We might have had a depression anyway. I do say to the gentleman and to all people that if we had refused admission to the 16,500,000 foreign born in our midst today we would not have the serious unemployment which we do have.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I want to make myself clear. I am not opposing this Filipino bill. But the gentleman's argument is not logical when he says that the depression is because of the fact that we have so many foreign-born people here. That argument does not make sense.

Mr. DIES. I did not say that. I said if we had not admitted the 16,500,000 we would not have 10,000,000 unemployed. If the gentleman understands ordinary mathematics, he can figure that out for himself. I am not saying this in prejudice to the Jew or the Italian or anyone else. I say it is in the interest of the naturalized citizens of this country just the same as it is in the interest of the native-born citizens that we exclude these people in the future.

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BEAM. I was interested in the statement of the gentleman that there were 16,000,000 foreign born in America.

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. BEAM. How many are naturalized?

Mr. DIES. Of the 16,000,000 foreign born, all but about 7,500,000.

Mr. BEAM. Does the gentleman feel that when a foreign-born citizen comes over here and subscribes to our citizenship oath and becomes naturalized he should not be entitled under the American form of Government to the same rights as the native born?

Mr. DIES. I said nothing of the kind. When a man becomes a citizen of this country he is a citizen. I am not talking about those. I am talking about the aliens who are illegally and unlawfully in this country, the ones who ought to be deported. Now, I am not going to enter into an argument on this subject. If the gentleman will ask me a question I will answer it.

Mr. BEAM. I want to get the gentleman's thought, to which the House is entitled. If a man is naturalized in America and takes the oath of allegiance to the American flag, is he entitled to the same privileges and prerogatives of the ordinary native-born American citizen?

Mr. DIES. Yes. What I say is not directed in a spirit of prejudice or bias toward the naturalized citizens of this country. What I say to the gentleman is that the naturalized citizens, the same as the native-born citizens of this country, are entitled to the same protection that other countries give their citizens.

I want to say to the gentleman right now, according to your State Department there are 970,000 aliens who will enter the United States when the administrative temporary restriction, which was put into effect in 1930, is relaxed; and it is being relaxed, according to the State Department's own admission. What I do say to the gentleman is that neither you nor any other man can permanently cure the problem of unemployment as long as you admit to this country new-seed immigration, and I am not talking about the matter of reuniting families under proper safeguards.

Mr. BEAM. I want to ask the gentleman—

Mr. DIES. I am making this speech—the gentleman can get his own time.

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. BEAM. Just one second, because this is important. The gentleman stated there are 16,000,000 foreign born here and that if they had not been admitted there would be no depression, and then the gentleman—

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield.

Mr. BEAM. Then the gentleman states they are entitled to all the rights—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman from Illinois should obey the rules.

Mr. DIES. While we are on this point why not be frank and sincere about this question? Why is it we are not permitted in this House to vote on the question of whether or not we are going to permanently close, lock, and bar the gates of this country to new-seed immigration, deport aliens unlawfully here, and give the jobs to Americans? Why not make available, under your quota, admissions solely for the purpose of reuniting your families under proper safeguards, and why not by vigorous enforcement and adequate legislation deport those who are unlawfully in this country and get rid of them, as well as new-seed immigration, if you want to solve the problem of unemployment? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the return to the Philippine Islands of Filipinos who desire to go there, the expense to be paid by the United States Government. There is no compulsion about it. Government transports will be used to carry them.

Heretofore I have been opposed to this bill because it carried a provision to the effect that some of the Filipinos benefited thereunder might come back. And I have opposed it for other reasons also. The proponents of this bill today have agreed with me on an amendment to the effect that none of these Filipinos who take advantage of this act shall ever be permitted to come back. With this amendment added, speaking only for myself, I have withdrawn the opposition I have heretofore manifested to the bill. It might be interesting for you to know that the Filipinos are not permitted to become citizens. Their offspring may become citizens if born here. Now that they are getting their independence and as a nation rather favor this bill, it is likely there will be no soreness about it.

I do not know that it is absolutely the proper thing to do to pass this bill but in view of the fact there is so much unemployment, and in view of the fact there are so many Filipinos who want to go back, and in view of the fact there are so many of them on relief, I do not know why it would not be a good thing to send them back. Those who are interested in these problems advocated the measure and, consequently, I am ready to withdraw my objection. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. BLANTON. And, Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the proposal of this bill has been before my committee for 3 years. We came to this House a number of years ago, appealed to the wisdom of the House to give this relief by repatriating the Filipinos, and we have, as a result of that consideration, accomplished something.

After my bill (H. J. Res. 71) was objected to this session on the last Consent Calendar day, the matter was discussed with me by the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER] and he suggested reporting out a new bill. I did not hesitate a minute to question whether it came from this side of the aisle or the other side of the aisle, and the committee reported out the Welch bill which is along practically the same lines as the Dickstein bill, except for the fact there are some provisions in this measure differing from the other bill quite extensively. However, this bill is a very good bill and I think this House ought to pass it today.

I think it is entirely unfair for some Members to say that they would like to send all the aliens out of the country. If you read the speech I made a few weeks ago you have seen that I have given you figures which I based upon facts of the last census, and the figures ascertained from the last census do not compare with the figures given by my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

The records of the 1930 Census with added figures secured from the Labor Department for subsequent years, which I stated in my earlier speech, show in round figures the following.

In 1930 there was found to be about 14,204,150 persons of foreign birth residing in the United States and Territories. Many of these foreign-born residents had come here 10, 15, 20, or 30 years ago and about 9,185,950 of them had become citizens or had filed their declarations of intention to become citizens—over 7,915,950 had become fully naturalized citizens and about 1,270,000 had filed their declarations of intention—so that in the census there were found here only about 6,018,200 persons of foreign birth who had not at that time become citizens or made declarations of intention to become citizens. These were the only real aliens in the United States when the 1930 census was taken.

Of these, it is estimated that perhaps 248,200 have since died, and further reduction resulted by the fact that since 1930 there have been about 230,000 more foreign-born persons left the United States than there were foreign-born persons admitted into the United States. In addition the records indicate that since the 1930 census was taken, about 657,125 foreign-born persons have become citizens under some part of our naturalization laws and perhaps 882,875 have now filed their declarations of intention to become citizens.

Most of these foreign-born persons are self-reliant, self-supporting, law-abiding residents; many of them, especially those of them who are citizens or declarants, hold positions of responsibility both in private business and in government activities.

So I cannot see the logic of the arguments when you say that if we had not let these 14,204,150 foreign-born persons, who were here in 1930, come into this country—only about 4,000,000 of whom are now actually aliens—we would now have 14,000,000 jobs for American workmen who were born here. I suppose if we had no Indians here, we might then have plenty of work now in the United States; and we might give a number of similar illustrations which would show all such talk is all tommyrot.

If an alien has been permitted under our laws to come here and is behaving himself in our midst, and is subscribing to our laws and Constitution, I state that he has committed no wrong; and I say further that, even if he has not yet chosen to take the first steps under our laws toward becoming a citizen, he is entitled to the protection and equal opportunity under our laws, and is entitled also to the proper protection of the provisions, as an alien, of section 20 of the act of March 4, 1909. (See sec. 52 under title 18 of the United States Code, on p. 462 of 44 Stat. pt. 1.) I claim we should legislate to help him in any desire he may have, to become a citizen rather than blame him for the economic difficulties of this country.

I reiterate that I doubt if there are more than 4,000,000 persons of foreign birth now in the United States who were lawfully admitted under our immigration laws and who at this time have not either become citizens or filed declarations to become citizens; in other words, still are, properly speaking, aliens here.

I know of no way that anything like an accurate estimate can be made to show the number of foreign-born persons in the United States who have come here without being lawfully admitted under some provisions of our immigration laws.

Why pick on the alien all the time, simply because he is foreign born? They are entitled to the protection of our laws. What you ought to do now is to pick on the criminal who is an alien, and I am here to cooperate with the House to deport all these alien criminals who are in the United States, irrespective of the number of crimes that may have been committed since their arrival in this country.

My committee has before it at the present time a bill that will do that very thing. It will create a power in departments to deport all alien habitual criminals in the United States to their respective native countries, and, once deported, they will have to stay out of the United States. This bill, I sincerely hope, will be reported next week. That answers the question of my friend Mr. Dies and others who want to deport these alien criminals, but for humanity sake let us not disturb families whose breadwinner is in the non-criminal classes and who has in many cases been here 15 to 20 years. In the first place, you could not now deport them, and, in the second place, you have no law under which you could deport them, because they have committed no wrong or criminal act in this country.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman certainly sees a distinction between aliens legally here and those illegally here? Is the gentleman in favor of deporting all aliens who are illegally in the United States?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am prepared to deport from the United States those who have violated any law—

Mr. DIES. Those illegally in the country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Those illegally in the country, with a criminal record against them.

Mr. DIES. Then, why talk about citizens?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, the gentleman brought up the question of citizenship himself, and he said that if we had not permitted these 16,000,000 aliens to come here we would have 16,000,000 jobs for Americans. I say that that argument is beside the point. The gentleman will recall that a year ago I brought a bill up on this floor during the last days of the Seventy-third Congress, under suspension of the rules. That meritorious bill was defeated because most of the Members voting did not know, at that last minute, what the real purpose of the bill was. The bill was to gather in the alien gunman and the dope peddler and the alien racketeer for deportation, irrespective of whether those aliens had committed, been convicted and sentenced to 1 year or more for each of one, two, or more felonies involving moral turpitude, which the present law now requires.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman in favor of deporting all aliens who are here unlawfully?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am ready to deport all aliens who are here unlawfully since we passed the basic act of 1924, and who have a criminal record against them.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman report out a bill of that kind?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We are considering one such now.

Mr. BLANTON. To deport all aliens who are here unlawfully?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. All aliens who have violated our laws since 1924.

Mr. BLANTON. Leave out the question of violation of the law after they come here. I mean all aliens who are here unlawfully.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am prepared to bring out a bill to this Congress to deport all criminal aliens who came here after July 1, 1924.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me ask one question. Leaving out the matter of criminals, there are aliens here unlawfully. Is the gentleman in favor of deporting all aliens who are here unlawfully?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am again going to present a bill to the House and let the House pass on the question.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not willing to state his own opinion on that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is a long question. If I had more time I would give you my personal position upon the matter, but I am willing to abide by the will of the House.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. An alien who comes here lawfully is an alien who has a passport and a visa.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. With proper immigration inspection at our ports of entry.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Prior to 1880 how many aliens came to the United States with a passport and visa?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There were no passports and no visas in those days.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. So that the distinction between lawful and unlawful is a matter of red tape.

Mr. RICH. Why should anybody, regardless of where they came from, who has lived in America for a period of 10 years or more and who does not wish to subscribe to all of the rules and regulations and laws of the country, be permitted to stay in this country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am in sympathy with the gentleman and I agree with him. We have a bill that will be soon reported out, of which Mr. Dies is the author, which deals with both Fascists and Communists, and will give us a chance to deport them, as well as keep them out in the first place.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I think there has been a great deal of conversation which does not apply to the purposes of the bill. There has been a great deal of discussion on matters that were foreign to this bill. This bill gives an opportunity to send Filipinos in the United States and in the District of Columbia to the Philippine Islands, and will relieve the employment situation on the Pacific coast, and throughout the United States, and even here in the Capital. Those people are costing us now on the Pacific coast, in the matter of relief, about $150,000 a month, and it would be a humanitarian act to send these Filipinos back home; a great many of them want to go back to their native land.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRAMER. Yes; I yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. KENNEY. This bill would permit any natives of the Philippine Islands to go back there, whether they be citizens of the United States or not.

Mr. KRAMER. Yes, sir; exactly so.

Mr. KENNEY. The idea is that these gentlemen have asked to go back there, thinking their future would be better in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. KRAMER. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. I ask the gentleman whether or not the Philippine Islands are not prospering over there under a state lottery, permitted under the American flag?

Mr. KRAMER. I could not answer as to that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely regret that this humanitarian measure has offered an excuse to bring before the House at this time the entire immigration question.

The purpose of the bill under consideration, H. R. 6464, is to repatriate or return to the Philippine Islands thousands of unemployed and destitute Filipinos. As stated before, it is a decidedly humanitarian measure, and an economic one as well. From the most reliable information possible—and I refer to the United States Department of Labor Immigration Bureau—there are at this time approximately 65,000 Filipinos in the United States. About half of that number are in the State of California. The remainder are spread throughout the large cities of this country. Twenty thousand of them have indicated a desire to be returned home at the expense of our Government.

Mr. Speaker, we should remember that our Government is responsible for the presence of the Filipinos in this country.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELCH. I will be glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that the sugar planters of the Hawaiian Islands brought thousands of these men from the Philippine Islands?

Mr. WELCH. I am going to reach that point. Under the Treaty of Paris between this country and Spain, the Filipinos were granted unrestricted entry into this country. The Hawaiian sugar plantation and mill owners lured thousands of them from the Philippine Islands to the Hawaiian Islands. Selfish employers of labor brought them to this country. In my district in San Francisco, during the prosperous period before the depression, they were paid $2.16 a day in light industry, taking the places of men who had passed their prime, women, and boys. Therefore we are responsible for their presence here.

Before the depression the fact that they were taking the places of American labor brought about bitter feelings. Since the depression, with millions of Americans walking the streets, that feeling has been intensified to such a degree that their employers were forced to dispense with their labor, thereby forcing them on relief rolls. Nearly all of these Filipinos are young men. They have been shuffled around from pillar to post until they are objects of pity. They are our wards and have been for 35 years and will continue to be for 10 more long years. Therefore we are duty bound, as I see it, to send them to their homes, where they will be provided for by their relatives and friends.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope this very worthy measure will pass.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back 1 minute.

The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, much good has been accomplished by the fight that was made upon this bill. I want to compliment the gentleman from California, [Mr. KRAMER] and his colleague from California, the author of the bill, on agreeing to an amendment that has been put in the bill. The bill now is amended by a good amendment that prevents these Filipinos from ever coming back to continental United States. That is one of the things we have been fighting for, and concerning which our fight has been successful. Of course, with that amendment the bill is not so objectionable as it was before.

There is a bad precedent that will be established by this bill that I dislike to see established in the United States, that is, to pay the way back of aliens who want to take a trip home voluntarily. Whenever we start that, what is our chairman going to do if these 3,500,000 unlawful aliens say, "Pay our way back and let us go"? Of course, I want to get rid of them, but what would he do if these other 6,500,000 who are here lawfully should want their way paid back? When he gets through he will be having a May Day picnic for about 10,000,000 aliens going back to a foreign country. If we could send them back there and if we could keep them there like we are keeping these Filipinos, I would say well and good; it is money well spent; let us get rid of them. Let us keep American jobs in this country for the unemployed Americans who are entitled to the jobs and whose families are suffering now because of the unemployment.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I have already yielded most of my time. I am sorry. I want to use my few minutes, please.

What are we going to do with this question? I asked the chairman a fair question, "Are you in favor of deporting these 3,500,000 aliens who came in here unlawfully?" He said, "Well, yes; if they committed crimes." Why not "yes" without that proviso? If they came in here unlawfully, why do we not make them go back, for they did not comply with the law? Why can we not get that kind of a bill passed? Between now and Monday I am going to send a bill to the gentleman's committee to require the deportation of every alien in the United States who is here unlawfully.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield for unauthorized points of order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman does not have to yield. I am making a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, my argument conforms to the rules and is not subject to any point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. May I submit my point of order? My point of order is that the gentleman is not confining his remarks to the bill, which provides for the repatriation of Filipinos. He is now discussing the general immigration question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to be talking about immigration. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I think myself the gentleman has put his finger on the spot and that we are probably starting on a policy which will ultimately result in the deportation of 3,500,000 people. Now, he says they committed a crime when they came into this country illegally. I am not talking about the Filipinos but about those who are here unlawfully. If they were convicted of that crime, then the United States would have to pay the expenses of their deportation. Is not that right?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; we would. That is the reason I am saying it is money well spent if we can get the committee to bring in a bill to send back every alien who is here unlawfully.

I am going to send the committee of the gentleman from New York another bill that will require every alien in the United States within 60 days after the passage of that bill to register and show at what port of entry he came into the United States, where he came from, how long he has been here, and what he is doing, what kind of a job he is holding, for whom he is working, whether or not he is on relief, and making it a felony and ground for deportation if he fails to register within the 60 days, and to deport all aliens here unlawfully. Is that a good bill?

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I have that very amendment in the bill before the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to send him that bill and send him a little bouquet with it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will it be a bouquet of nice flowers?

Mr. BLANTON. A little bouquet of nice flowers to make it look inviting, and I ask from the gentleman consideration of that bill.

This bill now under consideration is going to cost $900,000. There are 30,000 Filipinos, and the estimate I have gotten is that it will cost $30 a piece to send them home. This will make $900,000 to send home the 30,000 Filipinos who are staying here.

I am sorry; I cannot yield.

Mr. Speaker, two whole big election precincts in my district are made up of foreign-born citizens and their descendants; every voter in those precincts is of foreign extraction; yet every one of them is in favor right now of stopping new-seed immigration. They want this country for the benefit of Americans, both native-born and naturalized; they want it for the benefit of their children and their children's children; and many are writing me: "Mr. BLANTON, we are behind your fight to protect this country against new-seed immigration."

Why, after you pass this bill and spend $900,000 to send these 30,000 Filipinos back home, they still have a quota. Fifty Filipinos can come in here every year.

Under the existing law the Philippine Islands have a quota of 50. Fifty Filipinos can come over here every year.

Mr. KRAMER. Not these.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, not these, because of the amendment I got put on the bill. Why does the gentleman want to mix up tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee? The chairman of the committee [Mr. DICKSTEIN] admits that 50 Filipinos can come in here every year under their quota. If you are going to spend $900,000 to get Filipinos out of the country why do you want to let any come in? Why do you not pass a bill to stop it from now on?

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH]. I have already yielded the gentleman 5 minutes of my time. I should think he would appreciate my kindness in having yielded to him.

Mr. Speaker, I do not yield. I ask that these interruptions be not taken out of my time.

Go from the United States to the Philippines, even as an immigrant, and see if it does not cost $30. The estimate that I got was that it would cost $30 a piece to send these 30,000 Filipinos back home, or the sum of $900,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill be passed?

The question was taken, and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ANNIVERSARY OF ADOPTION OF ORDINANCE OF 1787 AND SETTLEMENT OF NORTHWEST TERRITORY

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House Joint Resolution 208, to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787 and the settlement of the Northwest Territory, as amended.

The Clerk read the bill, as amended, as follows:

Joint resolution to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787 and the settlement of the Northwest Territory

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission to be known as the "Northwest Territory Celebration Commission" (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") and to be composed of 14 commissioners, as follows: The President of the United States; 2 Members of the Senate, 1 from each of the two major parties, to be appointed by the President of the Senate; 2 Members of the House of Representatives, 1 from each of the two major parties, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; the Regent of the State chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution of each of the 6 States formed from the Northwest Territory, namely, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota; and 3 individuals from private life, to be appointed by the President of the United States. The commissioners shall serve without compensation and shall select a chairman from among their number.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Commission to prepare and carry out a comprehensive plan for the observance and celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787 and the settlement of the Northwest Territory. In the preparation of such plan, the Commission shall cooperate, insofar as is possible, with the several States and particularly with the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, and shall take such steps as may be necessary in the coordination and correlation of plans prepared by State commissions, by agencies appointed by the governors of the several States, and by representative civic organizations.

SEC. 3. (a) Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the Commission is authorized to appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the compensation (not to exceed $5,000 per annum) of a director and such other employees as are necessary in the execution of its functions.

(b) The Commission may make such expenditures as are necessary to carry out the intent and purposes of this resolution, including all necessary traveling expenses and subsistence expenses incurred by the commissioners.

(c) The Commission shall cease to exist within 6 months after the date of the expiration of the celebration.

SEC. 4. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. JENKINS of Ohio rose.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] opposed to the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am opposed to the bill with the last amendment in it. I want the bill to provide for $100,000 and not for $75,000. I think this project is a big thing and is worthy of Government support.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] opposed to the whole bill?

Mr. TRUAX. I am opposing the bill as it will be offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the qualification of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill as it reads at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], a member of the minority.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Alabama which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Joint Resolution 67

Whereas United States Senator JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD, of Alabama, and Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, of Alabama, distinguished representatives of this State in the Halls of the Congress in Washington, prepared and secured the enactment of legislation known as the "Bankhead Cotton Control Act", which act has proved to have aided the cotton farmers of this Nation far along the road to economic recovery by the limitation of production, as well as the establishment of prices; and

Whereas we as citizens of the State of Alabama, many of us cotton farmers, have been directly benefited by the passage of the Bankhead Cotton Control Act; and

Whereas every Alabamian is proud of the national service rendered by the two Bankhead brothers, John and Will, in securing the enactment of beneficial legislation for American cotton farmers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Alabama (the senate concurring):

First. That we hereby express our appreciation to Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD and Representative WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD for the magnificent fight made by them for the enactment of the Bankhead Cotton Control Act, which has proved of such great worth to Alabama and American cotton farmers; be it further

Resolved, That we as a body, urge them to continue the fight which they have begun for securing the ultimate economic freedom of the Alabama and American cotton farmers; be it

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state of Alabama, after approval by the Governor, to the President of the United States, and to Senator BANKHEAD and Representative BANKHEAD, at their respective offices in Washington, D. C.; that a copy be sent to the President of the United States Senate for inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; to the Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries of the State of Alabama, and the president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, and that copies be given to the press, so that all may know of the respect for and love of Alabama for its distinguished public servants.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

House Resolution 52

Whereas the Government of the United States of America has on many occasions issued commemorative postage stamps in honor of foreign-born heroes for their patriotic services to this Nation, such as the Norwegian immigrant stamp, the John Ericson stamp, the General Pulaski stamp, the General Kosciuszko stamp, and others; and

Whereas the name and fame of Commodore John Barry, historically known as the "Father of the American Navy", and one of its most successful commanders, is universally revered, especially by the people of Irish blood: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That we herewith earnestly petition the United States Congress to enact the legislation now before it providing for the issuance on July 9, 1935, of a special commemorative postage stamp in honor of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the termination of Commodore John Barry's services with the American Revolutionary forces; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, United States Senators LEWIS and DIETRICH, and to the Members of Congress representing Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Whereas section 76 of the Organic Act of the Territory of Hawaii provides "it shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Labor to collect, assort, arrange, and present in reports in 1905, and every 5 years thereafter, statistical details relating to all departments of labor in the Territory of Hawaii, especially in relation to the commercial, industrial, social, educational, and sanitary conditions of the laboring classes, and to all such other subjects as Congress may by law direct. The said commissioner is especially charged to ascertain the highest, lowest, and average number of employees engaged in the various industries in the Territory, to be classified as to nativity, sex, hours of labor, and conditions of employment, and to report the same to Congress"; and

Whereas the United States Government has failed to send to the Territory of Hawaii a United States Labor Commissioner, or his deputy, or anyone else with authority to secure and prepare the statistics and other data provided for in said section 76 of said Organic Act; and

Whereas both labor and employer in the Territory of Hawaii have suffered through the failure of the United States Government to provide us with a United States Labor Commissioner: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Eighteenth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Secretary of Labor be memorialized and requested to appoint and send to the Territory of Hawaii a United States Labor Commissioner with full authority to perform the usual duties of a labor commissioner and to prepare the statistics called for in said section 76 of the said organic act; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of Labor of the United States, to the Attorney General of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to provide for the issuance, by the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Labor, of certificates of citizenship to all persons residing in the Territory of Hawaii who are citizens of the United States and who apply for such certificates and present due proof of such citizenship, and to provide for the appointment of a commission to present this resolution before the Congress of the United States, and to make available to the said commission an appropriation to defray its expenses

Whereas, through the cooperation of the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Labor of the United States, provision has been made by said Bureau for the issuance to citizens of the United States in the Territory of Hawaii who are about to travel to continental United States and/or to other portions of the world of certificates of citizenship for the purpose of facilitating travel by such persons; and

Whereas such action on the part of said Bureau has been and is greatly appreciated by the people of the Territory of Hawaii and has assisted and is assisting in alleviating the hardships heretofore imposed upon citizens of the Territory of Hawaii and of the United States, particularly those of oriental ancestry, in traveling to other portions of the United States and of the world; but

Whereas such certificates are not issued unless and until applicants therefor contemplate traveling to other portions of the United States or the world within the near future and persons who do not so contemplate such travel are unable to secure such certificates, and there is danger, in the case of citizens not contemplating such travel, that the necessary proof of their birth in the Hawaiian Islands or other facts necessary to establish their citizenship in the United States will be lost by death or removal from the Territory of Hawaii of witnesses who can testify to such facts or otherwise; and

Whereas due to the large number of persons of oriental or Polynesian ancestry in the Hawaiian Islands born therein or otherwise entitled to citizenship in the United States and to the historical background of said islands, the conditions in said islands relating to the necessity for the certification of the citizenship of such persons are unique and require special treatment due to their unusual character; and

Whereas the certification of the citizenship of such persons, upon due application and proof being made therefor, regardless of the presence or absence of intention on the part of such persons to travel in the immediate future is a matter of vital importance to the young citizens, particularly those of oriental ancestry, in the Territory of Hawaii, and if provided for will tend to produce greater security and satisfaction in such citizenship and will tend to create better and more loyal citizens of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, urgently requested to provide by appropriate and adequate legislation for the certification of the citizenship of all persons residing in the Territory of Hawaii who are citizens of the United States and who apply for such certification to the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Labor of the United States and furnish due proof of such citizenship regardless of the presence or absence of any intention on the part of such applicants to travel in the immediate future; and providing that the possession by an applicant of certificates of Hawaiian birth, duly issued by the proper territorial officials pursuant to law, shall be prima-facie evidence of such citizenship.

SEC. 2. That duly authenticated copies of this joint resolution be transmitted to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Labor of the United States, and each of the two Houses of the Congress of the United States of America.

SEC. 3. That the Governor be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a commission composed of three members to proceed to Washington, D. C., to present this resolution to, and to work toward its enactment into law by, the Congress of the United States of America, if deemed advisable.

SEC. 4. That the sum of $10,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated out of the general revenues of the Territory of Hawaii to defray the expenses of the said commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the General Court of Massachusetts, memorializing Congress to make additional appropriations for use by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in continuing its activities, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See resolutions printed in full when presented by Mr. WALSH on the 20th inst., p. 7784, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of the State of New Jersey, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

INVESTIGATIONS OF PERSECUTIONS IN MEXICO

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present a memorandum prepared at the instance of the National Committee for the Defense of American Rights in Mexico in support of Senate Resolution 70, providing for a senatorial investigation of religious persecutions in Mexico and of alleged violations of the rights of American citizens by the Mexican Government.

The memorandum or brief deals at length with several aspects of this question. In addition to a presentation of the historical background of religious persecutions in Mexico, the brief sets forth numerous legal precedents which it is claimed warrant favorable action on the resolution (S. Res. 70) pending before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. These precedents are enumerated under three classifications, namely, international law, legislative, and executive.

Another section of the brief deals with facts which it is claimed support favorable action upon the resolution. Specific cases of violations of American rights in Mexico and also facts concerning general conditions of religious persecutions in Mexico are enumerated in considerable detail.

The memorandum also calls attention to alleged interference with American rights within the confines of continental United States.

The resolutions adopted by the legislatures of six States favoring the resolution and references to the protest of conditions in Mexico by many thousands of citizens are also set forth.

I ask that the memorandum be treated in the nature of a petition and be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the memorandum in the nature of a petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

COTTON IN BRAZIL—ARTICLE BY P. K. NORRIS

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interesting article, entitled "Cotton in Brazil", by Mr. P. K. Norris, of the Foreign Agricultural Service Division, United States Department of Agriculture. The article was published in the Southern Agriculturist of the issue of May 1935.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IT MAY SEEM FOOLISH, BUT OUR COTTON GROWERS HAVE GOT TO WATCH COTTON IN BRAZIL

(By P. K. Norris, of the Foreign Agricultural Service Division, U. S. Department of Agriculture)

Cotton production in Brazil is on the increase. It has been for several years. But we don't know yet just how much this increase threatens the American producer. I recently returned from a 6 months' study of the Brazilian cotton situation. Having been reared in the American Cotton Belt, and having served for 7 years as county agent among cotton farmers, I naturally viewed expansion possibilities in Brazil from the standpoint of land, climate, labor, credit, gin facilities, transportation, and other factors that usually influence cotton production and expansion. Here, briefly, is what I found:

Brazil is bigger than the United States. She has been growing cotton for over 200 years. Instead of one big cotton belt such as we have in this country, Brazil has two separate and distinct cotton belts—one in the northeastern part of the country and another in the south. The famous Brazilian tree cotton is produced in the northeastern belt, while American Upland cotton is produced in the southern belt. Cotton is the big cash crop in the northeastern belt, while coffee is the leading cash crop in the southern belt—and for Brazil as a whole.

The northeastern belt is at present the biggest producer of cotton; but the southern belt has greater possibilities for expansion, as has been demonstrated in the last few years. Rainfall, labor, and transportation are the limiting factors in the northeastern belt; labor and the difference between the price of cotton and the price of coffee are the factors that usually control production in the southern belt.

THE NORTHEASTERN BELT

There were about 1,500,000 acres in cotton in northeastern Brazil in 1933-34, and the production was 468,000 bales, which was slightly above the average. The interior of the northeastern cotton belt is a semidesert subject to long periods of extremely dry weather. During these dry periods the thinly settled population is forced to migrate to the coastal belt, where the people engage in the production of cotton and sugarcane, or work in the towns. American upland cotton is produced along the coast where rains are plentiful; the perennial tree cotton predominates in the interior.

When farmers migrate from the coast, after a period of good rains in the interior, they often take along some of the American Upland cottonseed and use it to replant the tree cotton killed by the drought. This is responsible for the irregularity of the staple in the northeastern belt. There is often as much as 30 percent waste in a bale of northeastern cotton, due to the irregularity of the lint.

The northeastern belt is not only thinly settled, but conditions are not attractive to immigrants. Transportation facilities in this section are far from modern. Railroads extend back from the principal towns for a hundred or so miles, but the service is irregular and slow, and freight rates are high. Cotton is now carried long distances by animal pack trains, or ox wagons. The cost of cotton production in northeastern Brazil is apt to be high until this section has a better system of transportation.

While the development of a system of grading and marketing—under government supervision—has done much to stimulate cotton production in northeastern Brazil, on the whole, I doubt if production will remain permanently high. Weather and the prices of cotton and competing crops are factors that are apt to cause cotton production to fluctuate a great deal in northeastern Brazil.

BUT IN SOUTHERN BRAZIL

In southern Brazil the story is different. The soils of this area resemble the Piedmont soils of the United States. Where they have been planted to cotton they have produced it. Compared with the size of our own Cotton Belt, the area that is devoted to cotton production in southern Brazil is not large, only about 1,113,000 acres in 1933-34, but that is nearly twice the acreage of the previous year. The area of southern Brazil is about equal to our own Cotton Belt west of the Mississippi River plus the States of Alabama and Mississippi. Much of this land is now devoted to the production of coffee, corn, and other food crops; but great stretches are in virgin forests and prairies, uninhabited and undeveloped. I estimate that from 5 to 10 percent of this vast area could be made to produce cotton; but it will take time, capital, and more labor than is now available to bring all of this potential cotton land into cotton production. Whether or not this will ever happen, or when it will happen, depends on a great many factors—more than we have space to discuss in this article.

On the whole, the climate of southern Brazil is favorable to cotton production. The rainfall is usually ample. Some years the rains continue so far into the fall that it makes picking difficult. There have been years when this has resulted in considerable damage to the crop. We sometimes have the same condition in parts of our own belt. I might add that on account of climatic differences southern Brazil is harvesting her cotton crop when we are planting ours.

About half of Brazil's 40,000,000 people live in southern Brazil, and about 80 percent of these live in the four cotton-growing States. Most of the people are of Portuguese descent, but there is a mingling of native Indian and Negro blood, and that of immigrants from Italy, Spain, Germany, and Japan. It is estimated that Japanese grew about 42 percent of the 1933-34 cotton crop in Sao Paulo, the biggest cotton-producing State. It is now officially estimated that the 1933-34 cotton crop in southern Brazil will be about 500,000 bales, which is twice the production of the previous year.

While cotton production in Brazil, particularly southern Brazil, has increased rapidly in the last few years, the lack of suitable labor, transportation, and gin facilities are a few of several factors that will probably have a tendency to slow it down. Coffee, as most people know, is the big cash crop in southern Brazil, and there isn't enough labor to produce and harvest a big crop of coffee and a big crop of cotton at the same time. Transportation in the southern cotton belt is the best in Brazil, but it is already severely taxed, and additional increases in the production of cotton, coffee, corn, and other crops that have to be moved from place to place is bound to result in delays and confusion until there is a further development of the transportation systems. Cotton gins were severely taxed to handle the increased crop of 1933-34. In fact, the gins were so far behind that they were still running when the 1934-35 crop was being planted. Many of the present gins are not only small but are in poor repair. However, the imports of gin machinery are helping that situation but it is a problem that it will take time and capital to solve.

LABOR AND FINANCE

Coffee is the most important cash crop in Brazil. She produces the bulk of the world's coffee crop, and 80 percent of it is produced in 3 of the 4 cotton-producing States in southern Brazil. There is a well-established system for financing coffee producers but almost no system for financing cotton producers, particularly the small farmer.

Labor is the limiting factor in the production of either cotton or coffee; and since there isn't enough labor to produce and harvest a big crop of both at the same time, because the harvest seasons are the same for both crops, farmers usually turn their efforts to the crop that pays best. Cotton production has been on the increase for a number of years mainly because the price of coffee has been low. Since the Brazilian farmers prefer to grow coffee, it isn't hard to imagine what would happen if and when the price of coffee returns to a more profitable point than cotton.

But there is this factor that must not be overlooked: Once suitable credit, good ginning facilities, transportation, and other cotton-production factors are established, it will be easier to expand and harder to let go. In other words, many Brazilian farmers who are growing cotton now because of unfavorable conditions in coffee production may decide to continue in the production of cotton, or in the production of both coffee and cotton, provided the labor supply increases enough to handle both crops.

BRAZIL'S TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Brazil's cotton-textile industry has developed rapidly in the last 10 years. It is now the leading industry of the country. Her 369 mills, totaling more than 2,500,000 spindles, produce from 90 to 95 percent of the country's textile requirements. It takes between 400,000 and 500,000 bales of cotton to meet the domestic mill demand; and the ready market for cotton to meet this local mill demand is doubtless another reason for the rapid increase in production in the last few years. This, I believe, is particularly true in southern Brazil where the citizens pride themselves on producing their own needs. In the past only about 10 or 15 percent of the Brazilian cotton crop has been available for export, most of which has gone to Great Britain, Germany, Portugal, and France.

Briefly, it appears to me after making this study, that Brazil with its domestic market for something like 500,000 bales annually will, particularly as long as the present price relationship between cotton and coffee and the present exchange with foreign countries exist, continue to produce comparatively large crops of cotton—that is, large for Brazil. Naturally, production may and probably will fluctuate from year to year; but on the whole I believe the trend will be upward.

Southern Brazil has the land and the climate for producing cotton. There is no question about that. And the quality of the southern Brazilian cotton crop, where the biggest increases are occurring and where further increases may be expected, is quite similar to the bulk of the American crop. In fact, much of it has been produced from cottonseed imported from Texas and other States in the western part of the American belt. But many of the other factors necessary for rapid expansion are lacking, and it will take time to develop these even under the most favorable conditions.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 22, and, pending the motion, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily absent, and that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The Chair lays before the Senate a House concurrent resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 22), as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 22d day of May 1935, at 12:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. STEIWER and Mr. LONG addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I wish first to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. STEIWER. Is there a motion pending before the Senate made prior to the roll call?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] made a motion to proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution. It being privileged, however, the Chair had the right to lay it before the Senate, and did so.

Mr. ROBINSON. So that the resolution is now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is now before the Senate. It is a privileged resolution which involves the organization of the Senate and of the House, held by the Speaker of the House, and the Chair thinks it has been so held by the Senate, to be privileged. Therefore the Chair took the privilege of laying it before the Senate.

Mr. STEIWER. I concur with the Chair, and thank the Chair for the information. I understand, therefore, that the motion previously made by the Senator from Arkansas is not the pending question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been vacated by virtue of the fact that the Chair has laid the concurrent resolution before the Senate.

Mr. STEIWER. So that the question recurs on agreeing to the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, upon that question I wish to be heard briefly. Inasmuch as there may be no roll call upon the vote on agreeing to the resolution, and no opportunity for Senators to record their dissent to the proposition, I desire to speak briefly in explanation of my reasons for my opposition to the proposal at this time.

The pending concurrent resolution does not disclose the purpose for the proposed joint session of the House and Senate except to receive such communications as the President shall be pleased to make. I assume, in the light of what has been said recently in the newspapers, that the communication in mind is the veto message to be communicated by the President in support of his veto of the so-called "bonus bill." It is because it is a veto message that I think the proposal is improper. If it were another type of communication from the President, and had no relation to the veto of a bill passed by the Congress, I certainly would offer no objection. I think there could be no objection—

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. STEIWER. I desire first to complete the sentence. I think there could be no conceivable objection at any time to a proposal for a joint session in order that the President might be heard to give to Congress information of the state of the Union. I now yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Did I understand the Senator from Oregon to say that a veto message is to be delivered? Is that what the meeting is for?

Mr. STEIWER. I say I assume so from the press reports.

Mr. LONG. Has not it already been sent out what the message is, and then they want us to go over there and listen to it?

Mr. STEIWER. I have not heard of the President having made known the message. It is reported rather that the President would return the bill and bring his message in person and deliver it either to the House or to a joint session of the Senate and the House.

Mr. LONG. I just wanted to get straight what the Senator meant. Is the meeting to listen to a message when the President has sent word what the message is? I was just wondering what is the use of taking up the time under those circumstances.

Mr. STEIWER. Of course, there is nothing to be gained so far as the Senate is concerned in taking up time for this purpose.

The Constitution very specifically provides the method of vetoing legislation. I read briefly from section 7 of article I of the Constitution, as follows:

If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law.

Mr. President, there is no requirement upon the President to send his message of veto in writing. There is no requirement that he shall return by messenger the bill which he has disapproved. I, therefore, make no point at all of the suggestion that the President in person may return the bill to the House of Representatives, in which it originated. I make no point of his desire to communicate orally his objections. If the President prefers to act as messenger in returning the bill, I think that is a matter wholly within his decision. If he prefers to perform the function of the reading clerk of the House and to read into the Journal the objections which that clerk would normally enter, that I think is also within his decision. Certainly it is not a matter for a Senator to criticize, and apparently it is a procedure which is competent within the Constitution.

I make no criticism of the President, therefore, for the proposal that he is to come in person, and I have no doubt the House, in paying to the President the courtesy and deference which he deserves, will be glad to receive the veto message in the way in which he proposes to deliver it. I make no criticism of the House, much less of the President.

My objection to the concurrent resolution is that it seeks to involve the Senate in this procedure. It proposes that the Senate shall meet with the House in joint session, and we are told that the veto message of the President, or the objections which the President proposes to make to a bill which Congress has passed shall not be returned to the House, the body in which the legislation was originated, but that it shall be returned to a joint session of both bodies. It is that procedure which I condemn. It is that procedure which I claim is not countenanced by the Constitution. It is in violation of the Constitution of the United States that this legislation should be returned to the joint body rather than to the body in which the legislation originated. It will be in violation of the Constitution if the objections shall be made to the joint body rather than that they should be entered in the Journal of the House by the normal and usual procedure which has been employed in this country for a century and a half.

I shall not detain the Senate to discuss the age-old question of conflict between the legislative and the executive branches of Government. It will suffice to say that when our Constitution was written the English system was not adopted. Our executive branch is not represented in the Congress. The Constitution provides the relations between the two coordinate branches of the Government. It provides specifically the procedure for returning a bill which is disapproved, and for having the President's objections entered in the Journal of the House of origination. It prescribes it specifically, and I can see no reason why the Senate should volunteer to do an extralegal, an extraconstitutional act in order to set up a stage setting for a more effective veto presentation in the House of Representatives.

I can see no reason why we should turn aside from our Constitutional duties in times like this in order to make ourselves a sort of window dressing or to provide the scenery for this occasion. In plain language we have no business in the joint session. We have no constitutional function there. We have, in my humble opinion, no business to agree to a resolution which would convene us in joint session with the House in order that the veto message might be delivered to the joint body when the Constitution prescribes that it shall be delivered to the body in which the legislation originated.

Mr. President, I think I am justified in saying a word with respect to a higher fidelity to the Constitution. I know how popular it has been in recent years to speak disparagingly of the Constitution. It is said that the Constitution does not feed hungry people. It is said that when it prevents the efforts of our Nation toward recovery we ought not to be restrained by its provisions. I am one who is willing to proceed in accordance with the organic law of my country and to stand always, when I know what the Constitution provides, for procedure which the Constitution requires.

Even our President, who is probably as devoted to the Constitution as most of the citizens of the country, used this language in his inaugural address on March 4, 1933:

Our Constitution is so simple and practical that it is possible always to meet extraordinary needs by changes in emphasis and arrangement without loss of essential form. That is why our constitutional system has proved itself the most superbly enduring political mechanism the modern world has produced. It has met every stress of vast expansion of territory, of foreign wars, of bitter internal strife, of world relations.

There is nothing so extraordinary about the impending bonus veto that anyone is justified in seeking "changes in emphasis" to the extent of violating the plain requirements of the Constitution. If "changes in emphasis" imply departure from constitutional Government our country will rue the day which brought a theory of this kind.

And now, as a further sample of the slight regard which governmental America is asked to pay the Constitution of the United States, it is proposed that the two bodies in joint session proceed to receive a message which the Constitution prescribes shall be received by one of those bodies. I say the time has come when someone ought to say something in behalf of the organic law and of regularity of governmental function. We ought to realize that the extreme liberal attitude which has been taken toward the Constitution of our country is not being supported and is not being sustained by the courts. Someone said to me recently that the new legislation is getting along reasonably well in the courts and is receiving support on a 50-50 basis. That, of course, is not true. We know that across the very breadth of this land the district courts of the United States and the circuit courts of the United States, time after time, in decision after decision, have found reason for repudiating various provisions of the legislation which we have enacted as a part of the so-called "new deal."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to hear the Senator's views on another point. When the President delivers his message at the beginning of the Congress he usually delivers it to both Houses. Does the Senator consider that as constitutional?

Mr. STEIWER. Of course I do; but that has nothing to do with the present situation. My friend from Texas came in a little late. I am talking about the procedure definitely prescribed for receiving a veto message, which has nothing to do with receiving other messages which the President might deliver to the Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the Senator's view that because it deals specifically with veto messages, it repeals in effect his general power to deliver messages to Congress?

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, no; it does not repeal that power. It merely prescribes the form for receiving veto messages.

Mr. CONNALLY. It merely directs that he may send the veto message to the body which originates the legislation.

Mr. STEIWER. I say it prescribes the formula for procedure for the disapproval of a bill and for having the objections entered in the Journal of the body in which the legislation originated.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not the effect of that, though, as between the two bodies, only that the bill shall be sent to the one where it originates? The provision is not exclusive by any means, is it?

Mr. STEIWER. In my judgment, that provision is effective upon everybody in the Government of the United States; and no one can claim such exalted heights of power and influence that he has a right, either moral or legal, to disregard it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. The provision of the Constitution is that the disapproved bill shall be returned to the House in which the legislation originated, with a statement of the President's objections. Does the Senator contend that if the objections are returned not to the body where the legislation originated, but to a joint assembly of the Senate and House, that does not constitute a veto? Has the Senator any doubt in his mind as to the effectiveness of a veto message delivered to both Houses in joint assembly, rather than to the House designated in the Constitution?

Mr. STEIWER. The question is so entirely novel that I should hesitate to express an opinion as to the legal effect of such a veto message. It is most certain, however, that the Constitution requires the disapproved bill to be returned to the body in which it originated, and the objections to be entered in the Journal of that body; and, if that body passes the bill over the veto, that the bill shall then be sent forward to the other body. There is nothing in the Constitution which even suggests that the return shall be made to both bodies, and that the objections shall be noted in both Journals by one act of the Executive in returning the measure or in expressing his disapproval.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator if there is anything in the concurrent resolution as to what shall be entered in the Journal, or as to what the President shall say.

Mr. STEIWER. No, Mr. President; and I said in the opening of my remarks—

Mr. CLARK. I was not here when the Senator opened his remarks.

Mr. STEIWER. I said at that time that I was basing my remarks upon the newspaper story, very generally published, that the proposal is that the Executive shall return the legislation to the joint session, and there announce his veto message. Of course, if I am wrong in that, I wish to be corrected. If the purpose of this joint session were something else, I should like to yield the floor just as soon as I could get off my feet, because I certainly should never object to a joint session of the House and Senate for the purpose of receiving a communication from the President upon the state of the Union.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will yield further—and I do not desire unduly to delay him—while I am not in position to predict what the President is going to say, I read the same newspaper accounts the Senator from Oregon has read; but the matter before the Senate is the concurrent resolution, which simply provides for a joint session to receive such communications as the President may be pleased to make. It seems to me that for the Senate to anticipate what the President is going to say on the basis of newspaper stories, and undertake to pass on what the President should say at a joint session of Congress, would be equivalent to the Senate appointing a committee to hold up a messenger of the President at the door of the Senate when he comes to deliver a message, and look over the message, and see whether or not it should be delivered. It seems to me the responsibility as to what the President shall say at a joint session belongs to the President, and not to the Senate.

Mr. STEIWER. Is the Senator from Missouri under the impression that the President has some message other than the veto message?

Mr. CLARK. I have not. As I said a moment ago, I have read the same newspaper accounts the Senator from Oregon has read; but in view of the request of the President to have a joint session at which he may deliver such communications as he may see fit, it seems to me to be at least premature for the Senate to undertake in advance to pass on whether or not they desire that sort of a message.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I think it is not premature. The newspaper stories, so it is said, have quoted members of the White House staff. The President himself has declared to the correspondents and to numerous others that it is his proposal to veto the bonus legislation; and as a practical man I think I am entirely justified in presenting my remarks today upon the theory that the joint session is for the purpose of receiving the President's objections to the bonus bill.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me the Senator's present objection is exactly the same proposition as if it should be announced in the newspapers that the President proposed to send his veto message to the Senate, instead of sending it to the House, where it should be properly sent in the first instance, and thereupon the Senator from Oregon should propose that a committee of the Senate hold up the President's secretary at the door of the Senate as he came here to deliver the message from the President and tell him that the Senate would not receive his message; that he would have to go over to the House to deliver it.

Mr. STEIWER. No, Mr. President; I am not at all in accord with the view of my friend from Missouri. The Senate is always in session for the purpose of receiving messages from the President. It does not make any difference what the character of the message may be; but the Senate ought not to agree to this resolution or to join in a session with the House to receive a veto message, or to consider business with which at this time we have no concern under the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not wish to delay the Senator's remarks; but let me call his attention to the familiar rule of statutory and constitutional construction that if all parts of an instrument can be given effect, it must be construed as a whole.

Section 3 of article II of the Constitution provides, referring to the President:

He shall from time to time give to the Congress—

That means both bodies; it does not mean one.

Give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

That is one clause of the Constitution. The other clause, to which the Senator adverts, is this, relating to a veto:

If he approve he shall sign it—

The bill—

but if not he shall return it—with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it.

The bill—

Both of those constitutional provisions are effective if the President returns the bill. He has to return it to one body. He cannot return a bill to two bodies. He cannot sever it. He has to deposit the bill back in one of the bodies. He sends the bill back to the House. He then, in a joint session, advises the Congress, under his general power to address messages to the Congress, about the vetoed bill, and the effect it will have upon the state of the Union, and upon the general fiscal affairs of the United States.

How is there any violation of the Constitution in that sort of a proceeding, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator, of course, may ask that question. I have just concluded stating briefly my views with respect to it. To me, it is just as plain as anything in the world can be that the only provision of the Constitution which relates to the procedure for a return of a disapproved bill, and for the noting of the Executive's objections to that bill, is the language found in section 7 of article I. Of course, it is true that the whole instrument should be read together; there is not any contention about that; but in the other language to which the Senator alludes there is no reference at all to a veto message. Therefore, we are bound by the language which we find in section 7 of article I—language which is so explicit that I contend, with a good deal of confidence, that no other procedure is constitutionally permissible. It may not be sufficiently clear to control the attitude of the Senator from Texas; it may not even control the attitude of the President of the United States; but it is worthy of the comment that it is sufficiently clear that until now it has controlled the attitude of every President of the United States for nearly a century and a half.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. If the Senator from Texas has concluded, I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming that the joint session is to be held for the purpose of listening to a veto message, and assuming that the House would sustain the veto, of course, the Senate never would be called on to act on the matter.

Mr. STEIWER. May I interrupt the Senator there? That is another reason, which I have not as yet stated, why the Senate has no business to be present, either in its own capacity or in joint session with the House. The matter will not come to us until after the House acts; and after the House acts the Constitution provides how the bill shall be returned to this body.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand; but it seems to me that is a parallel situation. That was the object of my inquiry. Under the Constitution, all bills raising revenue must originate in the House. Unless the Senate passes a revenue bill, the Senate never can consider the subject; yet would it be improper, in a joint session, for the President to deliver a message upon the revenues of the Government and the methods of raising revenue, notwithstanding the fact that a bill for the purpose must originate in the House, and the question may never come before the Senate unless the House first passes a revenue bill?

Mr. STEIWER. If that situation were as simple as the Senator from Kentucky expresses it, I should agree with him entirely; but I will answer the Senator—and I think there is a very effective answer—that if in the Constitution there were a prescribed formula by which the President would communicate to the House with respect to revenue legislation, then no other formula could be resorted to for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the formula referred to by the Senator with respect to vetoes is a technical matter. The President is required to send the bill back to the House, which he does, or will do. That is a technical matter.

Mr. STEIWER. Is it technical, or is it a very practical matter?

Mr. BARKLEY. He also is required to deliver the reasons for his veto, which must be appealed to both Houses. Assuming that the House in which the bill originated should not sustain the veto of the President, does the Senator contend that the President ought to be required first to go to the House and deliver his reasons for vetoing the bill, and then, if the House overrode the veto, he ought to come here separately and advise us why we ought not to override the veto.

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, no. Why does my friend from Kentucky persist in being so blind? Of course, I do not so contend. I contend that the Constitution prescribes the way by which the President shall go to the House of origination, and that the Constitution prescribes what shall follow thereafter if that House passes the bill notwithstanding the veto; and the Constitution does not prescribe that the President shall then, at a subsequent time, appear in the Senate in order to state his objections.

It prescribes another formula. We owe it to our country, and to ourselves, to proceed in accordance with that formula, and not in accordance with some innovation or some bizarre departure from the constitutional method.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield first to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to suggest that, in all probability, the actual occurrence will be that the President will return the bill to the House in a formal way and report it, as disapproved, but, in addition to that, has he not the right to ask that the House and the Senate hear to his reasons and discussion of the subject? There is no question that the usual requirement will be followed in a formal way, the bill sent by messenger perhaps, but following that the President would have the absolute right to address both the House and the Senate on the same question.

Mr. STEIWER. I considered that phase of the question, I will state to the Senator from Florida, and if the matter is to be considered upon the assumption which the Senator just makes, then it means that the bill would be returned in some other way rather than by hand, that the objections would be noted in some other way rather than by the address of the President before the House and before the microphone, and that the appearance of the President and the address would then not be a part of the veto procedure, but would be merely an appearance by the President, with appropriate stage setting, for the purpose of attracting the Nation's attention to his veto message in order to make the message more effective, in order that the influence of the President in this controversy might be greater than it normally would be.

I claim that that procedure is not suggested by the Constitution, and that it is contrary to the spirit of our form of government.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator gladly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The discussion as to what message is to be heard appears to me to be more or less irrelevant. The concurrent resolution provides for a joint session of the two Houses of the Congress to hear such communications as the President shall be pleased to make.

There is no limitation in the Constitution or in the rules of the two Houses on the occasion or the purposes for which joint sessions may be held. Therefore it is entirely within the discretion or judgment of the two Houses when joint sessions shall convene.

The Senate has a perfect legal right to refuse to agree to the resolution. In my judgment, it would be discourteous to the House and perhaps discourteous to the President to refuse to concur in the resolution. Nevertheless, the Senate can vote to participate in the joint session or it can vote not to do so. But to contend that the Constitution prevents a joint session of the two Houses to hear any communication which the President may see fit to make is, in my judgment, a strained construction, and one which finds little justification in fair interpretation.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. STEIWER. I am very glad to yield to the Senator, and I wish the Senator, as sponsor of the concurrent resolution, could assure me that the purpose of the joint session is for something other than the reception of the veto message. I agree with the Senator that so far as the language of the resolution is concerned it is not limited to the veto matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. As suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], does the Senator feel that it is courteous and appropriate to take judicial notice based on newspaper reports of what the message will contain? Frankly I do not think there is any inhibition in the Constitution against the two Houses meeting in joint session to hear a veto message; and if the concurrent resolution specified that the communication would relate to a veto, I should still maintain that the Senate had a complete legal right to go to the House and participate in the joint session for the purpose of hearing the message. But, since there is no specification in the resolution, the question as to the substance of the message, as to what the purpose of the joint session is, to my mind, is more or less irrelevant, except that if the Senate does not wish to participate in the joint session it can express its views by voting against the concurrent resolution.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the Senator earlier in his remarks said that to pretend that a certain procedure was unconstitutional he thought was beside the mark.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; I said "contend."

Mr. STEIWER. Possibly I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not use the word "pretend." I do not question the Senator's sincerity. What I am doing is questioning the validity or soundness of his argument.

Mr. STEIWER. Cannot the Senator assure the Senate that the message of the President will include matter aside from the veto message?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the only knowledge I have as to what the message may contain is based on press reports. I do not know what the President will say in his message; but, since the concurrent resolution is before the Senate, I maintain that common courtesy, both to the House and to the President, requires concurrence in the resolution. Of course, if another Senator thinks that is not a sound position, he will vote against the concurrent resolution. For my part, I would not wish to establish the precedent of saying that I will get a copy of the message, which usually is not released until it is delivered, find out what the President intends to say, and then, if I do not like it, not listen to it. It seems to me that that is rather an incorrect position for a statesman of the talent and genius of my learned friend from Oregon to take.

Mr. STEIWER. Does the majority leader contend that the House is responsible for the concurrent resolution, and that they are insisting upon the joint session?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is a House concurrent resolution.

Mr. STEIWER. That is true, of course; but my understanding, which I state with some misgiving, because I have it third hand, is that the House intended to receive the message of the President without the joint session with the Senate, and that the Senator from Arkansas induced the Speaker to change his plans.

Mr. ROBINSON. That statement is in part incorrect.

Mr. STEIWER. I am glad to know it.

Mr. ROBINSON. This is what occurred, if the Senator deems that it is pertinent to this issue: The Speaker of the House of Representatives called me yesterday morning and asked if I would concur in a resolution of this character, and whether I thought it proper to send over such a concurrent resolution. I told him that I saw no objection to that being done, and that I did not anticipate there would be any objection in the Senate to concurrence in the resolution. Never before within my memory has there been an occasion on which a Member of this body has taken the position that when a resolution of this nature is presented it should be rejected.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

Mr. STEIWER. I am very glad that the Senator has corrected my impression upon that subject. I wish to say to him, in the same good spirit in which he addresses me, that if this were not the occasion of receiving a veto message from the President, there would not be any objection at this time to a resolution for a joint session of the two bodies.

I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Might I ask the Senator from Oregon whether he has examined the precedents to see whether or not the President has ever delivered a veto message in person?

Mr. STEIWER. I am told that it has never been done. So far as I know, in the whole history of the Republic it has never been suggested.

Mr. President, I was saying a moment ago, when I yielded to one of my colleagues, that the impression abroad in the land that the country is complacent under the whittling away of the Constitution is not a well-founded impression. The impression that the courts are sustaining this program of innovations is not a well-founded impression. I said that throughout the length and breadth of this land the Federal district courts and the circuit courts of appeal in almost every district and circuit have found occasion to disapprove legislation which they hold to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

The Supreme Court of the United States has made a series of decisions which ought to challenge our attention at this time. Do Senators realize that the first question respecting the constitutionality of new-deal legislation brought to the Supreme Court related to the so-called "Economy Act", in which Congress had repudiated the obligations of the Government under certain types of war-risk insurance? A united Supreme Court held that that legislation was both immoral and unconstitutional.

The next question that I recall coming to the Supreme Court was the so-called "hot oil case", in which the Court I think, by 8 members to 1, held that the Congress had made an unconstitutional delegation of legislative authority to the executive branch of the Government. This holding was the first of its kind in the entire history of the country. This fact indicates the extreme and indefensible length to which Congress had gone.

The next was a group of cases relating to the abrogation of the gold clause. In one of those cases the legislation was sustained, and in another the legislation was condemned and repudiated by the Court.

Then, Mr. President, we had the recent decision in which the Supreme Court considered the railroad employees' retirement pension law. In that case the United Court condemned some portions of the law, and a 5-to-4 decision of the Court condemned the entire law.

It is literally a true statement that from the beginning of the new deal until this moment no legislation which has been tested in the Supreme Court of the United States has been sustained in its entirety. Some parts of it have been wiped out completely; some parts of it have been wiped out partially; some parts of it have been wiped out by a unanimous Court; some parts by a divided opinion; but nothing in the whole new-deal program has been sustained in its entirety from the time this administration began until the present moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator indulge me just a moment?

Mr. STEIWER. I shall be very glad to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I cannot see the relevancy of the argument now being made by the Senator from Oregon to the proposition that is now before the Senate.

Mr. STEIWER. If the Senator from Arkansas will let me continue I should like to tell him what the relevancy of it is.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, we all know that all statutes passed by Congress are subject to test in the courts under the conditions which exist pertaining to legislation in this country, and in all administrations measures have been compelled to undergo judicial test. How the Senator can think that a resolution which merely provides for a joint session of the two Houses to hear a message from the President has any relation to the question of the constitutionality of laws which are passed by Congress is to me incomprehensible.

I do not believe, if the Senator will reflect, that he can maintain in his own conscience and judgment the contention that the Constitution limits the right of the two Houses to meet in joint session for any purpose which addresses itself to the Membership of the two Houses, and, consequently, I do not believe that it is consistent to anticipate the subject matter of a message which may be delivered, and maintain that the Senate has no right to hear the message.

I can understand the argument that Senators may not wish to hear the message, and may refuse to do so, and reflect their views by their votes on a resolution providing for a joint session at which a message is to be submitted, but how the legal conclusion can be reached that the Constitution limits the two Houses in respect of the purposes for which they may assemble in joint session I am unable to grasp.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I think there is not any Member of the Senate who seriously believes that the purpose of the proposed joint session is anything other than to enable the President to return the bonus bill and to announce his objections to it. I think there is no sound ground even for the assertion of the belief that there might by conceivable possibility be some other purpose in the joint session.

Let us view this question as practical men. Let us regard it for what it is. And then let us deal with it as a veto message, and not as something else.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. STEIWER. I desire to conclude my statement, if the Senator will indulge me for a moment. When we shall have done so, Mr. President, we shall not be considering the question as to the general right of House and Senate to meet in joint session. We shall be confronted with the inescapable requirements of a provision of the Constitution of the United States, which prescribes a formula for receiving a veto message; and if we agree to the concurrent resolution we shall know that we are proceeding in a way which is not consistent with the spirit, and in my judgment not consistent with the letter, of the Constitution.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon was pursuing a course of discussion. I ask him if, in following his course of discussion, he will answer this inquiry: Is there any legislative power or any governmental power which could be exercised by the joint session which is contemplated; and, beyond that, is there any surrender which the Senate would make of its rights or its privileges, should it attend the joint session?

Again, if we should attend the joint session, would the constitutional provision as to the submission of veto messages to the Senate have been complied with by a verbal or written message submitted to the two Houses in joint session?

My inquiry is this: If we accept what amounts to an invitation on the part of the House, do we in any way surrender any right?

My own view is that if we were surrendering a right I should be glad to support the Senator. My own judgment is that if we are not surrendering any right we should accept the invitation.

Mr. STEIWER. No, Mr. President; we are not surrendering any right. I have not so contended in the course of my remarks. I merely contend that the veto message should be delivered to the House of Representatives; that the House should be in session when it receives the return of the bill from the President; the House should be in session when the objections of the President are returned to it; there should not be a joint session. A joint session is not a session of the House of Representatives, but it is something entirely separate from it and dissimilar to it.

The resolution does not involve surrendering any right, nor does it purport to accept an invitation. It proposes to provide a joint session in lieu of the usual session of the House of Representatives. The Senate has no business there, and ought not agree to the resolution.

Mr. TYDINGS rose.

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator said he was concluding. I was on my feet waiting for recognition when the Senator should have concluded.

Mr. STEIWER. No, Mr. President; I had not concluded. I am about to conclude. Before I do so I wish to make further answer to the question raised by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. He said he saw no conceivable relation between the proposal as embodied in the concurrent resolution and legislation which had been considered and disapproved by the Supreme Court of the United States. The connection is a practical one, Mr. President, and it is merely this:

Obviously Congress has been more than careless in the enactment of legislation during the 2 years last past. Too often we have exceeded our constitutional authority. Too often we have put ourselves in such a position that the courts, under the oaths of the justices, felt obligated to hold our legislation to be unconstitutional.

What is now before us is merely, in my opinion, another effort to proceed by way of innovation and in violation of the formula of the Constitution. It is merely another whittling away, another chiseling, another step toward breaking down the Constitution of the United States. Others may do as they please. I do not expect that my feeble protest will stop the agreement to the concurrent resolution. I had no hope in the beginning that my voice would prevail here, but I am one who desires his view recorded and to let the Senate know that he is unwilling to proceed in any way other than in accordance with the dictates and directions of the organic law of our country. This body can render no better service than by insistence upon a complete fidelity to that law.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, yesterday I announced that as soon as I could get the floor this morning I should like to speak on war debts, stabilization of currencies, revival of world trade, and disarmament, but notwithstanding that announcement I do not desire to stand in the way of a consideration of the pending concurrent resolution. If there are Senators who wish to discuss it at length, however, I may as well proceed with my remarks. On the other hand, if the discussion is likely to draw to a close in the very immediate future, I have no reason or desire to block the consideration of the pending concurrent resolution.

May I ask if any Senator should like to speak to the pending concurrent resolution?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana in answer to my question.

Mr. LONG. I do not desire to interfere with the Senator from Maryland. I desire to speak on the pending concurrent resolution.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator from Louisiana how much time he will require?

Mr. LONG. That is just the trouble, Mr. President! It is only lately that I have decided which side I was on with respect to the pending concurrent resolution, and I should not wish to tie myself down to any particular amount of time in discussing it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator took a little time, he might get on the other side of the question before he concluded.

Mr. LONG. That is just the point, Mr. President.

Mr. TYDINGS. In view of the statement of the Senator from Louisiana, from which I interpret that his proposed address to the Senate will be rather long, and in view of what I have said to him privately and publicly, I do not feel I would be obstructing the pending resolution if I were to proceed for 35 or 40 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland has the floor.

WAR DEBTS, DISARMAMENT, CURRENCY STABILIZATION, AND WORLD TRADE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, to which I shall address myself, which I send to the desk and ask to have read in my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 141), as follows:

Whereas the people of the United States, irrespective of political affiliations, have been desirous of promoting in every practical way the peace of the world and the economic and political welfare of other nations as well as their own, and have never failed to respond to the call of distress of other peoples and countries; and

Whereas the people of the United States are equally desirous of correcting any misapprehensions in this regard and to proclaim that no reason shall exist for questioning their desire to aid in every reasonable way the solution of the acute problems of the world arising from the war and the depression; and

Whereas the present administration has frequently declared that national economic recovery and world economic recovery are inextricably bound together and that the principle of the good neighbor should characterize the relationship between the United States and all other nations; and

Whereas similar views have been held by Republican administrations and leading statesmen of the Republican Party, so that these broad views have the endorsement of both our major political parties; and

Whereas it is universally recognized that there is no problem existing today which is operating more directly, constantly, and powerfully to make understanding and good will between nations difficult, and therefore to postpone the return of economic well-being and durable world peace than the chronic problem of intergovernmental debts arising and resulting from the war; and

Whereas the next installment of allied war debts owing to the United States is due and payable on the 15th of June 1935, and no payment on these debts was made when the last installment came due on December 15, 1934, and the value and collectibility of these debts are becoming more and more jeopardized by the passing of time and the failure to devise and consummate a workable and mutually reasonable settlement thereof; and

Whereas such officials and leaders of European public opinion and action as Premier Flandin of France; Economic and Finance Minister Schacht of Germany; and the Chancellor of the Exchequer Chamberlain of Great Britain, have within recent weeks given public indication of their recognition of the gravity of the problem created by the unsettled state of intergovernmental debts and of their desire for an equitable settlement that will promote and not retard world trade and that is in keeping with the present economic and financial conditions of the world; and

Whereas in June and also in December of 1934, in the exchange of notes on the allied-debt subject, both France and Great Britain did not repudiate them but frankly acknowledged the validity and legality of their respective war debts to the United States and expressed a desire and willingness to make a reasonable and feasible settlement of these debts; and

Whereas it is the desire of the people of the United States as indispensable both to economic recovery and to world peace to secure reduction of armaments by all nations and to inaugurate an immediate 5-year holiday in arms construction, in order to facilitate and ensure rapid recovery from the ravages of the protracted depression, and to prove good faith to one another in their treaty commitments to peace; and

Whereas general and drastic reduction of armaments is vital to both world peace and to economic recovery, the expenditures for armaments and war being by far the largest items in the budgets of the nations; and

Whereas responsible statesmen of all the large nations of the world have repeatedly expressed their willingness to join in a general universal movement for the reduction of armaments, but the disarmament conferences have, during the past few years, failed to reach any substantial accord as to reduction largely because of the ill will, fear, and resentments engendered, particularly in Europe, by the destructiveness of the last war and by the treaties resulting therefrom; and

Whereas a strong indication of the sentiment in Great Britain has just been obtained by a popular referendum wherein the vote on the question of all-round drastic reduction of armaments by international agreement showed over 90 percent in favor of such reduction and agreement, a percentage that well represents the overwhelming public opinion of our land; and

Whereas a 5-year holiday in arms construction accompanied by gradual, drastic, and pro rata reduction in arms, agreed to and carried out by the nations of the world, would be not only the sincerest guaranty of world peace but would also result in bringing national income and national expenditures within balance in all nations, would greatly reduce taxation, would vastly increase the buying power of all countries, and consequently would go far toward restoring to normal the benefits of world trade, both for agriculture and for industry; and

Whereas for the further advancement of world trade and therefore for the prosperity of all peoples there should be a revival of confidence in the money units of the world, now so disordered and almost chaotic, by a working stabilization of international currencies under international agreement, such as would inspire confidence in business men and producers everywhere, and which would largely restore normal foreign trade, thus tending to relieve unemployment and to reflate our sadly deflated market value of commodities, securities, and real estate; and

Whereas the United States, by reason of its unprecedented contributions to the World War, its unselfish and equally unprecedented abstention from all the spoils of war at the peace table, in harmony with the magnanimous pronouncements of President McKinley in 1898, and of President Wilson in 1917 (namely, that it is our settled policy not to wage wars of aggression and not to accept the spoils of victory), is in a position to take the lead in a world-wide movement for the solution of these four acute international problems, (1) war debts, (2) disarmament, (3) stabilization of currencies, and (4) a sound revival of world trade, which now so harass the world and retard both economic recovery and world peace, and to the solution of which a world conference should be called to be held at the city of Washington at the earliest convenient and practicable time: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to advise such governments as he may deem appropriate that this Government desires at once to take up directly with them, with a view to entering into international agreements and treaties with other nations at a conference to be held in the city of Washington, the following matters: The settlement of the intergovernmental debts, the means of obtaining a substantial curtailment in world armaments and a holiday in world armament construction, the means of securing a stabilization of the currency systems of the world, and the means for reviving world trade, all to such an extent and under such terms as may be agreed upon.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, on June 15, 1935, a date barely 3 weeks away, another batch of semiannual installments of the war debts owing to the United States come due. These installments owing by the Allies on June 15 aggregate $166,000,000 and will be due to our Government from the following countries: Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Finland, France, Greece, Great Britain, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Rumania, and Yugoslavia.

In addition to these installments the German Government owes the United States Government, on account of the army of occupation costs and for the Mixed Claims Commission awards, an unpaid balance of $340,000,000 of principal, wholly disregarding interest. The original amount of this German debt was $477,000,000. Germany is now and has been for several years wholly in default, and nothing has been paid during that time.

As we know, the last previous installments due from the Allied debtors on December 15, 1934, for similar large amounts, remain wholly unpaid. Prior to that, for a year or more small amounts only—sometimes called "token" payments—were paid by some of the Allied debtors, others paying nothing on their matured installments.

It is common knowledge among all of us that the June 15, 1935, installments on the war debts will not be paid. Indeed, if any debtor nation desired to make a so-called "token" or partial payment, that is, to offer any amount short of the full installment due to June 15 next, the Congress of the United States has said that such partial payment shall not relieve the debtor in any sense from being in default, but that its default would be the same as though it had paid nothing at all. Insofar as it has the power to do so, Congress has put an inhibition upon any settlement or compromise of these debts by several enactments, the first of which was included in the ratification of the so-called "Hoover moratorium of 1931."

Present indications all show that, as matters now stand, no money will be received by the United States on account of the two semiannual installments due in 1935, one on June 15 next and the other on December 15 next, and there is nothing in sight which would lead anyone to suppose that any future installments will be paid. In fact, the business of the collection of the war debts owing to our Government is now at a recognized and sterile standstill.

These observations naturally lead to the interrogatory: What is the United States of America going to do about it? And, more specifically: What is the Congress of the United States going to do about it? Thus we are confronted with the fact that we are actually not only not going to receive any money on account of these debt installments due June 15 next, but we are going to put the Government to an additional expense for the stationery, cables, and labor which the Secretary of State will have to incur to remind our debtors that June 15 is pay day. Thus the idle ceremony pursues the even tenor of its way.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RADCLIFFE in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator think that it is not solely a question of what the United States is going to do about the war debts on the 15th of June, but what are the debtor governments going to do about them?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall discuss that question a little later. My observation is that the governments which owe the money are not going to do anything about it until we do something about it, and because we should do something about it I have offered the resolution which has just been read at the desk.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. May I say to the Senator that the formula for settlement of war debts has already been fixed. In the agreement which was entered into at the time of the debt settlements the foreign governments agreed that upon request of the Government of the United States they would reissue the notes we now hold, reissue them in small denominations, in denominations of a character which could be sold to private investors upon the stock markets of the world. They even admitted or agreed that they would permit and assist us in having them sold in their own markets, and that they would—

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand all that, but let me say to the Senator that in spite of those agreements we are not getting any money. Is the Senator satisfied to let the situation remain as it is?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Sometime ago I submitted a resolution requesting the executive department of the Government to carry out its part and take the next step in asking the governments to issue their bonds in such form in which they could be sold.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will bear with me, I am going to anticipate some very natural questions which would arise in his mind. I may say right now that I am absolutely with the Senator. My object is to settle the matter and not let it lie with no income at all being derived from the debts due the American people, and to that matter I shall address myself immediately.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator will indulge me a moment, I think the next step ought to be taken by the Treasury Department and the executive department of the Government, and that step is already outlined in the agreements.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I am advocating.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have on the table a resolution requesting the executive branch of the Government to take such action. Would the Senator be in favor of so doing?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but the Congress has already inhibited the President from doing anything. We have already said that anything less than the full amount of the installment due shall leave the debtor nations still in default. I am trying to present the entire situation and to devise a plan where it can be considered in conjunction with other things. Because I do not feel that the facts are altogether a separate issue, I ask the Senator to listen until I have woven in some other thoughts.

In answer to my own question just propounded, I presume the Members of the Congress naturally divide into two groups:

First. Those who are content to let matters run as they are—which, to be sure, is perfectly satisfactory to the debtors; for it is a well-traditioned maxim of debtors to let sleeping dogs lie.

May I say inferentially, as a lawyer who has had occasion at times to collect debts for his clients, that I have never found debtors overwhelmingly anxious to pay their debts where they have grown stale. It requires a great deal of urging sometimes in order to obtain a very substantial settlement.

The first group just mentioned, those who are content to let matters run as they are, carries on the they-pay-nothing-and-we-get-nothing policy. That, indeed, is the present policy, which is characterized by a quiet absence of payment but a loud presence of recrimination—no money, but acrimony.

Second. There is the other group, who say, "You not only will receive nothing on June 15 next, but you received nothing on December 15 last, and we think that as your present policy has resulted in our receiving nothing at all, some other policy might well be evolved in the hope that a different approach, which cannot possibly do worse, may well produce results highly beneficial to the United States in this time of need."

I think practically every business man will agree that the second group, that is, those who propose not to let these debts lie fallow, but to capitalize them for the best advantage to both our own country and the world, is the group which best represents the sentiment and sound policy of the American people. That is the group who would do as a practical business man would do under similar circumstances.

Having debts that are uncollectible in whole, on which nothing is being paid, and which are rapidly becoming chronic, the business man has learned from experience to get the best adjustment possible in a bad situation, especially if he expects to do business again with the person with whom he is settling. The longer these war debts remain unpaid, the less real value they have. Why should Congress not pursue business methods with a business proposition, for that is exactly what this is?

I believe the time has come in the affairs of men when it is wise to resurvey the entire economic mess inherited from the war. I believe such a survey is imperative for the welfare of our own country and the salvage of civilization. To continue hurling epithets back and forth across the Atlantic and to remain idle in fields of constructive endeavor whereby to alleviate the distress and suffering in our own and other lands is to be unworthy of the traditions of the Republic.

A spirit of nationalism is a proper and laudable one at all times if kept within reasonable limits. Indeed, a spirit of nationalism is nothing more than the love-of-home spirit on a national scale. I hope I share in these impulses of the human heart. But a spirit of nationalism which denies to one's country benefits and improvements which are obtainable through a broader view of life and events, is not loyal, true, or constructive nationalism. Patriotism is the concept of one's desire to serve his country for its real ultimate good rather than for its apparent immediate good. Patriotism is to be distinguished from blind isolationism. Moreover, a well-intentioned patriotism, as expressed in our present governmental debt policy, has not achieved the desired result, assuming that the result intended was to produce the payment of these war debts. In other words, the intention was good, but the effect was futile. It is my purpose, our previous efforts having failed, to present and advocate a plan which I hope will bear fruit, and for that reason the resolution previously read at the desk has been offered, and I believe points the way to this objective.

No Senator nor citizen dreams of collecting these debts by war. As the late Philander Chase Knox, of Pennsylvania, once stated in this honorable body, "Nations do not go to war over a promissory note." Now, if they are not to be collected by war—and God forbid that we shall ever try such a brutal method—we must find some business or common-sense way to adjust these financial obligations. Now they are absolutely stagnant and as dead as last summer's maple leaves.

Let us review a little history. What was the World War? It was a struggle by wellnigh all the nations on the face of the earth to settle international disputes and differences by force of arms. Conference would have been infinitely better, for justice would have held more steadily the scales. Even a bad settlement by conference would have been vastly preferable to the ungodly cost of life and treasure which resulted when the conference table was transferred from the anteroom to "no man's land", where all nations got the worst of the bargain, victors and vanquished alike. At any rate, from that attempted settlement of international difficulties by brute force, civilization had a bill rendered to it by the god of war to the extent of $300,000,000,000, representing the material treasure wasted in the war, and that was its cost only to the date of the armistice. Its resultant effects on trade, commerce, and values have almost doubled this colossal sum. Besides that, many tens of millions of men, women, and children, most of them boys, were the casualties of that holocaust—those who were killed in action, those who died of wounds, those who died from diseases and other causes directly attributable to the war, and those who were incapacitated by wounds.

Only a fool would suppose that after a tremendous conflict like the World War, with its unprecedented destruction of wealth and human life, the world could, in a stride, go back to the pre-war tempo of events. All the pre-war problems remained unsettled by the war, and to them hundreds of new ones were added, more far-reaching and acute than those attempted to be settled by force of arms from 1914 to 1918. Indeed, the disillusionment, the loss of faith, the discouragement, the prejudices, the debts, and the misery following the World War have poised all of civilization again upon the very brink of new hostilities, strange and insane though it seems. The world is a veritable armed camp. Little has been settled and little has been attempted in the way of settlement since November 1918. Indeed, the world was never more in a state of unsettlement than now. It seems that most people, while deploring the terrible conflict of 20 years ago and its consequences, have preferred to drift helplessly into another terrible ordeal, or purposely to shut their eyes to it, rather than to strive for ways and means and the vision and the sense to avoid another great catastrophe to humanity.

The war debts represent only one phase, however important, of our international problem. We must consider and solve, in conjunction with the other nations, all the acute questions that are blocking world peace, stagnating world trade, and undermining confidence in our units of currency.

My resolution does not seek an adjustment of the debts alone. That is but one item—an indispensable item, in my humble opinion—but there are three other vital problems that must be considered and solved in connection with the settlement of these debts, problems whose solution will amply warrant and repay any type of reasonable adjustment of the allied and German indebtedness.

Let me take the pains to make my own position clear. In order that we may strip from the solution of the war-debt question the weeds and underbrush of useless controversy and misunderstanding, let me say with emphasis that this resolution and my remarks must not be interpreted as even suggesting that the war debts be reduced or readjusted as a proposition standing alone. I further desire to go on record as vigorously opposing disarmament by the United States alone, as an example to other nations, especially in this day of excessive, abnormal, and increasing armament among the nations. Armaments are relative; disarmament must also be relative. Likewise, I do not advocate stabilization of the currency of the United States as a gesture toward the stabilization of the currencies of other countries, because any stabilization would be short lived and might be highly injurious to our own country if it were not based upon international agreement, particularly among the larger financial nations.

So, too, I am not in favor of the United States alone lowering its tariffs to stimulate the trade of foreign nations, without those nations according the United States equal advantages and privileges.

In short, reverting to the war debts, so far as I am concerned, their present amount shall remain untouched unless and until the other three indispensable factors to world recovery and world peace are included. For even if the debts were paid in full tomorrow morning, or canceled in toto today, or whatever solution might be made of the debts alone, there would yet be no hope for humanity to emerge from confusion and disorganization all over the earth unless such a settlement of the war debts were conditioned upon and accompanied by a return to international economic sanity.

Thus there are four questions which, to my mind, are vital both for recovery from the depression and for the protection of civilization, and I measure my words in making that observation. They are:

First. A reasonable cash settlement of the war debts owing to the Government of the United States by the European allied governments and by Germany.

Second. Drastic general reduction of armament, as nearly pro rata as possible, including an immediate universal 5-year holiday or moratorium in arms construction.

Third. Stabilization of currencies by international agreement; and Fourth. Revival of sound world trade.

It is perhaps well to recall the original settlement of the war debts. Our Debt Funding Commission, operating from 1922 to 1926, made various and varying settlements with our European debtors. The effect of these debt-funding settlements, according to banking tables and a book issued by the Brookings Institution, which I quoted in a little book I wrote on the subject with which many Senators are familiar, was to reduce the then present cash value of these debts—assuming that they were good and collectible—from $12,000,000,000 of combined principal and interest to about $7,000,000,000. The Allies owed us $12,000,000,000 on notes which had no security, or practically no security behind them, as we generally conceive it, and which they could not pay. These were exchanged for notes, in financial effect, for $7,000,000,000, which, as conditions developed through the present catastrophic depression, they are likewise unable to pay as they stand. Certainly without effects that would be dangerous to the whole world.

The kind of settlement envisaged by my resolution is illustrated at least as a basis for negotiation in a plan entitled "Liquidating World Depression", recently published by the Business Men's Committee of Chicago, which I shall put into the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, and it is well worth reading as a means of seeing what might possibly be done. Under its terms the United States would get serial cash payments on bonds or notes satisfactorily secured or guaranteed so as to make all the payments certain, but such settlement would be made only as a part of a complete program for world improvement, as contemplated by my resolution.

In passing it might be well to call attention to the fact—especially because there are some of my distinguished colleagues who were then Members of the Senate—that these unprecedented loans, amounting to $10,000,000,000, were made to the Allies to be used for purely destructive purposes. We might as well be honest with ourselves, which is what the word "realistic" ought to mean. It is my contention—and I think any experienced business man or banker will agree—that such huge loans made for destructive purposes, without any security, or substantially any security to protect them, are really uncollectible as business propositions. If money is loaned for constructive purposes, to create something, to produce something, especially where the loans are of immense size, there is a solid basis for the hope of collection, even though unsecured. But where the money is to be used for the destructive and wasteful purpose of carrying on a war, such advances cannot be considered from a business standpoint as a sound loan or as a bona fide investment. I could far more easily, if I were so inclined—which I am not—criticize the making of the original loans than the acceptance of even a poor compromise of loans so made. In fact, such loans and advances can be justified only upon the ground of our feverish interest in the war. This does not in any sense detract from the legality of the debts, or even the equity as between the United States and the European nations. I make this statement in naked terms of business and common sense. We got into this mess of bad debts, and any merchant or any man with horse sense in such a situation would make the best adjustment possible. In addition, it may be said that the ability to pay on the part of our war debtors has been seriously crippled since the debt-funding settlement by the most devastating depression of all time. If the earlier adjustment was justified, a restudy under present world conditions is certainly in order.

I refer to the plan of the Chicago Businessmen's Committee once more to call attention to the fact that it deals with the German war debt owing to our Government on identically the same terms as that of the Allies. Thus, no distinction is made, nor do I favor any distinction in the adjustment of these war debts between our old allies and associates and our former enemy but now our friend. To me all these differences are forgotten in dealing with this subject.

I said that a business man would make the best adjustment possible in a similar situation. Now, what is the best adjustment possible? It is not only to secure a fair percentage of our war debts in cash, which we very much need at this time, but also to obtain the tremendous collateral advantages so vital not only to the United States but to all the nations of the world. By far the largest expenditures in the budgets of the various nations are the war items, among which, as everyone knows, armaments are conspicuous. From five billion to six billion dollars every year are now being squeezed from the overburdened and largely impoverished taxpayers of the world for fresh quantities of munitions. Today the world has more armaments than ever before in peace time. The only purpose of these huge increases in instruments of slaughter is that they are being built for an expected war. Otherwise there would be no justification. They have no other purpose. While the United States is not directly involved in the European controversies, the excessive arming of the European nations forces us to spend enormous sums of money to keep up with the military procession. I am informed that the United States will spend more money on armaments this year and next year than any other single nation, notwithstanding the fact that it is the overwhelming desire of our people to avoid war and to cease constant preparation for war by large and excessive armament building.

We seem to the foreign nations to be speaking the language of peace, but to be building the instruments of war. That is identically the same impression we get of the other nations. We cannot understand why they are not convinced of our peaceful intent and purpose, and they fail to see what we think we clearly see, that their purposes are militaristic and martial, just as in war it is always the enemy of each country that is the aggressor and the other country is fighting purely a war of defense. Something must be done to call a halt on such a perilous and unnecessary condition. Again, I think my resolution points the way.

Consider for a moment the question of armaments as a purely economic or financial proposition. The easiest possible way to balance our Budget and, indeed, to balance every national budget in the world, is to get an agreement of the nations to cease building armaments for a while. Can we not convince the other nations, and should they not convince us, that the world can worry along—at least, the peoples who fight the battles and pay the bills—without a war for another 5 or 10 years? Is this too much to ask of civilized peoples? Why not try an experiment in real peace and see how it works? Hence the proposal for an immediate 5-year holiday in arms construction is a short cut, and the greatest single short cut out of the depression for all the nations. It will also be the first de facto world declaration of peace in history. We have witnessed, thanks in large measure to the untiring efforts of the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], a de jure declaration of peace, the Briand-Kellogg Peace Pact. We thus have peace by law and treaty. Now let us have peace by concrete universal action, by a moratorium on arms building, and make the treaty worth while. Why is not a moratorium in armaments at least as feasible and as desirable for relief as the well-known moratoriums on debts?

The United States, for example, under such a proposed arms holiday, would save, in regular construction, about $300,000,000 a year, and doubtless we could also manage to avoid the expenditure of a large part of the billion dollars under present legislation. In the same way, the European nations could save perhaps a billion dollars a year during such holiday. Think of that! Thus their internal national budgets could be put into balance, and an immediate and vast increase in world buying power would also come. If there is any reason why such a holiday or moratorium in arms should not be agreed upon by all the nations, it can only reside in the imagination of a Baron Munchausen or come out of the mouth of Mars himself.

And yet, while every nation builds increasing armaments because all other nations are doing it, in another sense the primary cause for armaments is intimately connected with economic and monetary questions. The desire to have armaments primarily springs from fear. Fear springs from unsound economic conditions, internal and external. Unsound economic conditions are themselves produced by war, and they in turn sow the seeds of another war. This is a most vicious and perilous international circle.

In dealing with the four subjects covered by my resolution, I find myself largely enveloped in the discussion of war. This is more or less inevitable. It is becoming more and more recognized by all students and thinkers on the subject of world conditions that the overwhelming factor in the present distracted condition of the world is the war itself. Our current historians are rapidly coming to the unanimous conclusion that after all is said and done, the great problem that civilization has to solve is the problem of war. For example, I quote from a radio address delivered on May 9, 1935, by the professor of industry and dean of the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce of the University of Pennsylvania. He used very striking language. I quote him:

First, it is silly, idle, and futile for us to assume that we are ever going to attain stability in our economic order so long as we are recovering from the effects of past great wars; or laying our plans and basing our policies upon the expectation of future wars. Our modern economic structure is so delicately adjusted and its equilibrium is of such a slowly developing character that we simply cannot stand great wars. Another war such as that of 1914-18 may well destroy western society. Great wars destroy markets; add insurmountable obstacles to trade; undermine both national and international systems of currency and credit; develop bad debt-forming habits; overexpand certain lines of industry and agriculture beyond our capacity and desire to buy; generally speed up the processes of economic change so that the number of difficult adjustments is increased; fertilize the soil for future wars; and generally create conditions of uncertainty and insecurity which inhibit business enterprise, reduce employment, and make rational solution difficult.

He sums the whole thing up beautifully in the philosophy and the fact which he weaves into that observation.

Here is vividly epitomized the earthquake effect of war upon the economic and financial mechanism of the nations.

When the last war was over the financial structure of many nations was violently altered. For example, in the United States before the war we were an exporting and a debtor Nation. After the war the United States has been an exporting and a creditor Nation. Germany lost her export trade and her colonies and became the greatest debtor nation, at least under the terms of the Versailles Treaty. Great Britain's creditor position was seriously impaired, and with each succeeding year rivalries have taken English commerce away, due primarily to the fact that England for 4 years thought of munitions more than she did of exports.

Faced with all these dislocations of trade and commerce, and burdened with an unprecedented and unpayable debt, with great amounts of unemployment, and with business adjustments of necessity taking place, governments turned to currency manipulation, which in most cases amounted to internal repudiation, as a means of temporary, if not permanent escape. Germany was the first to pursue or be afflicted with this precipitous course. From 1919 to 1923 the mark spiraled downward from around 25 cents to zero, necessitating a complete rebuilding of Germany's currency. In 1926 France, by repeated borrowings against mounting deficits, saw her franc drop to less than 2 cents, from its armistice-date value of around 18 cents, and only the heroic efforts of President Poincaré saved the French people from a fate like that under which the German people had agonized. Then the Japanese depreciated their currency. The Italians followed and depreciated their currency. Then the English depreciated their currency in 1931, and finally the United States depreciated its currency. So, the wicked spiral of war, currency depreciation and armament burdens bored into the heart and soul of mankind. The economic war for supposed self-preservation goes on.

Depreciated monetary units were used in the post-war period where bullets had been used during the actual conflict, and as our own currency position became more insecure our taxes mounted, especially as we also increased our armaments. Civilization, already staggering, was thus dealt a double blow by governments everywhere. Of course, there were some trade advantages to be reached by depreciated currency, though all economists concede that they are but temporary. So, hand in hand with the race for bigger and better armaments the governments vied with each other to drive their money toward the point of worthlessness in their death struggle for trade survival, but armaments and currency depreciation were justified by distracted statesmen in all governments as necessary to preserve or to increase trade.

The next step was the policy of embargo, tariff quotas, exchange control, and the like, which operated on the thesis that each country would sell everything it made to the world and buy practically nothing in return. As all countries adopted, to a greater or less extent, this selfish, one-way philosophy of trade, all international commerce worthy of the name necessarily fell to an irreducible minimum, and as it fell the army of unemployed grew and grew, until it had in its ranks—think of it!—more men than actually were under the colors in the World War on Armistice Day of 1918, and still we say the time has not come to cooperate to rebuild an insane and dislocated world.

The Four Horsemen are still riding throughout Christendom in this year 1935. Captain War Debts fires his barrages of hate and prejudice back and forth. Captain Depreciated Currency strikes fear into the heart of industry and agriculture all over the earth. Captain Armament ties millions of men, in the form of taxpayers and consumers, to his chariot wheels, while a majority of the young adult population of all nations leave their posts as wealth producers and receive intensive training in the manly art of universal destruction. In the meantime, back of the hosts under Captains Embargo and Quota, men, women, and children starve behind the lines, crying for bread and work, while impoverished governments consume the remaining wealth of the world to feed and succor the increasing numbers of unemployed, much after the manner of a man trying to lift himself up by his bootstraps.

Yet, with the whole world headed toward the most sanguinary and cruel conflict of which the imagination of a Mephistopheles could conceive, with unemployment the daily care and problem of every government beneath the sun, with unstabilized currency systems sapping the remaining vestiges of confidence in the mind and heart of every business man and producer, and with the burden of armaments squeezing the last tithe of tribute from an overtaxed world—with all these phenomena as clear as the light of day, there are those who counsel this continued status in the affairs of men, even though we sink further and further, while they hesitate; and while they hesitate we aggravate it to its nth power rather than to try, by a united front, to restore some order in civilization.

There is only one great general who can down the Four Horsemen. Never, when he has unsheathed his sword, has he failed. He is the leader who, in every great emergency, becomes the man of the hour, and quenches the fire of passion and induces the return of sanity. This leader is General Common Sense.

After all, Senators, there are only two alternatives. One is to leave things as they are, in spite of the deadly drift toward ruin which a continuance of the present situation will inevitably entail. The other is to act to avoid the deadly drift, to turn its flank.

Every man in this body, including myself, justifies his vote for increased armaments because other nations have increased their armaments. Likewise, every man in this body justifies embargo tariffs because other nations have embargo tariffs. Yet almost every man in this body would greatly prefer to avoid these drastic measures but for the fact that other nations have forced us to adopt this course. What we say about other nations they say about us. The vicious circle produces world vertigo.

If my premise be sound, then the way to get rid of the depreciated currencies is by international agreement, on a fair and equitable basis, of course. The way to get rid of embargo tariffs, quotas, and exchange control is by international agreement, of course. The way to get rid of excessive armaments and the fears they create and the expense they engender is by international agreement. The most beneficial way to solve the problem of the war debts is in conjunction with these three other vital matters, and to promote a plan possible of fulfillment in this quasi-bankrupt world which will return to ourselves and to our debtors the maximum amount of resultant stability and prosperity. For this I stand, and I confidently bespeak for it the whole-hearted approval of our people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if our difficulties are largely external—and I contend that they are—then our treatment must be largely external if we are to escape the impasse in which we find ourselves. Certainly these excruciating conditions are found everywhere in the world, varying only in degree, and therefore our remedies must be correspondingly broad and comprehensive. What we want is a cure, not a palliative—a permanent, not a temporary treatment of these matters. The situation calls for a surgical operation, not a mustard plaster.

Let me refer for a moment to South America. Those Latin countries were not in the war except nominally. The only cost to them of the war was the dire effects caused by the disruption of trade and the dwindling, almost to the point of extinction, of the demand for raw materials. Our citizens own several billion dollars of the bonds of those South American countries, the original purchase price of which was par, and all but one or two of them are, and for some years have been, in default in both principal and interest. Here we can see the results of the war, thousands of miles away from the arena of war itself, and in countries which furnished not a soldier nor a gun as their contribution to the struggle. Here we have a debt situation in which our investing citizens would rejoice in any kind of a fair settlement or compromise. These South American bonds are selling on the New York Stock Exchange for almost nominal sums—certainly less, for both principal and interest, than the amount of overdue interest alone. I feel sure that if the question of an adjustment of these debts arose there would be no disagreement. The Senate would be unanimous in recommending any reasonable compromise. The trouble is that these countries are not able and will not be able to make a reasonable adjustment of these sovereign debts until world trade shall have been restored and until they shall be able to sell their huge surpluses of raw material the world over.

In illustration of another phase of this important international question, let me refer briefly to this country's world trade. We export, generally speaking, about 8 percent of our total production. Some people say that 8 percent of our trade is of such little importance that we do not have to bother about it; that is to say, a paltry 8 percent is negligible. According to that philosophy, may I say that to have in the United States 4,000,000 employables, without work would likewise be of no particular importance because that large number of unemployed is also but 8 percent of the people of this country over 16 years of age who work. In other words, if we had 4,000,000 unemployed, that is 8 percent, there would still be 92 percent of our people employed, and hence under this theory it would not be a matter of any significance. If 8 percent of all we produce is sold abroad, then 8 percent of all who are employed are being paid their wages to produce things not to be consumed in this country, but which must find a market outside the United States. The 8 percent, or 4,000,000 workers, would be permanently unemployed but for this foreign trade, and their unemployment would cause still others to lose their opportunity to earn a livelihood, for the purchasing power of the 4,000,000 now working to supply foreign markets would be cut off. So, if the 8 percent of our total production which has hitherto gone into foreign trade is lost, then the 8 percent of our working people—as I said, 4,000,000 human beings—must become permanent charges upon the city, county, State, and National Governments. Including dependents, 16,000,000 would be the number, and if one will consider the magnitude of relief requirements he will realize that observation to be extremely significant in this year and day of the depression. Of course, the reasoning of this 8-percent philosophy is both fallacious and short-sighted.

Mr. President, one frequently hears the statement from those opposed to international conferences, that the United States "never lost a war nor won a conference." That is a well-rounded epigram, pleasing to the ear, but the truth is that no modern nation ever really won a war, and if conference is the alternative to war, then no modern nation ever really lost a conference—not even the United States.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I know the Senator is well versed in history; but, as a matter of fact, we did win a conference once. That conference was in 1815 at Ghent. We lost the War of 1812, but won the conference at Ghent.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator for his observation, but I was using my illustration for another purpose. For my part, whatever may be said of the distant past, I believe it is now a truism that a nation loses vastly more in an apparently victorious war than it does in a compromise or an admittedly losing conference.

Consider for a moment any conference in which we have ever engaged. One may not like international conferences, but I like them much better than the consequences and cost of the last war, and they are the only means to avert, or at least to try to avert, the consequences of another war.

Moreover, I myself feel a sense of rising nationalistic protest against the proposition that we have not brains, courage, and skill enough to state our case and to hold our own in discussions and conferences with other nations. We do not ascribe any such inferiority complex to our citizens and representatives in any other capacity than in the diplomatic or the political. Are we so politically inept and unskillful that when we go into a conference with foreign groups we lose all mental poise, all astuteness, and sense of moral responsibility? I not only believe that we have ample manhood for the purpose but I would be willing and perfectly satisfied to have the entire delegation to such a conference selected from a single small body of Americans, to wit, my colleagues in the Senate. I care not whether they are labeled irreconcilables or nationalists, militarists or pacifists, I have the utmost confidence that, so far as the purport and compass of my resolution are concerned, they would all be fitted for the task and would hold their own with all comers. I could think of, offhand, five or six Members of this body, one of whom sits next to me and another who sits across the aisle, who would be a credit to any nation on the face of the earth as its representatives in a conference called to deal with world problems and those affecting humanity.

But even if our representatives, however selected, were unequal to the task, or for any other reason we were not successful at the conference, the results of the conference, whatever they might be, would finally have to be passed upon by this body; for the United States Senate must ratify or reject any treaty which might emanate from such conference.

So, when we say that we are incapable of holding our own in an international conference, we are really, in effect, accusing our Executive, our State Department, and our Senate of diplomatic imbecility. If this accusation be true—which I vehemently and utterly deny—we certainly have a way of escape, by turning all these matters over to our business men, who seem to be able to hold their own, and more, with foreign business men. But I take this self-deprecating statement to be rather a witty epigram than a reflection upon the men whose names figure in American diplomatic history. The fault may occasionally be in the specific selection, not in the intellectual and moral manhood of America.

To this observation let me add another: Vastly more will be lost by refusing to participate in a conference for the settlement of the vexing questions which are covered by my resolution than can be gained by a thousand years of the philosophy of ultranationalism which today dominates us all. After all, the paramount end of these conferences is to get rid of war. Far from saying that we should not participate in conferences which must consider wars and the effects of wars in all their bearings, I contend that we must do so whether we like it or not, whether we are capable or puerile. There is no escape from our stake in the rest of civilization, though we build 100 Chinese walls around our coasts. For, again, we come back to the central proposition that the main cause of our economic woes was that greatest and most destructive of all tragedies, the World War.

Let me now quote, in further corroboration of this view, an eminent professor of economics and director of the College of Business Administration of Lehigh University (Dr. Neil Carothers). He sums up the situation in a recent article, as follows:

Our present depression grew out of the conditions created by a tragic World War, which ate the heart out of the capital of European nations, disorganized foreign trade, and demoralized the credit and currency systems of all the world. We do not yet know enough to control the economic consequences of a World War.

This depression is not due to the collapse of the capitalistic system or to the exploitation of the workers by the capitalists, or to the mistakes of the banks, or even to the orgy of speculation which swept over the country. It is due to the World War. It is not an economic depression but a world depression. It did not begin in the United States but in foreign countries.

May I add my own humble interpretation of the present economic impasse? I agree that the depression is due very largely to the World War; but let me add that since the World War its continuance is a purely man-made depression, made by men and by governments who refused to take heed of the changed economy of their respective nations, of the dislocation of business, of the terrible waste of life and treasure, and who persisted in carrying on, when the war was over, just as though the war itself had never taken place. We have intensified all of this depression because we have been unwilling to meet face to face the problems that must be solved if the world is to be repaired and rehabilitated.

While we hesitate, what do we see in our own country? From ten to twelve million workers without employment—they have been without employment for 10! these many years—20,000,000 people on relief or dole; State school systems supported in part by the National Government in 31 of our 48 States; laws providing for municipal bankruptcy; national laws providing for the legal repudiation of private debts; public-works programs amounting to $4,000,000,000; a reduction in the producing of wealth by farm, factory, mine, and forest; devaluation of our money; the impounding of the metal behind our currency; a rising and unprecedented national debt; and a great spurt in the building of new armaments. I do not point out these phenomena by way of criticism or egotistic hindsight, but I contend—and I think with reason on my side—that those who may oppose an international conference to deal with the four vital subjects covered by my resolution would say—inferentially, at least—that they favor a continuance of the abnormal conditions which I have briefly described. This is laissez faire gone mad.

Let this be said, for fear my remarks may be misinterpreted: Short of a world willing to cooperate to cut down armaments, to reduce taxes, and to eliminate fear; short of a world willing to revive world trade in the interest of creating more wealth, more work, and a return of prosperity; short of a world willing to restore business confidence at home and abroad, through stabilizing and standardizing the yardsticks by which men may measure their toll and their wealth—in fact, short of clearing the road to national as well as international progress, such phenomena as I have described are inevitable. There is no escape from that. If we continue to tolerate the conditions which make unemployment inevitable, we must continue to pay the dole which unemployment makes inevitable, and we must continue to feel and live in an atmosphere of insecurity, uncertainty, and instability. I care not whether the administration be Democratic or Republican, or what not. Politics does not enter into any phase of my resolution or intentionally into any part of my remarks.

It is only just to interpolate at this point the statement that this body has given an almost unprecedented example, for the most part in the past 2 years, of freedom from the warp of partisanship. The Members of this body have tried to do, and to let others do—even when the programs were purely experimental—things that were genuinely intended to help our country and, through our country, to help the world. Most of these things have related to domestic policies. It is a truism that when we touch the water's edge, when we make or develop an international policy, partisanship is far less pardonable than when applied to purely domestic affairs.

It is a byword upon the streets of our country that Europe is headed for another war. Students of international affairs like Frank H. Simonds in our own country and Mr. Brailsford in England have recently exhibited the cold realities which directly forecast another European war unless something unforeseen saves the day. We may lightly say "The next time we will remain aloof and keep out of the war." Ah, but who knows? We went into the last war and our involvement cannot even be charged to the League of Nations, for it was not then in existence; nor to the World Court, for it, too, was not then in existence. History sometimes has a way of repeating itself. Who knows what incident may take place, what sudden, unexpected happening in spite of all our safeguards and resolutions may, like a magnet, draw us into another conflict? Why take the chance?

But even if we stay out, who is there that will say that the United States can pursue the even tenor of her way after the resources of Europe have been depleted and all world commerce paralyzed? We will not extend credit again to European countries in the next war. They will not have the money nor the goods nor the services to offer in exchange for our products. As they will not have the money to buy our products the present unemployment in America will be only a small part of the then unemployment which will be the minimum price to us of another great European war, even though we succeed in keeping out of the conflict. The very conditions against which we inveigh at this moment are our inheritance from the last war. Who, then, can suppose that our inheritance from another war can but multiply our present difficulties?

One thing is certain, and upon that we can agree. If this European war comes—and it is too near the brink for international comfort—and our European debtors become involved in another war, what will then be the value of our war debts after that struggle shall be ended? Who will be bold enough to say that they will have any value? Hence, my resolution could be accepted solely on the ground that we would better get out from under, that we would better collect what we reasonably can from nations whose utter financial collapse is inevitable if another war comes. Thus, again, I appeal to the common business sense of my colleagues.

There is another thing that I want especially to emphasize. My resolution envisages no international entanglements of any kind, whether mentioned in Washington's Farewell Address or not. On the contrary, my resolution, if carried to its legitimate conclusion, will serve to disentangle us from the European entanglements of the last war. I challenge any Member of this body to deny the overwhelming truth and importance of this statement. In an ordered world we can afford to remain aloof. In a disordered world, even where the will exists to remain aloof, we cannot always do so. Man proposes, but God disposes.

Finally, what objection can there be to the adoption of this resolution? If the conference is called, the results of that conference will have to be submitted to the Senate of the United States for ratification or rejection. Hence, if we lose that conference—as it is said humorously we always do—it will be lost not by the men who carried on the conference but by the United States Senate, which would ratify their work. For the worst that can happen to us is to remain as we are, to reject the results of the conference for reasons which, of course, the Senate will consider good and sufficient. If nothing will have been obtained after the nations of the world have been assembled at Washington, at least we shall have tried to reestablish sanity in the affairs of the world. If good is accomplished, the Senate can ratify it and gain for ourselves and the other nations an irresistible momentum on the road to recovery. We can lose nothing. We can gain much.

Too long the world has ignored or evaded the great impediments which stand in the way of human progress at home and abroad. If for no other reason, the consequences of our inertia should lash us into action, as we gaze on a world disorganized, preparing for another bloody conflict, while the bent backs of all humanity support the staggering burden of taxation. I propose action, not inaction, in such an emergency. I propose trial rather than submission. I propose humanity rather than inhumanity, peace rather than war, stability rather than instability, sane cooperation rather than blind isolation; in brief, a conference of the leading nations of the world to stabilize currencies and bring about a drastic measure of disarmament, a revival of wholesome and balanced world trade, and in connection with these things a sane and possible settlement of the stagnated war debts.

Shall we hesitate? Shall we dally longer along the road to national and international ruin? While we hesitate the social worker listens to the tales of misery from idle millions, the farmer produces on only a part of his productive acres, the Government debt mounts, fear grows, and war draws near.

All the subjects with which I have dealt are the progeny of war. What is war in this day and time? The bombing of cities and towns, with the death of women and children; the destruction of commerce; the end of the journey for millions of brave men before the insidious onslaught of poison gas; the destruction of billions of dollars in wealth in countries where countless thousands subsist on the dole; and all to what purpose? That some nation may be for a moment victorious, to be swept in the next instant to the ranks of the defeated foes by the overwhelming flood of international economic disorganization and ruin.

I am not afraid for the United States of America, either on the battlefield or at the conference table. Her great power, the industry of her people, their fortitude in the face of danger, and their humanity in the face of disaster, flood my heart with a fulsome pride not only in her past, but in her ability to meet the men of any nation in the solution of our present problems on the basis of honorable equality.

We should be afraid not to act, when one visualizes the inevitable consequences which will overrun the world when another great war shall have taken its toll of life and treasure.

Believing intensely, as I do, in the wisdom of the action I here propose, what a salutary thing it would be in this disillusioned and embittered world were the Senate of the United States, without a single dissenting voice, to rise to the full height of its moral stature, and, with a sound head and a humane heart, give to the world an example of courageous leadership in undertaking the solution of the most arduous economic task of all time!

Let the United States propose to the nations to be assembled at Washington a new world policy—a live-and-let-live policy—and dedicate it to the plain people of both hemispheres.

Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a proposed plan about which I shall say nothing except that it is a very worthy plan as a basis for thought and consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LIQUIDATING WORLD DEPRESSION

Some energetic economist might well collate and catalog both the ascribed causes of the depression and the numerous remedies prescribed to a suffering world for emergence therefrom. Despite the conflicting theories thus gathered together and the confusions of thought thereby engendered, there looms at least one "bright particular star" to guide our feet. Enough time has now elapsed and adequate perspective developed to make it incontrovertibly clear that the overwhelming cause of our economic woes was the frightful wastage of the World War and its turbulent and profligate aftermath. The generally accepted estimate of the cost of the war in economic waste is $300,000,000,000, or approximately one-third of the accumulated wealth of the world. Not content with this exhibition of economic insanity, the nations, intent upon maintaining an indefinite armed peace, have expended on new armaments since the armistice the incredible sum of $50,000,000,000. With Europe now echoing alarms of war, expenditures for world armaments have been boosted up to $6,000,000,000 a year. This made race to the "next war" is being run at crushing expense and at the fatal risk of civilization itself. The situation defies rhetorical exaggeration. Probably 100,000,000 of the people of America and Europe are living under the subsistence level. This large part of the human family in daily want offers a shameful contrast to the official investment of many billions of dollars every year in instruments of slaughter. The world now has the greatest sum total of armaments in history and the twentieth century is challenged to vindicate its right to the name "civilization" by inaugurating a general holiday in armament building to assure recovery from the protracted ravages of the depression. We have had a moratorium on debts; why, for example, cannot a moratorium on arms construction be declared by all the nations? It is difficult to conceive of a single plausible objection to such moratorium or holiday by any nation acting in good faith.

The plan proposed herein is offered as a way out of this international labyrinth. It seeks largely to relieve the after-burdens of the war, drastically reduce the staggering costs of armaments, revive for our farmers and manufacturers a normal foreign market, stabilize world currencies by international agreement, make possible a return to prosperity, and to promote genuine and durable world peace. It does not exclude or hamper other constructive measures but, on the contrary, it will serve to facilitate and insure them.

Two of the cardinal assumptions of the plan are:

(1) That the World War and the two post-war panics have so shrunk the wealth, so stagnated the business, so burdened the budgets, and so crippled the paying power of the nations that a new, comprehensive, and mutually advantageous readjustment of the war legacies is made necessary in the common interest.

(2) That the United States, being the only clear creditor among the nations, and having expended $38,000,000,000 (exclusive of our loans and credits to the Allies) in the war, without asking, or receiving, any compensation therefor at the peace table, has the right and faces the duty to make these proposals and demands in the name of justice, stability, suffering humanity, and world peace.

The arithmetic of the plan is summarized as follows:

OUTLINE OF PLAN (I TO VII)

I. Allied payments to the United States

Total principal amount in round numbers, of loans and credits by the United States to the Allies, during the war and shortly after the armistice, commonly called "Allied debts"-----	$10,000,000,000
The United States to be paid in all a total sum of 60 percent of such principal amount or-----	6,000,000,000
Upon such 60 percent the Allies are given credit for the amounts already paid in cash-----	2,700,000,000
Balance of the 60 percent remaining to be paid by the Allies to the United States-----	3,300,000,000

I. Allied payments to the United States—Continued

The plan provides that this balance of $3,300,000,000 be divided into 12 equal annual installments and paid as follows:

Immediate cash payment on the consummation of settlement, say, June 15, 1935..... $275,000,000

And a like amount of $275,000,000 on June 15 of each of the next 11 succeeding years. The 11 deferred annuities to be secured or guaranteed in a manner satisfactory to the United States so that the adjustment thus made will be final and not subject to revision or reconsideration at any future time. Installment annuities to bear interest after their respective maturities at the rate of 5 percent per annum.

Memo (a) and (b):

(a) As this adjustment would go into effect at the close of the 3 years of grace given to Germany under the 10 percent 1932 Lausanne conditional settlement between the Allies and Germany, there will be owing to the Allies from Germany under this Lausanne settlement the sum of.....

800,000,000

The payment thereof by Germany would terminate and discharge all the Allied claims for reparations against her. This would reduce the sum needed to be raised by the Allies for payments hereunder to $2,500,000,000, or about $200,000,000 a year for only 12 years as against the previous debt settlements which called for similar annual installments for 62 years.

(b) The 60 percent, or $6,000,000,000, is a lump sum or joint settlement, the Allies to determine their respective contributions or percentages of payment thereof as among themselves. This lump-sum settlement would relieve the United States of the burden, delay, and friction of the previous protracted negotiations with a dozen or more nations, and we would avoid discussing the unjust disparities claimed by certain Allies in the former settlements. There is no reason why the Allies should not settle their own differences and disparities of payment by themselves. The negotiations to that end may also force the solution of some of the acute political problems which so disturb Europe and whose settlement would greatly advance the peace of Europe. Indeed, such debt settlement by us might well superinduce general appeasement so vitally needed in Europe, and thus greatly facilitate the drastic universal reduction of armaments without which durable world peace can never be attained.

II. German payments to the United States

The United States to accept in adjustment and compromise of our two claims against Germany, one arising from the army of occupation costs and the other from the Mixed Claims Commission, the same percentage basis as in the case of the allied indebtedness, namely, 60 percent of the original principal, crediting thereon the cash amounts heretofore paid by Germany to the United States:

(a) Army of occupation costs.....	$250,000,000
60 percent of original principal.....	150,000,000
Less cash paid by Germany thereon.....	68,000,000
	$82,000,000
(b) Mixed Claims Commission, original principal.....	227,000,000
60 percent thereon.....	136,000,000
Less cash paid by Germany thereon.....	52,000,000
	84,000,000

Total amount of German settlement with the United States in 12 years..... 166,000,000

This amount, $166,000,000, to be paid by Germany to the United States in 12 equal installments of $14,000,000 each, beginning September 15, 1935; the installments to bear interest at the rate of 5 percent after maturity.

III. Liquidation of allied and interallied debts and reparations

All the interallied debts (that is, debts owing by the European allies among themselves, as distinguished from the allied debts which are owing to the United States) arising from the war, and of which there are, roughly speaking, $7,000,000,000 owing to Great Britain, $2,000,000,000 owing to France, and $1,000,000,000 owing to Italy, to be canceled and discharged. Thus the whole tangled network of allied and interallied debts and of German reparations, which at the time of the June 1931 moratorium amounted to the colossal grand total of $30,000,000,000, can be disentangled and discharged upon the payment of about 15 percent thereof, or four and a quarter billion dollars.

IV. General disarmament

All the foregoing adjustments and settlements to be conditioned upon the general and reciprocal acceptance of a drastic program of disarmament, as nearly universal as possible. This program to consist of two parts:

(a) A complete holiday (subject to completions, replacements, and repairs under existing disarmament treaties) in all types of armament construction for a period of 5 years; that is, until after assured recovery from the ravages of the economic depression.

(b) Progressive and, as far as is equitable, proportional reduction of armaments during the 5-year holiday so that at the end of the holiday period the total reduction will be substantially 50 percent of their present level.

The money savings to be effected by these two processes of disarmament are conservatively estimated to be:

Holiday saving for the United States for each of the 5 years.....	$300,000,000
50-percent reduction per year for the United States after 5-year holiday.....	250,000,000
Holiday saving for Europe for each of the 5 years.....	1,200,000,000
Savings on 50-percent reduction per year for Europe after the holiday.....	750,000,000

V. Benefits under the plan to the United States and Europe

The annual benefits to our Budget by the payments to and savings by the United States under this plan are:

Annual payment in cash by the Allies to the United States.....	$275,000,000
German annual payments to United States in settlement hereunder.....	14,000,000
Annual savings to the United States by armament holiday.....	300,000,000
Total per annum.....	589,000,000

Summarizing the foregoing benefits to the United States, computed for the 12-year period, we have:

Amount received from Allies on the war-debt settlement hereunder would be $275,000,000 a year for 12 consecutive years, making a total cash payment of.....	$3,300,000,000
Amount received from Germany in settlement of our two claims against her would be $14,000,000 a year for 12 consecutive years, making a total cash payment of.....	$166,000,000
Saving to our Budget by armament holiday and drastic reduction for 12 years (estimated), $300,000,000 a year for 5 years of holiday, or $1,500,000,000, and $250,000,000 a year for the remaining 7 years, or $1,750,000,000, making a joint total in armament savings for 12 years.....	3,250,000,000

Total from payments and relief from armaments under this plan.....	6,715,000,000
Add the amount of cash hitherto received from the Allies.....	2,700,000,000

And we have a grand total of payments by the Allies and Germany owing to the United States, plus our own savings on armaments of..... 9,415,000,000

The amount of savings under the 50-percent reduction of armaments is necessarily an estimate. However, even exclusive of the recent "billion-dollar" Vinson naval bill, which largely goes into effect in 1936, and which could be suspended under the proposed plan, it is conservative to fix the amount of our savings at $250,000,000 annually.

The payments and savings under this plan would easily enable the balancing of our Federal Budget commencing with the fiscal year 1937.

After the 12 years the item of annual savings in armaments of $250,000,000—or whatever it exactly is—would continue indefinitely until changed by international agreement.

From the figures shown in provision IV above, Europe will save on armaments alone during the 12-year period at least..... $10,000,000,000

(Which ought greatly to ease the burden of payments hereunder and their yearly transfer.)

The Allies are getting under this plan another large reduction of their debt, and will continue to have the benefit of the 50-percent reduction of armaments indefinitely at the annual rate of..... 750,000,000

Also, the reopening of the world trade and the general stimulation of good will and economic appeasement would be of tremendous mutual advantage, and Europe and the United States would benefit from the increased foreign buying power of each.

VI. Monetary and trade agreements

The agenda for a conference to consider the plan should include the question of currency stabilization by international agreement and the question of the advisability of the return to a gold standard, likewise by international agreement, and reciprocal tariff and other trade arrangements. The natural effect of a general debt-disarmament adjustment, lifting the terrific mortgages of debt and reparations left by the war, would be to facilitate and expedite an adjustment of all these vexing monetary and economic problems in the spirit of fair play and common benefit. Recent developments have brought sharply to public attention the necessity of international agreement on the stabilization of currencies and the money standard of the world. It is difficult to visualize satisfactory world trade unless these acute problems are disposed of in the sunlight of good will and mutual interest.

VII

Although the United States Government has no direct or legal interest therein, it is hoped that in removing causes of international friction all the old disputed and so-called "repudiated" claims of British and other foreign subjects against 10 of our sovereign States be abandoned and discharged. The States involved are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, North Carolina, and South Carolina. These claims have nothing to do with our Civil War; some date back as far as 1842 (Mississippi) and as late as 1884 (Arkansas). The details of these so-called "repudiated" claims are fully set forth in a paper procurable from the Treasury Department entitled "Repudiation of State Indebtedness", and bearing date "Revised May 15, 1930."

In short there should be the broadest and most comprehensive adjustment and clean-up possible. The piecemeal and partial settlements dragged out through the past 13 years have got the world nowhere in terms of durable accomplishment. The reluctant and disappointing concessions made through these years have engendered friction rather than good will. The time has come for the nations, whose peoples are all suffering from the burdens of the war and the depression, to meet together with the determination to tackle and solve all the important questions that block international trade, prosperity, and world peace. Representatives of the nations should be selected for their ability to work out a program of reciprocal concession and sacrifice for the common good. While the United States should deservedly take the leadership in this movement and its people are willing to make further sacrifices beyond those already unprecedentedly made, it should not be asked to bear the lion's share of fresh concessions. Uncle Sam's surname is not Atlas.

VIEWS OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND OTHERS

It is well known that President Roosevelt has been balked in his preliminary efforts in the international field by the recurrent tendency of certain foreign emissaries to seek only those adjustments which are particularly beneficial to their countries. For example, emphasis is always laid by them on drastic reduction of the debts. A factor that is far more important, one that promises the greatest aid to financial recuperation and makes further debt reduction attractive, is drastic reduction of armaments. On the occasion of the meeting of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation in December 1933, President Roosevelt, in a notable address, said that "At least 90 percent of the world's population are willing further to reduce their armed forces tomorrow if every other nation in the world will agree to do the same thing. . . . If this 10 percent can be persuaded by the other 90 percent to do their own thinking and not be led, we will have practical peace, permanent peace, real peace, throughout the world."

It seems President Roosevelt's view is that the question of armaments and of debts should be linked together and adjusted together for the greatest possible benefit both to this country and to the world. It is not a question of logical relationship, but of common sense and practical results. And this epitomizes the overwhelming sentiment of the American people.

Senator BORAH, in a Senate speech in 1933, said: "So far as the debts in and of themselves are concerned, taking the debts naked and alone, there is no justification for the reduction or cancellation of these debts. But that is not all there is to this problem. . . . If we could open the markets for the American farm, revive trade and commerce, reestablish our monetary systems upon a sound basis, and drastically reduce the armaments of the world—speaking now of armaments purely as an economic proposition—I think it would be infinitely more valuable to the people of the United States than the payment of the debts. Whenever a program is presented which gives reasonable assurance that there will be a readjustment of the post-war problems, which, in my judgment, now stand in the way of normal operation of economic laws, and if these debts can be used in such a program to break the depression, I shall not hesitate to support the program."

The leading nations have from time to time the past 2 years given frequent expression to their respective countries' desire to reduce armaments and to advance the cause of world peace. These nations include both Germany and Japan. In the fall of 1934 Germany announced her willingness to return to the disarmament conference and even to agree upon general control and supervision of arms in Europe, insisting, however, upon equality of arms for herself. Both Chancellor Hitler and his aide, Dr. Hess, made this clear in their speeches. As late as February 24, 1935, Chancellor Hitler, speaking at Munich on the celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the founding of the National Socialist party, said: "We demand a guaranty of equality, freedom, and self-maintenance. With it, German honor rises again. We only know a 'no' and 'yes'—always 'yes' for peace and always 'no' for disregard of German honor. The world must recognize our 'yes' remains 'yes' and 'no' remains 'no.'" for disregard of German honor. The world must recognize our 'yes' remains 'yes' and 'no' remains 'no.'"

On October 29, 1934, Japan's Washington Ambassador, Hiroshi Saito, passed through Chicago and was interviewed on the subject of armaments and the then current naval conference in London. He said emphatically, "Japan favors drastic reduction of armament by everyone."

Of course, the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Russia have proclaimed just as strongly their devotion to world peace and their desire for drastic reduction of armaments.

If all these nations mean what they have all said, then drastic reduction of armament ought certainly to be attainable. If it is feared that some of them do not mean it, then it is high time that civilization has a show-down on this subject. A conference to consider and carry out some such proposal as contained herein might constitute an international "who's who" on this vital question. A definite line-up of the nations for peace by concrete action should be ascertained.

Recent disclosures in the opening sessions of our Senate's investigation of the manufacture and sale of arms were of such a nature that the responsible heads of the nations should welcome an opportunity to prove that they are not directly or indirectly in league with armament manufacturers and that they and their peoples are willing and eager to join in an equitable and drastic diminution of arms. This also would furnish an opportunity for the nations which are solemnly pledged so to do under article 8 of the League Covenant to cut down their burden of arms. Too long has this pledge lain fallow. The crisis is here; all the munitions factories in Europe are running at full speed and somebody must take the lead to stop the explosion that is inevitable if this thing continues. It is as if the whole world were living at the foot of a smoking volcano. Is civilization helpless?

Thus we see that reduction of armaments has vital relationship to both economic recovery and world peace. Just as the greatest saving can be made through a holiday in arms construction and drastic reduction of armaments, likewise peace pacts and peace commitments lose far too much of their practical value unless and until they are validated by drastic reduction of arms by all the nations. For if the disarmament is both general and as nearly pro rata as practicable, the fear of war would be abated and dispelled. It is too much to ask any nation alone to disarm for the sake of the example, just as it is equally unfair to ask the United States to cancel the war debts as a pure international gift.

Here, then, in the proposal drastically to reduce armaments, God and Mammon meet in harmony for the first time—the God of peace and the Mammon of money saving.

The foregoing plan is submitted as a people's plan, a business man's plan, free from technicalities, comprehensively covering most of the acute problems now plaguing international relations, suggesting a course of adjustment in harmony with present world economic conditions, and reasonably just and equitable to all the nations.

The will to adjust is the "will to peace."

SALMON O. LEVINSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Maryland will lie over under the rule.

ADDITIONAL HOME-MORTGAGE RELIEF—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on House bill 6021, providing additional home-mortgage relief, which was submitted to the Senate on May 16, and which was then read and ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report, which has already been read?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6021) to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

(For conference report see RECORD of Senate proceedings of Thursday, May 16, 1935, pp. 7640 to 7641.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

REGISTRATION OF LOBBYISTS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a few moments ago I was handed a statement signed by a number of legislative representatives of national organizations with reference to Senate bill 2512, for the registration of lobbyists. I send the statement to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have it read. It is very short.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

We, the undersigned legislative representatives of national organizations, wish to express to you our unqualified support of your bill (S. 2512) for the registration of lobbyists. We believe that nothing could more effectively protect the right of organized citizens to present in a legitimate way the public questions in which they are interested to their elected representatives in the Congress. We appreciate your public service in advocating this measure and wish to register in this way our approval.

EXTENSION OF THE N. R. A.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, on yesterday I spoke on the plans for a large N. R. A. demonstration in Washington today, and made reference to the desire for information concerning the sponsors of this demonstration.

I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 142) was read, as follows:

Whereas an organized group known as the "Industry and Business Committee for N. R. A. Extension" is admittedly seeking to influence legislation by means of mass demonstrations in Washington and by other methods; and

Whereas this group represents itself as speaking for a large section of business and industry; and

Whereas the chairman and/or the members of said group or committee have openly urged and stimulated a concentration of individuals in the Capital to demand that the Congress enact legislation to meet their wishes; and

Whereas the Industry and Business Committee for N. R. A. Extension has issued lists containing the personnel of its several committees: Be it

Resolved, That the National Recovery Administration be, and hereby is, directed to submit to the Senate of the United States, within 3 days, information showing whether or not any individual or individuals included in these lists, whose names follow, are, or have been, officials or employees of the National Recovery Administration and/or officials or employees of any of the several code authorities, together with total or annual salaries and/or other compensations paid to these individuals by the United States Treasury or from the funds of the code authorities:

Carl Whitney, Sol Herzog, Thurlow H. Gordon, Sylvan Gotshal, David L. Cole, George Nebolsine, Mitchell Shipman, Howard Heydon, G. H. Dorr, Col. Merrill G. Baker, Eric Calamia, Ward Cheney, A. C. Weigel, William Menke, Leo J. Goldberger, A. K. Hamilton, E. M. Dillhoefer, J. H. Whitehead, Kenneth I. Van Cott, David Orans, Frank L. Grennie, Hugo N. Schloss, Nathan Tufts, H. E. Bishop, A. R. Schneider, John W. Willmore, and George St. John, Jr.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the concluding part of the resolution sets out the names of some 40 men. They are members of one or the other of two committees, one known as the "General Committee of the Industry and Business Committee for N. R. A. Extension" and the other the "Subcommittee of Lawyers."

Since the resolution asks directly for information, I feel free to ask unanimous consent that it may be considered by the Senate at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, having just come into the Chamber, and not having had an opportunity to study the resolution, I feel constrained to suggest that it go over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over under the rule.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, before making any remarks on the pending question let me say that I undertook to make some inquiry relative to the precedents of the President delivering a veto message in person, and I find that there is no record of any President ever having appeared before either House or a joint session of the two Houses of Congress to deliver a veto message. There is no precedent. But our present President is a breaker of precedents. Our President has broken precedents before, and I have concurred in some of those activities.

I do not think Congress should necessarily tie itself down by precedents, because not only has the President asked the authority, or rather his friends have asked it, which means the same thing, to appear before the two Houses, but he also appeared at the Chicago convention and accepted there the nomination for the Presidency. I believe that was breaking a precedent. I do not believe anyone before the present President of the United States, whom some of our friends call "our beloved President", ever appeared at a national convention to accept the nomination of a party. He was the sole exception.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator believe that was unconstitutional? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. No; I do not think so. I do not think that the breaking of the precedent by appearing in Chicago was unconstitutional. But I am going to submit to my colleagues this question, not whether the breaking of the precedent was unconstitutional, but whether the breaking of the pledges involved in the breaking of the precedent could be held to be so sanctimonious.

I find no fault, gentlemen of the Senate, with the breaking of precedents. I have broken precedents myself. While, as is generally known, like all of my colleagues I am a slave to precedent when I can find a precedent which suits the purpose; when there is no precedent to suit the purpose, I follow my colleagues in undertaking to break a precedent on high and mighty grounds.

The Senator from Arizona has often said that the time comes when men must rise above principle. At least a time comes when men must rise above precedents. So I revert now to the last time when I took great notice of the breaking of a precedent, when our President, nominated President, or perhaps the better term would be "President-designate", appeared before the Chicago convention I listened to hear him break the precedent until he uttered what I shall read. This is what I heard come from the lips of the present President of the United States before he was President:

Throughout the Nation men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the Government of the last years, look to us here for guidance and for more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of national wealth. [Applause and cheering.]

I am glad, Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, that Mr. Roosevelt broke the precedent by appearing at Chicago. I am glad he went there. Whether or not Washington, or Adams, or Jackson, or Lincoln, or any other candidate went to the national convention by which he was nominated, nonetheless I was glad on the date when this occurred, when Mr. Roosevelt went before the national convention in Chicago and broke precedents and made the declaration which I have just read.

I am going to read that again, Mr. President, before I proceed further. I think my friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] knew that I had something important to read to the Senate this afternoon. This is one of the first times he has called a quorum in the desire that Members of the Senate should not lose an opportunity to hear what I had to say. [Laughter.] So I am going to read the extract again.

Throughout the Nation—

I want Senators to hear this. I want us to pause not only in the discussion of the Constitution, which "does not feed people", about which statement the Senator from Oregon spoke, or someone else spoke about it to him, but I want us to pause and reflect whether or not the breaking of precedents is so serious a thing as the breaking of pledges. Therefore I read again:

Throughout the Nation men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the Government of the last years, look to us here for guidance and for more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of national wealth. [Applause and cheering.]

Mr. President, that is what the book says, that they cheered and applauded.

I have before me the headlines of a newspaper which I desire to read. I read them in connection with what I hope Senators can call to mind of the declarations of our President as to what is a living wage. It will be recalled by those of us who paid some attention to the campaign, and to what happened in the days following the campaign, that the Democratic Party and our nominee, our present President, declared that any country undertaking to force its citizens to live below the standard of a subsisting wage level was undertaking the destruction of the system of American manhood which sustained it.

I have here before me the Baltimore Sun, which contains the same headlines which other newspapers carry today, May 21, 1935. I read the following headlines:

President sets wage scale on works-relief at $19 to $94 monthly.
Rates prevail for 40-hour working week.
Nation divided into four groups with lowest pay in South.

That ought to sound good to us boys from below the Mason and Dixon's line. That is some good news to the "new dealer." It will be good news down in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana tonight. They will probably have a party down there. I might go back myself if they would hold it off a day or two.

Good news has come! The President has set a wage level, the lowest to be in the South, ranging from $19 to $94 a month for a 40-hour working week!

It is good news, as I have said, and I must repeat, good news for us that the South gets the lowest.

Why does the South get the lowest? Because they think there is less need to send money there to get votes. They think that the Democratic Party has the thing all in the bag, and they think that they have it all fixed as to who is the Democratic Party.

What boots it if some Senator rises and mouths a little bit around here? He would better keep his mouth shut or he will not get any jobs. What boots it if some men might complain over on the other side of the aisle? What boots it if some man down in the sticks gets up and grumbles a little bit? What chance has he? The wage level of the country has been set, $19 a month in the South, and from $19 up to $94 in the balance of the United States, through the hand of "our beloved"—let me say that again—"our beloved President of the United States"—b-e-l-o-v-e-d, beloved. [Laughter.] He has honored us this day and date and year of our Lord. Good news to Texas! Nineteen dollars a month!

The President of the United States has issued this pronouncement. In the olden days they called things issued by the Pope "papal bulls." This thing ought to be called a "White House bull." [Laughter.] According to this manifesto, pronouncement, or White House bull, which has been issued—

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difficulty on that subject is that the Senator from Louisiana has usurped the use of the "bull" so that not enough is left even for the President of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. No; he has a monopoly on that. He had that market cornered before I was born. This great logician asked to have it paraded throughout the length and breadth of the United States that so long as he held the post of President he would never stand for a system which undertook to make men and women slaves from sun up to sun down for a wage below the poverty line; that he was, above all things, committed to the one sacred principle, that the sweat of one's brow should not mean the decay of humanity because he would not have a man work for a wage below that which would sustain life in respectable circumstances. Now he has the power in his hands to fix the wage level. Any man who thinks the wage level of the Government is going to be $19 and the wage level for similar services in private lines is going to be more than that, has something else coming to him besides thinking. However, the President has had it in his hands to fix the wage, and he has set the wage, at the highest—mark you, at the highest—at a point which is at one-half the poverty-line wage, according to the statistics—and he has been known to quote more statistics, I think, than any other candidate—and at the lowest level, 12 times one and some odd dollars a month. That has been offered for the man living in the South. That is good news to Tennessee. That is good news to Georgia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the Senator had better confine his statement to Louisiana. He has nothing to do with Tennessee, and he had better let Tennessee alone. I am telling the Senator for about the last time that I am tired of hearing him talk about Tennessee. [Laughter in the galleries.] I think the Senator should devote most of his time to Louisiana, and, unless all signs fail, I am giving him good advice, because he will need some people in Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. O Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. I looked at the Senator's public record the other day and found that he has been here 4½ years and he has never had a bill passed for Louisiana or for the country since he has been here. As I understand, he has never received an appointment, outside of his own office, for Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. That is not correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is all true, because I have looked at the record.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest, under those circumstances, the Senator, never having had a bill of any kind passed or a resolution adopted, should confine himself to Louisiana. I do not believe the Senator could even get the Lord's Prayer endorsed in this body if he undertook to do so. He should confine himself to Louisiana. Tennessee has one excellent representative and another hard-working representative in my own person, and we will look after Tennessee. Let the Senator confine his remarks to Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it looks as though my friend from Tennessee is going to crawl over and go down to Louisiana. We will give him a good time down there if he wants to come to Louisiana. I suggest that he go down there. There is a campaign coming off there in January. They need the Senator from Tennessee, and a whole lot of his kind, down there; and when we get through with them we will send them back wondering what it was all about.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have honest elections in Tennessee, and the Senator from Louisiana has elections of a dictator. The Senator takes great pride in being called the "dictator" of Louisiana. Evidently some of the people of Louisiana take a great pride in calling him the "dictator." He calls himself the "Kingfish." Well, he can be the "kingfish" in Louisiana, but I am here to say that he is not the "kingfish" in Tennessee, and he is not the "kingfish" in this body; and his record proves that fact.

The Senator from Louisiana has an idea that he is a candidate for President. For Heaven's sake! [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries will please maintain quiet.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and I think I had better be quiet, too.

Mr. LONG. No; go ahead.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The occupants of the galleries are not in order and continue to be in disorder.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The Chair again admonishes the occupants of the galleries to maintain order.

Mr. McKELLAR. The occupants of the galleries ought to have a chance to laugh sometime.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appeal to the Chair not to be too harsh with the occupants of the galleries. When people go to the circus they ought to be allowed to laugh at the monkey.

Mr. LONG. Now, Mr. President, I resent that statement about my friend from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. O Mr. President, that statement was not applied to me. [Laughter in the galleries.] The Senator from Louisiana is so used to misrepresenting the Senator from Tennessee that even when a Senator makes such a brilliant remark as that which was just made I am brought into it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to compliment my friend from Tennessee. It seems as if he has talked himself into a good humor.

As I was saying, that will be good news to Tennessee; and before the Senator arrives I had likewise included some other States. That will be good news to Georgia, as I also said, and it will be good news to Alabama, to Texas, to Oklahoma, although I do not believe Oklahoma is called a part of the South. It is, however; and all the Southern States have something for which to celebrate tonight.

The President of the United States, according to the headlines of this newspaper, has said that the States who are to share in this wage scale of from $19 to $94 are the particular States that are to have the $19 up. That shows that the State of Tennessee has been well represented since the Senator has been here. [Laughter in the galleries.] He has at least managed to put that State on the bottom of the wage list, and he wants to complain because I did not have anything to do with that. No; I did not have anything to do with that kind of legislation. I desire to give the Senator from Tennessee full credit for all that kind of legislation; to my certain knowledge, he has had more hand in having that kind of legislation enacted than has any other man in this body since he has been here.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator know of any kind of legislation with which he has had anything to do since he has been in the Senate for 4½ years? If so, I should like for him to tell the Senate what it is.

Mr. LONG. Then, the Senator, Mr. President, has no ground for complaint.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not complaining. I am merely stating a fact and asking the Senator a question. Does the Senator know of any legislation of any kind with which he has had anything to do since he has been in the Senate?

Mr. LONG. Certainly I have had very little to do with any of this kind of legislation or legislation which has had anything to do with this kind of a program. No, Mr. President; we have been under the leadership of this body of men who felt like doing what is set forth in this headline. We have been under the leadership here of men such as the Senator from Tennessee. We would not read headlines like this, saying that wages in the South have been set at $19 a month, if we had had a HUEY LONG for a leader here. No; we would not! It took men like the Senator from Tennessee to do such things as that in the Senate. The Senator from Tennessee said there was also one more representative in the Senate from Tennessee. I doubt that. There are no two men in this body like the Senator from Tennessee. The Lord has done us a little good even if he has given us a little affliction.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Lord has given us a very great affliction, though, in the person of one of the Senators from Louisiana. I have tried to be friendly with the Senator from Louisiana; but I am growing very weary of the constant nagging on the part of a Senator who has been here 4½ years, and has never had a bill passed or a resolution adopted, who, as I think the Record will show, has never had a motion adopted, and who has never had a person appointed in the Government. I think such a man ought to be somewhat retiring in his manner, at any rate, and not be constantly nagging his fellow Senators here day after day until his actions are getting to be a stench in the nostrils of every Senator.

Mr. President, the idea of the Senator from Louisiana, with such a record as I have stated, a record absolutely nil with respect to the passage of any bill or resolution he has sponsored, with not a thing to his credit in the way of legislation, coming here and nagging Members of the Senate and nagging the President of the United States, who is trying to perform the duties of his high office as faithfully and as well as any man could pray he would perform them! The idea of such a situation brought about by a man with absolutely no record of successful sponsoring of legislation, a Senator with nothing to his credit as a legislator in this body after four and a half years of—I started to say of service, but instead of that I will say after four and a half years of misrepresenting his State. Louisiana has but one Senator. There is a vacancy so far as the other Senator is concerned with respect to his record as to legislation in this body.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I never knew that the Senator from Tennessee was going to be so kind as to say that I never got a job here. His remark was that I never got anyone appointed to an office here.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what the record shows. I should like the Senator to name a job which he has obtained.

Mr. LONG. I must confess that that is true. Now, think of my admission! Think of the exposure and the humiliation I have had dealt me on the floor of the Senate! Since I have been here I have not gotten a job from either President—and there have been two Presidents while I have been here. Who gets the jobs? You have got to please the President in order to get the pie. I do not want any jobs. I do not need them. I can take care of myself without them. Take a man like the Senator from Tennessee and take jobs away from him and he would go sky high without anything to fasten to.

Mr. McKELLAR. The best answer to that, Mr. President, is that I served three terms in the Senate from the State of Tennessee under a Republican administration, when there were no jobs for Democratic Senators. However, I am not surprised at the Senator from Louisiana. He does not know anything about facts. He constantly makes statements for which he draws solely on his imagination, and that is why I have tried to be kindly toward him. He does not know anything about a fact. His mind is not capable of taking in anything about a fact. I am just getting tired of his constant nagging. [Laughter in the galleries.] I desire to say that I think it would be a great deal better if the Senator from Louisiana were not a Member of this body. It would be better for the Senate and better for his State and better for the Nation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator not only has tried to be kindly to me but the Senator has been kind. He is mistaken if he thinks he has not been kind to me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am giving the Senator some mighty good advice, that he had better quit nagging other Senators and nagging the President of the United States, and get down to work on his job, which the people of Louisiana have sent him here to perform. It would be better for them and better for the Senator if he did so.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not try to put me to work; that is something I have tried my very best to keep from doing all my life.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator certainly has succeeded in the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator. Now, Mr. President, I must resume. The Senator from Tennessee lays it as a great charge at my feet that I have never yet secured a job for anybody since I have been in Washington; that I have never had a job given to me for anybody since I have been here. No plum has fallen into the lap of an obedient legislator by reason of services performed for a chief. Think of that! That is a calamity which no doubt no other Senator in this body has ever suffered. No doubt, too, had the President of the United States followed the non-plum-grabbing element instead of the plum recipients he would today be in far better shape in the United States. One great trouble with men in executive capacities, Mr. President, is that frequently they surround themselves with men who are craving the loaves and fishes which are dispensed by the master, and so find those flatterers and barterers constantly undertaking to play only pleasing and grateful tunes in the ear of the chief so that the plums will continue to fall their way as a result. Mr. President, we all have had such experiences. I was once Governor of a State; I know what such things mean; I know how it is with Governors, and I know how it probably is with other executives. If the President of the United States had followed the advice of someone who wanted none of his jobs, none of his positions; if he had followed the advice of some few of us who stood on the floor of the Senate and said, "Take your patronage and go to hell with it", he would have been much better off than to have followed the advice of those with an ax to grind, who are trying to get some friend in this office and some supporter in that office and to patch up a political fence over there. Today, what is the result?

Before I took the floor of the Senate I telephoned to the American Federation of Labor and asked, "What are the statistics on unemployment; how many unemployed are there?" They said, "There are 12,000,000 industrial and some half million or more farmers unemployed." They informed me they had no credible statistics generally as to farm unemployment, but they said they did have the figures as to industrial employment, which indicated about 11,000,000 unemployed, and they would say that a half million—I think that was the number they stated—could be added for agricultural unemployment. As a matter of fact, however, I had better statistics as to agricultural unemployment than did the A. F. of L., because they have no statistics there as to that feature of unemployment; but there is a way by which we can see what has happened to agriculture. If we will take the year 1929 as a normal year—and it was a subnormal year—and compare the amount of money the farmer earned in that year with the amount of money he earned in 1934 then we shall better realize the condition of the farmer.

I hope my friend from Tennessee will not be interrupted because I am anxious that he should hear me. I want my friend from Tennessee to get these figures, because, Mr. President, I am the friend of the Senator from Tennessee, and if I misstate the facts here and I think any Senator might be injured by them I will undertake to make a correction of them at some future time. So I want my friends, particularly those who react most rebelliously at the undertaking in which I am engaged, of giving these figures, to hear just what the figures are.

Here are the farm figures as best I can get them. In the year 1929 there were unemployed, according to the best statistics which I can obtain, I think some 2,000,000 people—two and a half million perhaps—but the farmer in the year 1929, according to the farm figures, earned about two times as much as he did in 1933 or 1934.

Let us see if I have not the correct figures here. On the basis of 1929 as a normal year, the farm population was 30,257,000, and they earned $11,000,000,000, or $394 to every farm person in Hoover's first depression year. I have not the figures for 1934, but I was told the Department of Agriculture would have them. Perhaps the Senator from Tennessee has them, and, inasmuch as he fills out my remarks, if he has them, I would not have any objection to their being given at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be very happy to do it. I have them before me—that is, if the Senator is referring to the prices of farm products.

Mr. LONG. No; I want to know what was the total amount the farm products brought on the market.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not these figures; but I will say to the Senator, on behalf of the administration, which he is abusing and traducing, in my judgment wholly unjustifiably and without foundation, to express the idea in proper verbiage, if he is a friend of the farmer, every farm product, without exception, has risen in price nearly 100 percent since the present administration came into power, about 2 years and 3 months ago; and if the Senator is friendly to the farmers—which I exceedingly doubt—he is doing them no service by attempting to show that the present administration has not done wonderful things for the farmer under the new deal.

Mr. LONG. Now, I want to give the figures. I hope that agricultural prices have increased 100 percent, because the dollar was decreased from 100 cents to 59 cents, and I hope the farmer got the other 41 cents, whether he did or not. I say I hope he got that much.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield—

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will look at pages 7130 and 7131 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he will find the exact figures showing the increase in the price of the principal farm products, and that on an average the increase has been more than 100 percent. The farmers themselves approve what the administration has done; and when the Senator undertakes to criticize the administration for what it has done for the farmers he is putting himself out of line with the farmers, and no farmer in Louisiana would be justified in supporting him in the celebrated primary he is to hold in January 1936.

Mr. LONG. I am glad that my friend from Tennessee has found out when our primary is to be.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; the Senator fixed it so that he could be nominated by some sort of a primary in January, so the newspapers say, including his own newspapers in Louisiana, copies of which I have received, in which it is stated that he fixed it that way so that he could utilize the time later on in the spring of 1936 in gallivanting around over the country in an effort to defeat this Senator and that Senator and the other Senator. I think the Senator has defeated his last Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I have never defeated any Senator, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has threatened to do it, time and again, on this floor. He told the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that he intended to go to Arkansas and defeat him; he told the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] that he was going to North Carolina to defeat him; and perhaps several other Senators, including the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. LONG. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. I again want to give the Senator from Louisiana some good, wholesome advice. He had better confine his machinations to the State of Louisiana and let other States and other Senators alone.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator has certainly misinterpreted my motives. I was one of the men who arranged that Louisiana's primary should occur in January, and I had good reason for that; it was a generous act on my part. [Laughter.] I knew that if I were to wait until the fall my colleagues would all be engaged either in their own campaigns or in the fall general election, and I had been given to understand that I had friends, like the Senator from Tennessee, who might want to come down to Louisiana, and I did not think it right that I should select a time for the election when they would be busy elsewhere. Therefore, I fixed it up for them so that there is not a Member of this body now who will not have time to come down to Louisiana and tell the people there what he thinks about me and what he does not think about me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know as to that. He might be arrested if he did that. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; we have had gentlemen down there who talked worse than does the Senator from Tennessee, and they are still there. That is one thing that they may do down there. I want the Senator from Tennessee to come down there, in order to show him how fair the election is. I will let him pick any precinct in Louisiana he wants to, let him be one commissioner, and let him select all the other commissioners of the precinct, and I will bet he will not get votes enough to wad a shotgun.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will have to decline the Senator's invitation. Heaven knows, I have done many things of which I am ashamed, but I am never going to get mixed up with the "Kingfish" and his politics in the State of Louisiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator, because while that is a gracious turn in one line, yet he deprives us of his association, which the people of my State need.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, we have plenty of it here, so that we can get along. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Now, let us get down to the figures, because the Senator from Tennessee is a very apt man with figures. By 1933 the farm population had increased two and a half million, and in the whole year they earned six and a quarter billion dollars, less $271,000,000 given to them by the Government, or the sum of $184 to the person.

(Mr. McKELLAR walked toward the door of the Chamber.)

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not leave.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be right back.

Mr. LONG. So the farmers during that year made 46 percent as much per farm person as under Hoover's first depression year. In other words, in 1933, when the dollar was worth 59 cents, the farmer got 46 percent as many 59-cent dollars as he got 100-cent dollars in 1929, and I do not call 1929 a good year.

So the only thing we can say is that the farm labor of 1933, as compared with the farm labor of 1929, was 54 percent unemployed. On the basis of dollars and cents in 1929 the farm occupant purchased his commodities on a cheaper price level than in 1933, and yet in 1933, with 59-cent dollars, the farmer had only forty-six 59-cent dollars, whereas in 1929 he had one hundred 100-cent dollars.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I announce my return to the Chamber? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. That is all right. The Senator from Tennessee wants the RECORD to show he has returned to the Chamber, so I am going to read the figures again. The Senator may be like some of the old, regular attendants at church. If they missed a protracted meeting in any summer they could not be gotten along with during the winter. They always had to have at least one protracted meeting in each 12 months.

I want the Senator to understand these figures. In 1933 the farmer earned 59-cent dollars—how many of them? One hundred and eighty-four; whereas in 1929 the farmer earned three hundred and ninety-four 100-cent dollars per person. In other words, the 1933 farm income per farm person was 46 percent of the 1929 farm income per farm person. It is said the figures are better for 1934.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, would the Senator like to return to the conditions which existed prior to, say, January 1, 1933?

Mr. LONG. Oh, no!

Mr. McKELLAR. Would not the Senator like to follow the example of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who the other day proposed to put tariffs on agricultural products as has been done for 50 years without effect? Does not the Senator think a tariff on agricultural products is better than the new-deal treatment of the same subject?

Mr. LONG. I will answer all three of those questions for the Senator by making a statement and then answering them categorically.

I do not agree with the reactionary Republicans. On the contrary, no one in this body has voted more consistently against the policies of Hoover than have I, but the policies of Hoover on farm relief are today the policies of the Roosevelt-Wallace administration, line for line, letter for letter, figure for figure. Roosevelt was not the man who first advocated the plowing up of cotton. That was first proposed by Hoover. Hoover proposed to plow up every fourth row of cotton. Roosevelt proposed to plow up every third row. We beat Hoover when he proposed to plow up every fourth row, but Roosevelt succeeded in plowing up one-third more cotton than Mr. Hoover proposed to plow up.

More than that, on the question of the tariff I am a tariff man. So is the Senator from Tennessee. There is only one difference between the Senator from Tennessee and myself on the tariff.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, it is useless to call the attention of the Senator to misstatements of fact, but this is just as close as he usually comes to the facts.

Mr. LONG. I am right. I hope the Senator does not leave the Chamber again. The Senator left the last time I offered to read these figures.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; the Senator did not leave. The Senator from Tennessee is willing to stand up and debate this matter with the Senator from Louisiana any time in the world. He never ran away from this or any other proposition. He is not going to run away from it now. There are two or three articles about which the Senator from Louisiana may read, but the Senator has made so many misstatements about these matters that it is impossible to keep up with him.

Mr. LONG. Here is the Senator's record. The Senator is mad, and I am going to try to get him in a good humor. He makes many bad statements about me and hurts my feelings. If I were not in public, I should cry about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think anybody could hurt the feelings of the Senator from Louisiana, because I doubt if he has any except in his own interest.

Mr. LONG. Here is the tariff record of the Senator from Tennessee, whose name then was and now is KENNETH McKELLAR. On October 24, 1929, the Senator from Tennessee voted for Mr. Blaine's amendment for 5½ cents on casein. The House rate was 2½ cents; the commodity rate was 3½ cents; and the Senator from Tennessee voted to boost that to 5½ cents because Tennessee manufactures casein.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it was because Tennessee is a milk-producing State and this country is a milk-producing country. That increase was voted for that reason. But that is not the statement the Senator made. He said I had voted for a tariff on every product that came from Tennessee, which is just not so, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Louisiana said the Senator from Tennessee voted for a tariff on casein because Tennessee is a milk-producing State. I voted for a tariff on sugar because the United States is a sugar-producing country. See how much more broad-minded I have been in the way I have voted than the Senator from Tennessee has been in the way he has voted. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a good thing the Senator feels that he is broad-minded. I do not know of anyone else who feels that way about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to submit a report from the Library Committee on a bill pertaining to the Zoo. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Why look at the Senator from Louisiana? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. No; I decline to yield until I get through with the Senator from Tennessee.

October 28, 1929, the Senator from Tennessee voted for Mr. Goldsborough's amendment to increase the duty on olive oil in containers. Naturally I would make the Senator's defense on that vote before he makes it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; because Tennessee does not produce olive oil.

Mr. LONG. No; Tennessee does not produce olive oil, but it produces cottonseed oil and other vegetable oils, and the good patriotic Senator from Tennessee, who does not believe in tariffs at all—oh no!—who wants to scalp and crucify any man living under the canopy of heaven who ever dares to vote for a tariff on agricultural products, who sees red, blue, and black when such a thing is done, nonetheless came forward when they were passing the pie around and took his piece of pie and voted with them, just as nice and just as sweet as the balance of us ever did! [Laughter.]

January 20, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for the committee amendment for higher rates on basic paper. Why? Because Tennessee has some paper manufacturers down there—for instance, the Taylor Co. I know that company.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator knew what he was talking about he would not make a statement like that. There is not an ounce of paper manufactured in Tennessee, not one ounce.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator from Tennessee for having risen above principle that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Taylor is a dealer in paper, but it had nothing to do with that vote, of course.

Mr. LONG. That is one time the Senator voted for something when he rose above principle. I do not know why he did it. He might have done as I did—

Mr. McKELLAR. Heaven forbid! [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Quite often in this body, when we do not have a particular commodity in our own State, we vote with some other Senator in the hope that he will vote with us and for our tariff. Of course, I know the Senator from Tennessee is above anything like that. He would not trade. I know that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator for his statement.

Mr. LONG. I would not suggest that the Senator ever traded to get a vote on anything. Oh, no! I hope the Senator would not think I would say that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I never traded with the Senator from Louisiana. If I had I would have been beaten in the trade.

Mr. LONG. On January 24, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for Mr. Oddie's first amendment for an increased duty on hides. Think of that, will you? Here we are with people needing shoes. They can buy Japanese shoes and German shoes, shoes made in foreign countries, much cheaper than they can buy shoes made in Massachusetts. Nonetheless, the Senator from Tennessee just walked right into the United States Senate and voted to raise the tariff on hides and did not say a word about it. He never apologized for it, but he has always given everybody else "down-the-country" who voted for a tariff.

January 24, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for Mr. Oddie's second amendment to increase the duty on hides. He gave them two votes. He was not satisfied with one. He came back and took another lick at it. [Laughter.] Tennessee has some hides.

January 28, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for the amendment of Mr. Thomas of Idaho to increase the duty on vegetable oils. In other words, there may have been some vegetable oils coming in from outside the United States. Tennessee raises vegetable oils, particularly cottonseed oil. So, "We will put another tariff on foreign vegetable oils."

February 18, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for Mr. PITTMAN's amendment placing a duty on silver ores. That goes to show that the Senator from Tennessee was not partisan. He voted for a tariff on silver when his own State did not produce any silver. I certainly would not impute to the Senator from Nevada or to the Senator from Tennessee that they had swapped votes; but if you will look over here at the record of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], you will find that without swapping, the Senator from Nevada was voting to increase the tariff on vegetable oils, although Nevada did not produce any vegetable oils. [Laughter.]

February 18, 1929, the Senator from Tennessee voted for Mr. CONNALLY's amendment increasing the duty on cattle.

March 3, 1930, the Senator from Tennessee voted for Mr. Shortridge's amendment for a duty on long-staple cotton. You see, there is a little part of the Mississippi Delta up there. The Mississippi River comes up through Tennessee, and they raise long-staple cotton there.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hate to have to correct the Senator from Louisiana again. Really, the Senator ought to inquire into the facts before making a speech in the Senate, because the Senate ought to have the facts. No long-staple cotton is grown in Tennessee—not a pound of it.

Mr. LONG. I believe the Senator is right about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know I am right about it; and the Senator from Louisiana is just as wrong about that as he has been about all these other matters.

Mr. LONG. I believe the Senator from Tennessee is right this time, Mr. President. The long-staple cotton is raised in the Mississippi Delta, a short distance below Memphis. The Memphis merchants have accounts with all the farmers down through that part of the country, and Memphis gets the trade down there, and the prosperity of Memphis largely depends upon the prosperity of the cotton-raising section down below there. Of course, that did not have anything to do with the vote of the Senator from Tennessee. He was just voting according to conscience, and he cast a good vote. He voted as I should have voted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has again put me in good company. In one breath he accuses the President of the United States of being crooked, and now he turns around and says I am crooked because of certain merchants in Memphis. That is a long, long cry. The Senator has known me for only 4 years and a half. He has been running for the Presidency in that time, and I believe he has never known me very well, or he would not have made these absolutely unfounded statements concerning me.

Mr. LONG. All I have said is that we are all down there in the same part of the country. I did not say that that influenced the vote of the Senator from Tennessee. I deny that. I simply remarked that the long-staple cotton part of Mississippi is right close to Memphis down there in the Delta.

Let us see. The Senator from Tennessee voted against 14 tariff decreases.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana cannot even count. I have taken everyone he has mentioned here, and there are eight of them on my list. I have been here all the time, and the Senator cannot even count to 11. My Heavens! The Senator ought to learn to count, anyway, before undertaking to chastise his colleagues.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Tennessee voted against the amendment of Mr. WAGNER to reduce the duty on olive oil in containers.

He voted against reducing the duty on china clay, or kaolin.

He voted against the Wheeler amendment to reduce the duty on filaments and yarns of rayon.

He voted against the Simmons amendment to reduce the minimum duty on filaments and yarns of rayon.

He voted against the McMasters amendment to strike out the duty on cement. Now, think of that! Think of it! There was the State of Tennessee engaged in a road-building program, building concrete highways.

Belgium and Germany were offering to sell cement in this country for a great deal less than it could be bought in the United States; so Congress came along and put a tariff on cement. I have forgotten how much it was. I think it was something around 50 cents or a dollar a barrel. That tariff increased the price of the cement for the roads which Louisiana and Tennessee were building; and when an amendment was offered here to strike out that increase of the tariff on cement, what did the Senator from Tennessee do? He voted for the tariff on cement; and for another time in his life he voted right because we need tariffs.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there is something wrong about that vote, if it is confirmed by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Tennessee voted against concurring in the amendment on cement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from Louisiana at some time will quit talking long enough for me to look into that vote and see what is the matter with it. I think there must be something wrong with it, even though I cast it, if it meets the approval of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Tennessee voted on cement three times, each time to keep up the tariff.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. As the self-confessed great road builder of Louisiana, was the Senator from Louisiana in favor of a tariff on cement to increase the price of cement to the road builders of Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I am in favor of a tariff on everything, and I realize that the only way you can get a tariff on the things you raise is to vote for the other man's tariff. I vote for everybody's tariff. I am for America. I voted for a tariff on sugar, and, in order to get everybody to feel good about a tariff on sugar, I will vote for their tariff. That is the only way to do. I am not going to come in here and ask everybody to vote for a tariff on sugar and on pepper and on rice, and then turn around and vote against tariffs on the products they either raise or manufacture, because, if I am entitled to a tariff on my product, the other man is entitled to a tariff on his product. I think the worst thing a man can do is to come in here and vote for a tariff on his product, and then go out and bellow all over the country because the other man got a tariff on his product. I voted for all of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a wonderful statement, and stamps the Senator from Louisiana as a real, genuine statesman; that he is willing to vote for any duty affecting the product of any other State simply because the Senator from that State votes for a tariff on sugar.

Mr. LONG. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has already so stated. The Senator has said he would vote for a tariff on sugar, or a tariff on anything.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a very high order of statesmanship. The Senator from Louisiana says he is absolutely right about it. I suspect it is due to that system which the Senator has adopted that he has been so successful in not getting a single measure, or resolution, or even motion, through this body.

Mr. LONG. Well, we have pretty well kept our tariffs in Louisiana. We got one on oil after I came here. I did not propose it, but I helped the other man pass it. I voted for it. I am not a very influential man here, as the Senator from Tennessee has certified.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, and the Senator from Louisiana is getting less and less influential all the time; and if he continues this nagging of the party that made him—

Mr. LONG. Made him?

Mr. McKELLAR. The party that made him; yes. The Senator owes everything in the world to the Democratic Party.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is the Senator going to charge the Democratic Party with that?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; the Democratic Party in Louisiana is chargeable with that. Now, the Senator from Louisiana has gone back on the party, he has gone back on our President, and now he is turning his mind to abusing and traducing and vilifying without cause every man who does not agree with him. In my judgment, the Senator from Louisiana will find, before he is much older, that that is a dangerous program to attempt in this body.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Wait a minute; I will yield just as soon as I have answered my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. CLARK. That may take some time.

Mr. LONG. It will. I shall have to decline to yield just now. I wish to answer my friend in these words, if he will listen—

Mr. McKELLAR. I will listen.

Mr. LONG. I was talking about the tariff, and the Senator from Tennessee asked me if I voted for tariffs. I said that I voted for the other man's tariff, and I will vote for any man's tariff. How much? I will vote that not a single foreign manufactured or agricultural product competing with any similar product of the entire United States shall be allowed to come into this country until there has been levied a tariff tax of the difference in the cost of producing that article in America and the cost of producing it in foreign countries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. LONG. Wait a minute. That is the doctrine of the Democratic Party. The great trouble is that we have men who claim to be Democrats who do not even know what the party is. That was the platform of the Democratic Party upon which I came to the United States Senate; and the trouble is that we have logicians in the Democratic Party, instead of party men, who are undertaking to undo that principle, which was the only thing we had to protect our country; and yet today some men try to have this body filled up with the idea that we have to tear down the tariffs.

There is Florida today. There is Texas today. There is Louisiana today. The Cuban Government and the Mexican Government are sending their citrus fruits, they are sending their roasting-ears, they are sending their cattle across the line and they are selling them there cheaper than it is possible for us either to raise or produce those products. Today we are being crucified, and we are going to continue to be crucified. Right up here on the eastern coast of Massachusetts they are bringing in Japanese toothbrushes cheaper than it is possible for the people of Massachusetts to make them. They are bringing that stuff right into Baltimore cheaper than they can manufacture it in Baltimore. Today, with America putting on taxes to raise the price of the corn and the oats and the wheat and the cotton and the cottonseed oil and the citrus fruits and the peppers and the oranges and the lemons raised in this country, right over in foreign lands they are able to produce those things and bring them to the United States at a cost less than the processing tax in America alone amounts to—so much so that instead of the United States exporting cottonseed oil last year, four shiploads of cottonseed oil came into the port of Houston, Tex., which formerly was the greatest export oil market we knew anything about.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. The other day, in a colloquy with me, the Senator from Louisiana made the broad statement—and it is in the RECORD—that I had voted for a tariff on every product of Tennessee. That was his statement. There are some 2,000 articles produced in this country on which there is a tariff and about 500 of them are produced in Tennessee. The Senator now comes with his proof, and he finds that I voted for a tariff on 8 articles, or, if his mathematics is right, 11 articles. Let us figure 8 into 500. The Senator's statement the other day, when he undertook to take me to task for my votes in this body, all of which he says he now approves, was just one-sixtieth true—just one-sixtieth. Does the Senator understand that? Does the Senator understand fractions?

Mr. LONG. I understand what the Senator is trying to say.

Mr. McKELLAR. One-sixtieth part of his statement was true and the other fifty-nine sixtieths was untrue, as proved by the Senator's own reference to the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not know how many of these matters were issues involving tariffs.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course the Senator did not know. If he had known he would not have talked about it. The Senator talks more about what he does not know than about what he does know. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. The fact is that all these articles are not subject to tariffs. In other words, there is not a tariff on every article. Tariff duties are imposed only on articles where it is necessary to protect a domestic industry. We do not have a tariff on automobiles because the domestic industry does not ask for it. But I think I would be willing to make my guess that wherever we have encountered an article which was produced in Tennessee, the existence of which depended on a tariff, and the tariff issue was raised, we have found the Senator from Tennessee, 9 times out of 10 doing what the balance of us have done, which would mean—

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh! Oh! [Laughter.] We must keep the record straight. The Senator will never find me lining up with him.

Mr. COUZENS. I make a parliamentary inquiry. Who has the floor?

Mr. LONG. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. COUZENS. I insist that the rule be adhered to, that there not be interruptions without a Senator first getting recognition from the Chair, and the Senator having the floor yielding.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator from Michigan. I never complain about the interruptions. I usually let those interrupting take up my time when they desire to do so. I have always overlooked infractions of the rule by the older Members, because some of them, particularly my friend the Senator from Tennessee, seem to think I am always undertaking to take some advantage of him or to mislead him, and for that reason I have always allowed him to pay no attention to the rule while I have had the floor, hoping that some day I would get into the good graces of the Senator from Tennessee by my generous attitude. But it seems as if I get nowhere by my generosity.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will have to reform a great deal before he ever gets me on his side of any question. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to come back now to what I was discussing when the Senator from Tennessee diverted me into a discussion of his record. The Senator threw into this discussion and made an issue of his own virtue, and I undertook to justify him in his virtue. In other words, when the Senator from Tennessee rose here and began to take issue with me on the tariff I not only undertook to show him that he had voted as the balance of us tariff-minded people have voted in most cases, or at least in some cases, but I undertook to tell him that I considered his record a mark of his own virtue. Now I come back to what I started to discuss.

We have before us today—if I may proceed in the regular order of my argument—the pronouncement of the President that the wages in the United States on public works are to be from $19 to $94 a month. Now I shall read:

Rates prevail for 40-hour working week.

Nation divided into four groups with lowest pay in South.

Why the lowest pay in the South, Mr. President? I wish to state that before this iniquitous deflation began to put its fangs into the back of this country nearly every man in the South was employed at a rate of pay that would have meant as much for 2 or 3 days' work as this particular minimum amount proposes to reward him for a whole month.

I wish to read this article in part:

Ninety percent of employees must come from relief rolls, order specifies.

I read in this article:

The lowest rate—$19 a month for unskilled work—applies to those counties in seven Southern States which contain no towns with a population in excess of 5,000.

That is the kind of country I was raised in. Winn Parish in Louisiana comes within that list.

Those States—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee—comprise the fourth or lowest wage area.

These are the States which have been picked out, the State of Louisiana and the State of Tennessee, and here is the Senator from Tennessee, with the marvelous influence he exercises in this country, the writer of laws, the interpreter of laws, the maker and breaker of policies, and I am trying to persuade him that he might use his mighty arm that he might write legislation which only one of his stripe could effect. I cannot do it, but the Senator from Tennessee takes offense when I am undertaking to call him to the defense of the State which gave him birth and made him what he is.

The highest rate—$94 a month—

Now, is not that high?—

for professional or technical work—applies to those counties in 26 States that contain cities of more than 100,000 population. They are the six New England States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, Wisconsin, Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming.

There is no one living in the seven Southern States which are named who is entitled to earn $94 a month.

Is not that fine? Yet I am not given any credit for this kind of legislation. The Senator from Tennessee claims all the credit. He is the man who did it. He it is who, with his bright mind and strong arm, acted with such power that we get the $19 wage in Louisiana, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Alabama.

Mr. President, I do not want to be credited with that kind of leadership. I do not want to be credited with that kind of influence. Let the Senator go back to Tennessee and to Louisiana and to Mississippi and mount the rostrum and there proclaim to the world that "Mine is the powerful arm. I am the great legislator. Unlike the senior Senator from Louisiana, I had a part in its making." Let him tell them he is the one to claim credit, if that is the policy of the Senator from Tennessee, "I am the man due the credit. Give none of it to HUEY LONG. His name is not on the bill. Give none of it to the Senator from Louisiana, who was not even in favor of it. Condemn him for not having stood for this. Condemn him for having criticized the arm of the President for doing it. All glory, all hail, to me and my kind for having established a wage level in the South of $19 a month."

God help the man who goes back and takes credit for that kind of thing under the protestations made on this floor by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. President, we find a statement here which I think is correct, a statement from the working people. They regard this as a calamity. They believe that the establishment by the Government of a slave wage in this country is a calamity to the country. They believe that the fixing of a wage of something like 65 cents a day is something to be condemned. So far as the Southern States are concerned—Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, and Florida—the people are to receive $19 a month. That is the highest they are going to receive, and to the highest kind of skilled labor in the most populous cities elsewhere in the United States they will pay $94 a month.

What is the average cost of a respectable living in this country? I think I have the figures here. I gave them in a speech which I made over the radio sometime ago, and which I have here. I said in this speech:

Note also that even those who are employed earn a wage which is 43 percent below a fair standard of living. See the bulletin of the American Federation of Labor of January 12, 1935.

This bulletin of the American Federation of Labor of January 12, 1935, says that, based upon the cost of commodities at the present day and date, an income of $2,000 is required for a family to live in respectable poverty in the United States. They say that $2,000 is the very lowest annual income on which a family can subsist in a respectable way at all, buying the things they have to eat and have to wear, paying their rent and their taxes and things of that kind, that if they make a single dollar below the $2,000 mark—I think the exact figure is $2,041—it is that much below the line of respectable poverty, that it is that much below the bare subsistence to sustain life; and yet we have it said here by the United States Government that our maximum for the most fortunate class shall be something like 50 percent under the bare subsistence wages which are held to be necessary by the bulletin which has been issued by the authority I just mentioned.

Mr. President, that is not all. How are our people in the South going to survive? How many are unemployed today? I said in the beginning of my remarks that there were 11,000,000 industrially unemployed, and I say now that the earnings of the farmers of the United States in the year 1929—I repeat it now—the earnings of the farmers of the United States in the year 1929 were at the very least 75 percent more than they were for 1934. I make that statement knowing it will not be challenged.

I make the further statement that if we figure up what the farm products of 1934 sold for we will find that they sold in 1929 for at least 75 percent more than they sold for in 1934. While I do not have before me the exact figures for 1934, I have the exact figures for 1933, figures from the reports of the Government itself, which show that the 1929 income was about 110 percent more than it was in 1933.

On that basis, including the estimate of the American Federation of Labor that there are 11,000,000 industrially unemployed, we have today 20,000,000 unemployed people in the United States. Why do I say that? Because if we had an agricultural population of 30,000,000, of whom 20,000,000 were farm workers, and those 20,000,000 in 1934 earned only one-half as much as they did in 1929, then it is only fair to say that those people are either only half employed or that half of them are not employed at all.

The situation is even worse than that, Mr. President. In the year 1929, when these farmers earned around $394 to the person, those were three hundred and ninety-four 100-cent dollars. But today those farmers who are earning $184 are earning one hundred and eighty-four 59-cent dollars. Imagine that. In 1933, with the dollar reduced to 59 cents, the average farm person earned $184 as against what we called a depression earning in 1929, when the average farmer earned $394, and 100-cent dollars at that.

Mr. President, I desired the Senators on this side of the Chamber, and, for that matter, the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, to understand those figures before they adopted the concurrent resolution which is pending. We are asked to participate in the ceremonies and to listen to the President read his message vetoing the soldiers' bonus. Why? Does not the President know that, instead of this country flourishing, it is in no such condition whatever? Is he going to listen to the speeches made over the radio by men who wish him to give them jobs, either for themselves or for their friends? Is he going to listen to those particular phrases that are spread in front of him, and is he going to become the designer of phrases, of clauses, and paragraphs? Is he going to spill out the money of this country for politics at a time, Mr. President, when, according to statistics, there are not less than 11,000,000 industrially unemployed today, and, according to the figures and calculations which I have made, there are probably 11,000,000 more of the farm type unemployed?

Is he now going to come before Congress to make a great event of vetoing the soldiers' bonus? There has never been a President in the history of the United States who has ever come to Congress to present a veto in person; and it is being made a great event! They are killing the hog! It is a hog-killing time. The radio has been rigged up so that the message of the President can go to the four corners of the earth.

They have called for a joint session, in which they have arranged for the bells to ring, and the whistles to blow, and the clamor and the clatter of the hog-killing time, and it is to be a great celebration. For the first time in the history of the United States a certain precedent is about to be broken. The President himself in person is going to deliver a message vetoing the bonus bill, striking at the souls of the 3,000,000 men and the families of the 3,000,000 men who today are in need of the funds due them by the country for which they fought and for which they worked when they were called upon to give their services.

He could have picked a better time to have broken this precedent. He could have picked a better occasion to make this grand flourish and ensemble. He could have picked a better situation, Mr. President, than with 20,000,000 people unemployed on the very day and date when he has announced in the South a public-works scale of $19 to the man who labors for 8 hours a day. This Sir Galahad, the knight in armor, could have picked a better time to come before Congress to veto a bill, and thereby dash to earth the hopes of 3,000,000 patriots of this country and of the women and children dependent on those 3,000,000. He could have picked a better time and a better occasion to do such a thing as this, which will put the dagger into the hearts of these men.

Mr. President, I still contend that I am a friend of the President of the United States. The Senator from Tennessee says that I have not secured a single job since I came here. I did not get a job from Hoover, and I did not get a job from Roosevelt, and I have not got a single job of any kind since I came to the United States Senate. I know that a man has lost out as a politician when he fails to exhibit the qualities of a purloiner of patronage. I know that is considered a mark against him.

However, I preferred to stand up here at this very spot in the United States Senate and oppose the economy bill, because I knew the economy bill was going to do harm to hundreds of thousands of my friends and my fellow citizens, and to millions of Americans, rather than to have 10 or 15 or 200 jobs to bestow upon others. Before I would buy the jobs, before I would curse and condemn millions of bright young men who sold their bodies and their souls in the defense of and for the perpetuation of their country; before I would strike a dagger in their hearts, I would spurn all their jobs between Dan and Beersheba, and tell them to keep them for themselves. I do not want my hand to reach out for a job and be contaminated by the blood it draws with it if I have to kill the hope of the soldier boys of this country. I do not want such jobs. I have always done without them.

I prefer to have the political opposition of the mighty, well-financed administration; I prefer to have the gold spread in Louisiana until it is knee-deep; I prefer to have them call upon their mealy-mouthed men in the Government Treasury to fight against HUEY LONG, rather than to come here and vote condemnation and ruination upon the men who gave to this country what it called upon them to give. I can survive in a situation where I have maintained principle above that kind of political skullduggery.

Now we come to that time when it is said that the President is going to come here. I am coming back to this catalog. I am going to read from it again.

I say, Mr. President, that there is nothing particularly wrong about breaking a precedent. I repeat that statement. But suppose the President comes here to make the great display which he is going to make. It is a great victory! He is making a great figure. The newspapers no doubt—at least some of them will and perhaps some of them will not—will picture our great and beloved President as a great, powerful strong knight in armor. He will be portrayed as a suave, powerful statesman. He will be shown by the words and syllables which follow his name as one who stemmed the current, who reached out and stopped the onrushing tide which meant that the soldier boys were going to be paid what they were promised. He will be labeled as the great and mighty leader and rescuer of the retreating forces, who brought them back into line and compelled them to cast the vote which put the dagger of despondency in the heart of every man who wore the colors of the red, white, and blue in 1917, 1918, and 1919.

The President will be pictured as a brave, a true, a loyal, and a beloved leader, and he is coming down to receive the plaudits of the multitudes. It is asking the President to do too much not to be here for that hog killing! It is such a great victory for a President to achieve! It is asking too much of him not to allow him to come here and participate in that celebration. Why, there are 3,000,000 dead lions to be killed at one stroke. Think of the disappointment which comes to a President not to be photographed and displayed with all the embellishments and halos which are to be hung about him on this tremendous occasion when he is going to be the victor over 3,000,000 families in one single stroke!

It is asking too much not to allow the President of the United States to have all the embellished laurels which can be hung upon him and all the sunshine of a halo with which he can be photographed, and to be deprived of using the musical voice he will send out to the firesides of the Nation announcing to the world that he has struck destruction to 3,000,000 families on that day and date. It is asking too much. I must agree with my friends on this side of the aisle.

It is a great victory we are going to have. It is a great victory for the President. Victor! Victor! Victor! Franklin Delano Roosevelt the first—and the last—the victor! He is coming here to celebrate, coming here to be known, coming here to be embellished, coming here to be fawned over—by whom? I may not get any jobs the day he comes here. I did not get any jobs the last time he sent that kind of message down here, of course. At least that is what was said in the newspapers. I may not get any jobs the next time he comes. But there is work for him to be doing. As he said—

Throughout the Nation men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the Government in the last year look to us here for guidance and for more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of national wealth. [Applause and cheers.]

In other words, the President no longer wishes applause and cheers to come from a reuttering of those words—why? It is for a very good reason. It is because when he made that promise at the Chicago convention it was not the first time he had made the promise. Perhaps some of my fellow Senators do not remember it, but I had something to do with seeing that he made that kind of pledge at and before and after the Chicago convention. It may be there are some Senators present who have forgotten, but let me read an extract from a speech made by the President of the United States before that time. I read from the speech made by Mr. Roosevelt in Atlanta, Ga., on the 23rd day of May 1932. Here is what he said:

The country needs, and unless I mistake its temper, the country demands a bold, persistent experimentation. It is common sense to take a method and try it. If it fails, admit it frankly and try another, but above all try something. The millions who are in want will not stand silently by forever while the things to satisfy their needs are within easy reach.

That was from the President of the United States prior to the Chicago convention, where he said there was an insufficient distribution of the buying power; and in the Chicago convention he said that we had to share the wealth among all the people in the United States. Share the wealth! Who originated that expression—"Share the wealth"? Whence did that phrase come, "Share the wealth"? It came from the lips of Franklin D. Roosevelt at the Chicago convention in 1932 when he accepted the nomination. He was the first man to use the phrase and make a promise that he would see to it that the wealth of the United States was shared among the American people.

Go a little bit further and we will find that after the Chicago convention he made another speech at Columbus, Ohio, and another one at San Francisco, Calif., and in both those speeches he came out most positively with the declaration that there had to be a better and a more complete distribution of the wealth of the country in the hands of the common people. That was his platform. The forgotten man? The forgotten man? He said there was going to be a redistribution of wealth; that it was going to be shared by the common people, and that the people were looking to us to see that the forgotten men were given their respectable share of the wealth of the country. Those are the words of Mr. Roosevelt. He has been after one thing or the other ever since, but he never seems to have remembered those promises which were made to the American people.

Let me come back to the soldier for a moment. It is in line with these declarations. I have not spoken long. I hope some of my colleagues will not think I have spoken long. Since I ceased to yield the floor to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] I have consumed less than 30 minutes in my undertaking to cover these subjects on the eve of what I hope will be a change of attitude on the part of our President, but which I fear will not be. Therefore, on the eve of there being delivered a veto message on the soldiers' bonus bill, which we call the Patman bill, I am undertaking to warn our party leaders and undertaking to reason with them as best I can.

Mr. President, I have heard many arguments about the soldiers' bonus. I have never heard one argument given against it based upon facts. Seldom are the facts stated. It is mentioned that the soldier has been asking for a great deal and that the soldier has received this and has received that. I hope those who have done me the honor of listening during the last few minutes will give me their attention for the next few minutes while I give some facts about the soldiers' bonus.

The soldier has never been paid any bonus. What he received was less than a bonus. During the war we paid our soldier something like $30 to $40 per month. For $30 to $40 a month he was required to leave his home and family, to give up the joys and comforts to which he had become accustomed, and, over and above that, he was required to risk his life in crossing the sea going and coming and in front of the cannons, guns, and poison gases of the Germans and other enemies.

He was paid from $30 to $40 a month for that kind of service which he gave so long as he lived as a soldier. But when there came a day of reckoning we concluded that the soldier ought to be paid something. How much? Only so much as the commonest kind of laborer earned during the time that soldier was engaged in the war. In other words, we did not undertake to give the soldier any bonus at all. That is all a mistake. We only undertook to say that the soldier who served in the United States Army should receive as much per day or per night—and usually they worked both day and night for a day's wage—as the commonest kind of laborer at home received.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the Senator does not mean to suggest the theory of the soldiers' bonus was to pay the veteran what common labor in the United States got during that period. That is not correct.

Mr. LONG. What was it?

Mr. CLARK. The theory was to pay the soldier a duplication of the wages he got and not what common labor got in the United States, because common labor here received much higher wages.

Mr. LONG. I understood that it was. My understanding was that the amount allowed the soldier at the very most gave him no more than what the commonest laborer in the United States was receiving at that time. I thank my friend from Missouri. I think he has more correctly stated it than I did.

They were giving the soldier about what he already had; but had what he was to receive in the bonus been added to what he had already received, the wages of the common laborer would have been much higher. I think that is correct; but at the very most I am stating an outside picture that places every fact against the soldier rather than in his favor.

We are told in this veto—I say “we are told in this veto”; we have not received it yet, but I think I can pretty well calculate that the things which have been said by the President before will be some of the things he probably will say again. We have been told that the soldier has been given extra consideration. He has not been given any such thing. He has not received anything like the consideration that was given to the common man during the war. The soldier not only had to give up the time he could have spent with his family, and with the people with whom he was acquainted, and in his ordinary haunts, but he has had to give up the chance of living. He has had, in many instances, to come back here at least partially crippled. He has had to destroy associations and contacts he has made. The soldier is not being paid anything whatever, and he never has been given any bonus of any kind.

If I may proceed just a little bit further along this line, what is the justification in vetoing the soldiers' bonus at all? Is it done on the ground of the public fisc? At least for one time it is not, because it does not make any charge against the public fisc to pay the soldiers' bonus in money such as would be issued under the Patman bill. On the contrary, it would help the public fisc and stabilize the finances of the country, as was shown by the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo], and as has been subsequently backed by a speech made by Mr. Jesse Jones, the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and by the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. Eccles.

Therefore, Mr. President, instead of our making any charge against the Treasury that is going to be hard for it to stand, we have done it no harm whatever, and we have only undertaken to pay out an adjusted-service certificate already calculated and issued by the United States Government.

The next remark that has been made along this line has been that the soldier has already had a bonus. He has not had any such thing. The soldier never has been paid any bonus. They issued to the soldier one certificate and only one certificate. That certificate never has been paid from that day to this. It was, however, provided by law that a certain amount could be borrowed against the certificate, and that is all that has ever been permitted by law. We have never paid the soldier any bonus. That is all a mistake. All that has ever occurred has been to allow the soldier compensation the equivalent of which I have already stated, and which has been more accurately stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark]. That has never been cashed at any time, and no further allotment has ever been made to any soldier who fought in the World War. On the contrary, the most that has ever been permitted has been to provide at one time that the soldier might borrow up to a certain amount on the certificate, I think 50 percent, upon which he has been required to pledge the entire certificate as security for the original loan, with interest annually. That has been the only thing that has ever been allowed to the soldier that I know anything about.

I think we are hurrying through this thing unnecessarily. I think we are going entirely too fast. I think “haste makes waste” in this case. I think the President of the United States, if he were advised—as probably he might be better advised—would hesitate to use this as the particular occasion to start any precedent of reading veto messages in person. As I said at the very beginning, I do not dispute the fact that he has a perfect right to come here, precedent or no precedent, and I am not one of the people who are following precedents. I do not care whether he makes a precedent or breaks a precedent so long as it is something along the line of what he ought to do; but I do think it is a bad time to make a hasty entrance into the Senate or into the House of Representatives to deliver a veto message when he has picked as the occasion a time when he is to throw a dagger into the hopes of 3,000,000 families, who have already done what? Why, they have already figured out what this bonus means to them.

I wonder if Senators have ever calculated the harm that they do in that respect?

Do you not know that every soldier, and every soldier's wife, and nearly every soldier's grown children, and perhaps some of their mothers and fathers, have knelt before the fireplace or sat down at night, and they have figured out that “I have so much coming on this certificate from my Government that it has owed me all these many years”? Do you not know that every living one of those men and their wives and their children have sat down in front of the table, and they have figured out that “Tomorrow, or tomorrow night, I shall probably be given by my Government the balance of this money that they have owed me ever since 1918. The happy day is coming at last, after 17 years of waiting!” They have figured and they have calculated, “My Government is going to pay me this money that it has owed me for 17 years. The United States Government, which sent me to Germany, or sent me to France, or sent me to Belgium—this Government of mine, which stood me in front of the German cannon, which caused me to go 3,000 miles to the east and come 3,000 miles back to the west to ‘make the world safe for democracy’—this Government is going to pay my certificate tomorrow”; and every one of them has figured just how much it is going to be.

I can see now, in the firelight, some soldier, and his wife beside him, and some daughter there that is nearly grown, calculating that “I will get $500 or $600 or $700. I will take $200 of the money and pay the grocery man the $200 I have owed him for the past 2 years. I will take $100 and buy my wife or my child some clothes to wear. I will take $25 or $30 and buy something to put on my own back; and I will have a few hundred dollars left. I am going to take that money and lay it aside to fight this depression, and to feed my wife and myself and my children, as we have been unable to eat during the years of this depression.”

Every living one of the 3,000,000 men back there who are the holders of these certificates has knelt before the fireplace, hoping and praying that the Congress of the United States, which sent him 3,000 miles to war, and sent him into the living flames of hell and disaster and destruction, will not deprive his wife and his children of the one hope that they have, after 17 years of waiting, of being paid that money.

Talk about a party that wants to destroy itself! Talk about a President who wants to destroy himself! You may say that I am not loyal to the Democratic Party, but you cannot lead me into that kind of destruction. I will not be led into that kind of a proposition to maintain what somebody sillily represents to himself as being a principle and maintaining a policy of a Democratic President. On the contrary, I regard the souls and the bodies and the lives and the anxieties of the few hundreds of thousands of people who are sitting in Louisiana today, waiting and praying that a Congress will be grateful and be truthful and respectable to them, more highly than I do any kind of plum that may be dispensed to me from the benediction of a President who wants me to vote to cast down the hopes of these people. On the contrary, I can say to myself, and I hope every member of my party and every member of the Republican Party and every member of the independent parties across the aisle can say to ourselves, that after having caused the soldiers to wait for a period of 17 years, there will not be a single one of them to go down in disappointment.

We have another bill up here, too. We have a naval bill up before the Senate. It is making ready to give us a few more thousands and millions of dollars to prepare to kill some more people, and no doubt it will be thought to be a very worthy bill. The naval bill is up to be passed. How much is the naval bill going to cost? "Oh, we must not fail to pass that bill", somebody no doubt will say. "The naval bill, above all things, should be passed."

Mr. President, long before we ever talk about sending the naval bill out of the Senate with our approval, whatever consequences may come to the Patman bill, long before that bill goes out of this body, I believe there will be Members here who will see to it that there is some doctoring done first on the rest of these bills to take care of those who fought the wars of the past before providing for the fighting of the next war. I think probably there are men in this body who have given that subject more consideration than I have had the time or the intellect to do; and, of course, we need not be in any hurry to shoot the naval bill out of here until it has received its best understanding at the hands of the Members who may want to do something to it in case, by some remote accident, some ill fate should come to the Patman bonus bill, which has already passed the two Houses of Congress.

From whom are we going to take advice? Who are going to be the advisers to this body and to the President of the United States?

We have always been taught that there are three departments of the Government. There is no such thing. There are not three departments of the Government. There is one department of the Government—the executive department. That is all there is to the United States today. Practically all the authority has been consolidated under the executive administration.

Why do I say that? Because law after law has persisted in the United States, has been carried along as though it had every legal status, which when it has reached the Supreme Court of the United States has been held illegal, but nonetheless it has prevailed all the time until it has been held to be unconstitutional.

The "hot oil" law prevailed until finally it went to the Supreme Court and they decided it was no good and cast it aside.

The N. R. A. law persisted until district courts held it was no good, and notwithstanding the fact that several district courts of the United States have held the N. R. A. invalid, it is nonetheless carried on the books today. At one time they kept the Supreme Court of the United States from passing on it by a timely withdrawing of an appeal so that that Court could not pass on it, and they are still enforcing the N. R. A. law in this country, wherever they possibly can, and it has carried in its wake distress to many of our institutions and sent them to their last place of rest.

All these various things have been carried along by the departments of the administration. Nonetheless, in the final analysis, most of them—in fact, practically all of them—have been held to be invalid when they received the final visé of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. President, in that connection I am compelled to come back to Louisiana for just a moment. Some few days ago my good friend the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, Mr. Henry A. Wallace, went down to my native State of Louisiana. He paid our people a visit there. He spoke in the center of the State, in the town of Alexandria, La. He delivered a very fine speech, I suppose. I did not hear it, I have not read it, and I have not seen anyone who heard it, but he delivered a speech down in Alexandria, La., which I suppose was very good.

It was supposed to be the beginning of the firing of the cannon under those who were friendly to me. It was supposed to be the first match to set off the bomb to circumvent the entire canopy of the sky with a light that would be an inquiring light. But none the less, when Mr. Wallace got down to Alexandria, La., the bomb failed to explode. Nothing was said in the meeting one way or the other about any of us, and we were very much disappointed that nothing of that kind was mentioned. In fact, we had been led to believe that all the fireworks were there ready to start, that the lord royal destroyer, Henry A. Wallace, from the great State of Iowa, had gone all the way down there, with a Cabinet portfolio, to make a great speech.

They have to get crowds up for these men to speak to. It is mighty hard to get together enthusiastic crowds for an administration spokesman when there are more people unemployed than ever before. It is mighty hard to radiate the perfection of living and admiration in the heart of a man who has been told that he will get $19 a month.

It is hard to arouse enthusiasm in a man who is getting $189 who did get $394, and when the dollars he is now getting are worth only 59 cents as compared with dollars of a hundred cents that he was getting before.

It is mighty hard to arouse enthusiasm in people of that kind, with an audience that might be gathered together to make the signs and give the symbols and make the applause and send forth the plaudits and cheers necessary in order that the people may be led to believe that there is some enthusiasm left for that kind of conduct carried on in Washington, D. C. Therefore each and every occasion is utilized from the standpoint of making up cheers and applause and gathering a crowd to talk to.

In order to get a crowd to talk to in Louisiana they had to run special trains and bring all the old, broken-down politicians from 64 parishes. When they finally got there Secretary Wallace stood up to make his speech, with the crowd including every old, broken-down politician and all the relief-roll people down there, including investigators and inspectors, and supervisors of investigators and investigators of supervisors, and after they got the whole litter of them down there he looked out and recognized, from what he had been told, that all they had was some of the dehorned politicians and the old, broken-down people they had put on starvation wages, some of them manipulators of elections. But nobody had anything to say about HUEY LONG.

They had to have some kind of an audience. I was glad to see them gather together an audience for our great and beloved and true and honorable President of the United States here the other day. Of course, he needed a crowd to talk to; and, of course, there were trains that came from 48 States to bring that crowd. Nonetheless, they got the crowd. And I want to thank the railroads. I may fail to write them a letter thanking them. I want to thank them for providing extremely low fares for people to come to Washington. They would tell a man, "We are going to give you a ticket to Washington, D. C., we are going to feed you, and you are going to see the White House and see the President, for $45."

They got 3,000 people and brought them here. They had to have some appearance of enthusiasm for this thing. Somebody must be made to appear enthusiastic. Therefore, on each and every occasion when the President of the United States may be making a great fight, the occasion must be taken advantage of. The soldiers' bonus is such an occasion, so that there is a great deal of concern in the country, and there will be people waiting to see what the verdict is to be. Therefore that is seized upon to bring people on the pay roll in the city of Washington, whether they like it or not, to appear in the galleries to cheer the President of the United States.

They must gather up a crowd to talk to. If they keep on sending Wallace around the United States to gather crowds, they will have to take some of these fake bulls with rubber horns and stage some kind of a bullfight in order to get anybody to go to listen to an agricultural program, under which Henry A. Wallace is advocating burning up the things the people need, carrying on this hurrah throughout the length and breadth of the United States, finally winding up with the remarkable statement that they are going to send the President of the United States in to veto the bonus, something that has been owed to soldiers for 17 years. I would hope for more than that. We are entitled to more than that, and I believe that in time we will get more than that.

Mr. President, there is another matter I wish to speak about today if I have the time, a matter which was brought to my attention this morning. It is a matter concerning some of our boys in the South.

We have used the soldiers rather cruelly in some instances. They have been sent to Central and South America. I do not know whether they are still used for that purpose or not. I do not inquire any more, because it does not seem to do any good. Whenever they get ready they send the marines to most any place they want to send them, and the marines do not have anything to say about it.

I noticed the other day down in my home town that some of the very men we hear today crying out against the soldiers' bonus being paid—I do not call it the soldiers' bonus; I call it adjusted-service compensation—were the owners of vessels down in Central and South America. I was astonished, Mr. President. If all the lives of all the people who have been killed and all the expense that has been incurred down in that part of the world could be translated into dollars of ordinary value I doubt if they have made enough money in all the exploitations of Central and South America to equal what the United States has had to pay.

The very men who expected to use the soldiers the most and to use the marines the most—someone has said that the marines are not soldiers, but they certainly were made to do a great deal of the fighting—the very men who have had the most to gain from them are among those we hear most loudly and most vociferously protesting against the paying of the soldiers' bonus.

Take the case of Americans in Venezuela, take the case of Americans in Nicaragua, where the armies of this country have been used for the purpose of exploiting our domestic power in those foreign lands.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a vote on the pending concurrent resolution?

Mr. LONG. I was hoping we would not vote on it today.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to have a vote on it.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator propose to move a recess until tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to have a vote on the concurrent resolution, after which I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, upon the conclusion of which I expect to make a motion for a recess until tomorrow. I ask for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. LONG. I was hoping that we could put off the vote until tomorrow morning.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like a vote this afternoon.

Mr. LONG. I cannot yield for that purpose. I am not through speaking on the concurrent resolution. I hope we will not push through on it. I hope we will not be in a hurry to vote on the concurrent resolution. I was hoping we could put that off until tomorrow morning.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I point out to the Senator from Louisiana that the session to which the concurrent resolution relates is to be held shortly after noon tomorrow, and, therefore, it would be necessary to vote this evening if the vote is to be taken. I understood the Senator was willing to have the vote taken.

Mr. LONG. No. I thought we would recess today and not take the vote until tomorrow.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understood the Senator from Louisiana to say that he was in favor of the President breaking a precedent and coming here to deliver his message in the manner proposed. I was wondering if he was still of that opinion. As I understood, he had no objection to the concurrent resolution. I may be in error, but that is my understanding of the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. My remarks are there. They will stand for themselves. I am not particular as to the matter of precedent. Whether or not precedent is broken, I do not think matters very much. On other matters I have not been so certain, and I have indicated a rather contrary view.

I was distinctly speaking, at the time of the interruption, on the use of the marines in South America.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the Senator's purpose to speak until such a time as it would be impossible to have the pending concurrent resolution agreed to in time for the afternoon session tomorrow?

Mr. LONG. Oh, I hope that will not be attributed to me.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am just asking the Senator. However, I withdraw the question.

Mr. LONG. No; I am not going to speak so long as that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on the Concurrent Resolution No. 22 immediately upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow without further debate.

Mr. LONG. I cannot yield, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then we will go on.

Mr. LONG. I was speaking, Mr. President, about the use of the marines in South and Central America. Use was made of the marines in this way: For a number of years those South and Central American countries were exploited. Of course, we may have begun it with Panama. Some may say we did so. In a way we did. But, finally, in some kind of a compromise which we made with the Republic of Colombia we adjusted that matter and undertook to undo whatever fault there was on the part of our Nation. We also adjusted the situation with Panama.

However, the marines were sent year after year into South and Central American countries. The properties which Americans held down there, and which some other foreigners held, had just such value as the soldiers of the United States gave the properties. The day the soldiers left Central and South America their properties were not worth a dime. Every man who owned a possession in South America will bear me out in that statement if he tells the truth about it.

The day the marines and the soldiers would have left South and Central America their property would not have been worth a quarter—not a dime. In other words it was not a question of an acre of ground being worth so much, but it was a question of how many soldiers were down there to protect the property. In many instances the foreign property owners down there deliberately set aside the courts and at times abolished the courts altogether. Time after time if a court decision was one way, and one of the vested interests in good standing with the government or which was promoting another government, did not want it to go that way, they would take the army, they would take the American soldiers, and they would upset the particular award which was made by the court. So year after year they went on in that way. They went on, Mr. President, year after year, with wars being carried on without any such thing as a declaration of war in all those South and Central American countries, and practically the entire American holdings in those countries for many years in the past were protected by the armies of the United States.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGill in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator from Louisiana tell when, according to his recollection, the American marines were in South America the last time? He has spoken of the soldiers and the marines being in South America and Central America. I will say to the Senator that I am as much out of sympathy with the use of our armed forces in Central America as is he, but I also will say that I shall be glad if the Senator will tell me the last time the American marines were used in South America.

Mr. LONG. I do not know that they went so far south, perhaps, as to South America proper. I know they went to Honduras, Venezuela, Colombia, and Nicaragua, but I would hesitate to say that they went to South America. I should have to look that matter up to be able to answer the question exactly and definitely.

Mr. CLARK. Can the Senator tell whether in his lifetime American marines have ever been used in South America.

Mr. LONG. I could not for a fact. Perhaps they were used only in Central America. Let us say that for the present purposes. However, I am of the opinion that some of the soldiers, or at least some of the warships of the United States, did guard South American possessions. I will have to look that up and get the dates and facts.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator promise to do that?

Mr. LONG. I undertake to do that. I will promise to do my best. If it is in the histories and the records, I will obtain it. It does not have to be in the records. I wish to tell the Senator that all that is not a part of the Government records. I will give him an example. Notwithstanding the fact that we have the Monroe Doctrine, when the gentleman who now runs the Republic of Venezuela, Mr. Gomez, got to the point where he could not protect himself, and the American marines no longer were protecting Gomez in Venezuela, which at that time was practically dominated by the oil interests of this country, it is a known fact to the people who were down there that Dutch warships stayed around there for some time. I think I have here the details as to those ships. I was furnished the information some time ago by someone I consider reliable. These two vessels were the destroyer Van Ness, built especially for Venezuelan waters, which only drew 9.8 feet, had a speed of 34 knots, and had a displacement of 1,316 tons.

Then they had the gunboat John Moritz van Nassau, 1,457 tons, 15 knots, having 5.9-inch guns.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I understand the Senator's informant tells him that the American gunboats were built especially for Venezuelan waters?

Mr. LONG. No, Mr. President; they were Dutch gunboats. These were Dutch gunboats, used at the time when the political conditions in the United States were such that the powers which were in authority in the United States had to withdraw their marines and their American ships from Venezuela, because of the opposition to the United States taking a hand in that kind of struggle, and the Dutch sent those boats down there.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him, I understood the Senator to say that an American gunboat had been built especially for these Venezuelan waters.

Mr. LONG. No.

Mr. CLARK. I wished to suggest to the Senator that if he had any such information it should be furnished the committees of the Senate, because we will be very glad to investigate that matter.

Mr. LONG. I will send this information over to the Senator. What I am talking about is Dutch gunboats. There had been American soldiers down there. Marines had been down there and ships had been down there. Gunboats of the United States had been around there. Gunboats of the United States and soldiers of the United States and marines of the United States had been around Venezuela, but it got to a point where the United States found that it was bad business for them to stay down there. Notwithstanding the Monroe Doctrine, under which European countries were supposed not to interfere, down there, nonetheless the Dutch Government sent over the two ships about which I am speaking, the destroyer Van Ness and the gunboat John Moritz van Nassau, and they were built for Venezuelan waters, because the oil interests had a powerful pull with the Dutch Government. These boats were built for use in Venezuelan waters. They were not built in a way that they could be used in European waters. They only drew 9.8 feet of water. These boats could not have been used on ocean trips at all for the ordinary purposes for which the Dutch Government used boats of that type.

They guarded this man Gomez down there and kept him in control of Venezuela for a long time. It is a well-known fact that an American had much rather be known as a British subject down there, if he were about to have any difficulty, than to be known as an American citizen. I have a constituent in Louisiana who got in trouble in Venezuela. They picked him up, arrested him, and jailed him for absolutely nothing. They never have to this day preferred anything like a charge against the man. The only thing that saved him at all was the fact that by accident they happened to arrest a British subject with him.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Constitution provides that the President shall return the bill with his veto message to that House in which the bill was originated. That means that the President must address the House of Representatives on tomorrow if that be the date fixed in the concurrent resolution. The concurrent resolution as now pending before the Senate provides that the two Houses shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives to listen to such communication as the President may see fit to make to them, the word "them" meaning the two Houses of Congress. To comply with the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], I suggest that the concurrent resolution be amended by striking out the word "them" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the House of Representatives."

That would mean that we would accept the invitation of the House of Representatives, and that we would go there as their invited guests to listen to whatever message the President may see fit to address to the House of Representatives.

I am willing, if the Senator from Louisiana will yield for that purpose, to suggest that amendment to the concurrent resolution and permit the concurrent resolution to go on its way.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	Logan	Robinson
Austin	Costigan	Lonergan	Russell
Bachman	Couzens	Long	Schall
Bailey	Dickinson	McAdoo	Schwollenbach
Bankhead	Dieterich	McCarran	Sheppard
Barbour	Donahay	McGill	Shipstead
Barkley	Duffy	McKellar	Smith
Bilbo	Fletcher	McNary	Stetwer
Black	Frazier	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Moore	Trammell
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Truman
Burke	Gore	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Guffey	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Overton	Wheeler
Chavez	Johnson	Pittman	White
Clark	Keyes	Pope
Connally	King	Radcliffe

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yesterday, when the concurrent resolution came over from the House, unanimous consent was requested for its immediate consideration. To that request objection was made. Today the same resolution was called up a second time and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] took some time to discuss the constitutional aspects of the resolution.

In order to afford an opportunity to get the concurrent resolution on its way back to the House I suggested an amendment which I thought would satisfy the Senator from Oregon and protect the constitutional objections which he had urged. I offered an amendment to strike out the word "them", which means the two Houses, and to insert the words "the House of Representatives", which would make the concurrent resolution mean that the House would invite the Senate to come over and listen to the address made to the House, as the Constitution provides.

I thought perhaps that amendment would be agreed to; but during the time the roll has been called I have discovered that the amendment is not agreeable to numerous Senators. Assuring them that I have no desire to prolong this discussion, and intended only to be helpful, I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I had understood that the matter had been satisfactorily adjusted. I will ask to have the concurrent resolution sent to me. Apparently the word "them" is to remain, as I understand. Is my understanding correct that the amendment has been withdrawn?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution as it comes from the House of Representatives.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, continuing my remarks, since I have had time to think the matter over I do not think, as I have said, that the matter of precedent stands in my way at all. I have no objection to precedents being broken one way or the other. I think if a precedent brings about an undesirable result, breaking it is a good thing. As I have said, I think it is very bad policy to break a precedent for the purpose of vetoing a bill which has been passed by both Houses of Congress for the purpose of paying a debt that is 17 years past due.

I think the House of Representatives ought to be allowed to have the concurrent resolution if they want it. What I hate to see brought about is a big, large, radio hook-up, and a big day arranged for the President to veto the soldiers' bonus. In other words, I dislike the very great display that is being made of the President killing the bonus.

It is somewhat like hog-killing time; everybody is called in to something as though it were the gathering of the hounds for a great chase. That is the objection I have to the concurrent resolution.

As a matter of fact, my friend from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], who tells me that never before has a veto been delivered in this way, is supported by everyone else of whom I have made inquiry; but there never has been any veto like this. It seems to me that the President would have a chance for the fullest possible radiobroadcast without having to come up to the House and call the two Houses of Congress together to do it. Calling us in to read a veto message is almost like some master disciplining a youth; in other words, it has the appearance of master and servant.

We have sent the President a message transmitting a bill that the two Houses of Congress have passed, and here we are arranging for him to call in the children to be lectured and to be disciplined. The rod of iron is to be applied to the recalcitrant Members. It is not a matter of suggesting legislation, and one breaking bread with the other. It is a matter of coming up to the House and imposing the presence and the authority and the pressure and the prestige of the administration, and the patronage of the distributor of all the plums and the loaves and the fishes, and seizing this particular occasion to make this great display.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator, from his wide experience in popular appeals, apprehend that it will make any difference, even to the extent of 10 listeners in the United States, whether the President delivers his radio message tomorrow to the House of Representatives alone, or to the Senate and the House? Does the Senator believe it will change a single vote in either the Senate or the House whether the President delivers his message in person or whether he sends it?

Mr. LONG. The principle I am defending is that I do not want to be used as a sounding board for the President to get over a lecture that he is delivering.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will yield, the Senator from Louisiana has used the Senate as a sounding board throughout most of this session. I think it comes rather late in the day for him to object to being a sounding board.

Mr. LONG. In other words, it attracts a great deal more attention for the President to call in 531 legislators and say, "Here, I have called you little fellows in here to find out something. Now, listen to me!" Any time you hear a school teacher cussing out the members of the class, and standing one of them up to give him a whipping, it occasions notice. It has a notorious aspect to it. "Come in here! Let us have you here! Get in here and let us see what you have been doing around here! Come in! What do you mean by this business?"

In other words, it is a case of 125,000,000 people being called in to hear a kind of a disciplining that is being given. We cannot regard this as a veto. It is a disciplining lecture that is to be delivered to the Members of the Congress. They are being called on to show what they mean by this business. The President is coming down to tell us, "This thing will not go! I want to give you the message in person"; and the eyes of those who hand out jobs gaze into the countenance of the man who relies upon the cohesive power of public plunder for his political existence. It is a fearful thing, I must state, as my friend from Tennessee said this afternoon; the man in danger of losing the plums and loaves and fishes that go into his territory must feel abashed, because it is a mark of dishonor to the man who does not get them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I must again protest against these false statements of the Senator from Louisiana. I was voting to pass measures over a President's veto long before the Senator from Louisiana was ever heard of outside his own bailiwick. I think I began in 1923 voting to pass bonus bills over Presidents' vetoes. The Senator from Louisiana, if he has the brains of a jay bird, must know that I intend to vote to pass this bill over the President's veto; and yet he undertakes, in a roundabout way, to bring in my name!

I protest against it, and I desire to say to the Senator that he is dealing with something he had better let alone. I am advising the Senator, in all kindness, that he had better quit nagging Senators. If the Senator has the sense that any grown man has, he will know what I mean.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, my remarks were undertaking to quote the Senator from Tennessee and to show him the respect I have for his remarks.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but the Senator is not quoting me. Mr. President, I ask the protection of the Chair, that the Senator from Louisiana shall no longer traduce and abuse and make false statements about any other Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has asked the Chair to protect him against false statements by the Senator from Louisiana. It is impossible for the Chair to ascertain the correctness of the statements of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can understand that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Chair undertook to examine all the statements made by the Senator from Louisiana, he would not have time to do much else. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to place myself in right with the Senator from Tennessee, because I am certain he was not listening to all I said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to say this—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LONG. I yield; certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not want the Senator from Louisiana to place himself right, or undertake to place himself right, with the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from Tennessee is able to take care of himself. If the Senator from Louisiana had proper decency, if he were worthy to be a Member of this body, he would refrain from further falsehoods concerning his brother Senators.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. CLARK addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield and if so, to whom?

Mr. LONG. I yield first to the Senator from Idaho, because he rose first; then I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this concurrent resolution was presented early in today's session, and some objections were made to its consideration upon constitutional grounds, I have no doubt, with entire sincerity.

I do not agree with the views as to the constitutional objection, but I have no intention of criticizing the presentation of those views. I do feel, however, and I feel very sincerely, that we have reached a point where in the consideration of a measure of this kind longer to continue the discussion will reflect upon the Senate and not upon the President or the House of Representatives.

We have before us a resolution inviting us to join with the House to hear the President deliver his message. I assume, of course, that that message deals with the veto. I assume also that the President is desirous of presenting his message to the country as fully as it is practicable to do so. I do not see why we should object. We should not be fugitives from knowledge. If there is another side of this question than that which some of us have seen, so far as I am concerned, I am anxious to have it, and I am anxious to hear the President's view under the most advantageous surroundings. I venture to say that millions of people in the United States are anxious to hear the President's view. It is not becoming to the dignity of this body, nor is it in the interest of the cause which we espouse, to longer oppose this resolution.

I feel, Senators, that we ought to concur in the resolution without further delay. I am not seeking to criticize; I am seeking to express a view which I am satisfied is the sound view. It is the view which will be accepted by all open, fair-minded men—veterans and all alike.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. Not just now. I wish to refer to the remarks the Senator from Tennessee has just made.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I will not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. In the course of the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee here this afternoon he said that I have never passed a single bill or resolution or made an appointment to a single office since I have been in Washington. I hope I may have the Senator's attention while I make this statement. I repeat the statement. I have no intention of yielding for some time.

In the course of his speech the Senator from Tennessee stated this afternoon that while I had been in Congress I had never passed a single bill or a single resolution, nor had I ever made an appointment to an office. That is what I am referring to. I suppose the Senator did not intend to make that statement without having it answered.

I would have expected him to answer if I had made the statement. I do not suppose the Senator from Tennessee thought it was a mark of honor for anyone to be here without ever having passed a bill or made an appointment to office, because he certainly used language showing that he intended it as indicating a lack of service, rather than service rendered.

I make the statement again that if I judge matters as does the distinguished Senator, from his remarks, certainly not having received patronage is indeed a mark of a bad record cast on a Senator.

If that is to be considered legitimate—and I think it is—I do not criticize the Senator for making the statement. I take it as a matter of accepted logic and politics and fact that it is a mistake for any Senator's record to show that he has not made any appointments of people to office. That is a mistake. That is against a man's record.

I wish to submit to my colleagues in this body whether or not a man who realizes that his job depends upon his vote stands in the same category, facing immediately having patronage taken away from him, as though he had no such imminent calamity with which he was threatened. Faced with the man who can take away every job you have tomorrow—and that is the fault of the Senator—is not that at least persuasive?

Have we not been told by the public press and have we not been told through our colleagues, have not some of us been told in person, that the fact that we have no public patronage is because of our votes and our utterances in this body? That is a fact. Whether it is appreciated or not, it is a fact. It is a fact that everybody here has been told, or has read, or it has been brought to his knowledge, that his vote has more to do with whether or not he dispenses plums in his State than anything else he can show.

The question is not how one stands in his State. I do not know how anyone could show by the votes of his people that he stood better in his State than I have stood in mine. I think I show by my record that I have stood pretty well in my State. I was always elected by large majorities, and nearly all those whom I have supported for positions have been elected by large majorities.

Not only that; I am not only the senior Senator from the State of Louisiana but I am a friend of the State administration. I am the national Democratic committeeman from that State. I am the chairman of the State Democratic central committee of that State. I hold every honor that can be given to me by the people or by the party, indicating that I am a party leader in my State of Louisiana. Yet, as has been stated on this floor, as has been said many times in the public press outside of this Chamber, it is a well-known and accepted fact that a man's attitude in this body and his votes here are largely controlling on whether or not he is the dispenser of patronage in his State.

It is only fair for me to say to the Senate that I do not ever expect to dispense patronage in my State. I want to say to the Senators here now that I never would have dispensed patronage under Hoover and I never will be able to dispense it under the man who is President of the United States now. I am not going to condemn him for that. That is his business.

Today we read in the public press that down in Louisiana, where they appointed a man by the name of Frank Peterman as relief administrator, he has divided the State into eight divisions, and set up a political master over each of the eight congressional districts, and has even had the boldness to state in the public press that no Long man will receive gratuities from the relief rolls.

Mr. President, that is a matter of public print. This relief which is supposed to be dispensed for the good of the people, it has been set up as partisan property for the disciplining of a Member of the United States Senate who on various and sundry occasions speaks and utters words to the displeasure of those dispensing the plums. Votes in this body have been cast on that basis.

I want to say this, that I have my responsibility, backed by the people of the State of Louisiana. They certainly do not believe that Mr. Roosevelt has any business coming in and delivering a message against the bonus. The Democrats who nominated him—and if they had not been with him he would not have been nominated—do not think he has any business coming here and delivering that kind of a message. They think that if he has any charity and feeling in his heart and mind for the soldiers and for their widows and their wives and their children the best thing he could do would be to sit down in the White House and in the ordinary way send in his veto message.

I know this procedure is not authorized by the Constitution. I do not have to read very far in the Constitution to know that. Senators may differ, but so far as I am concerned I know it is not authorized by the Constitution that he shall come in here and put us all in front of him.

Now, let me say that, of course, Senators can do whatever they please; they have the right to do what they please. Ah, Mr. President, I have seen men tremble in my lifetime. I have trembled myself. I have seen men of good motives in their legislative pursuits who have been faced with the necessity of choosing between what they thought right and wrong in their hearts, and faced with the seriousness of what the choice meant in the matter of the control of things back in their own bailiwicks. I have seen men tremble as to which choice they would make between the dictates of their hearts and their minds and the consideration of where patronage was to go. I have seen that happen. There never has been a time in my life when I have seen it happen as much as in the last several years. I have seen it happen under State governments. I have seen it happen under the Government of the United States. Here we have a great principle. Here we have the eye teeth already cut. I have seen the time when in the Senate gallery the patronage dispensers of the national administration have sat, with a roll of the Senators, not even willing to wait until the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD could be published, that they might indicate on their lists what favors should be granted to or withheld from Members of the Senate or Members of the House.

The President comes again. We are going a step further. Have we not gone far enough? Have we not gone far enough in this disciplining; have we not gone far enough in the punishment inflicted upon men for sitting here and voting their honest-to-God convictions? Have we not gone too far now to have a veto seized upon and have someone come into the Senate and into the House to read the fiat, so that those who hear it will realize that taking a position counter to what is contained in that document means an ill fate to the legislator sitting there listening to the President?

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I will wait until the Senator gets through and speak in my own time.

Mr. LONG. Very well, Mr. President; I will speak until I get through.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator usually does.

Mr. BARKLEY. However, the Senator never really does get through.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator. I am glad the Senator feels that I am entitled to speak in my own time. About all the right I have here is the right to speak. I still have that right.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I asked the Senator very courteously a few moments ago to yield to me. He refused to do it, and I now decline to take the floor in his time. I will wait until I can get it in my own time.

Mr. LONG. That is O. K. with me, Mr. President.

I do not want the President of the United States using me as a sounding board. Every other Member of the Congress has a right to do whatever he pleases. If the President wants to appear and deliver his message in the Chamber of the House of Representatives he has a right to do it, but officially I do not care to be one of those who is supposed to be there to listen to him. I do not care to have the Members of the Senate called over there. This is no time to have the precedent broken, as I see it. There is no reason why it should be broken.

I take no particular stock in many things hurled at Senators in the heat of debate. If I did, I would have a chance to be mad every 30 seconds. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman who is so hostile because of some of the things I have said would vote against sustaining the veto if it should come to the Senate. I am glad for his vote. I appreciate it, if I should have any right to appreciate it; but that is his own matter. However, I have my responsibility in the Senate. I have my right in the Senate the same as has anyone else. I do not think the Senate has any business tramping over to the House of Representatives like a bunch of school-boys to listen to the President of the United States proclaim his veto.

I shall now read from the Manual of the United States Senate a few words from the Constitution of the United States. I shall read with respect to the President's veto message. I do not mind the President inviting me to go somewhere, but I am not going to have him come in and give me any orders about it. So far as I am concerned, the resolution may provide without limit that somebody can go over and hear him read his veto, but I do not care to have him order me to come and listen to him on this veto business, because the United States Constitution does not authorize him to do it.

I desire to read the Constitution, because I can read it a little better than my friend from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] read it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I simply wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana that he cannot read from the Constitution of the United States out of the Congressional Directory.

Mr. LONG. I have a book here which on the cover says the Constitution of the United States is contained in it.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator started to look for it in the Congressional Directory.

Mr. LONG. Yes; I started to look for it in the Congressional Directory, but it is not in there. It ought to be in the Congressional Directory. They have a lot of other things in it which are not so important. I have been used to reading the Constitution of the United States out of the World Almanac. I find nearly everything I need to find in the World Almanac. That is where most of my education has come from, and I am lost without my almanac.

However, I will read the Constitution of the United States just exactly as it is. Mr. President, the old principle of law is that when the law deals with a certain specific subject that excludes all the generalities in the law. In other words, you might write a law relating to the United States of America, and then if one section provided that in Louisiana the people should do so-and-so, that would prevail over the general things provided for the balance of the country. So it is with this veto. I am going to read this veto provision, and I am going to have everyone in a good humor over this matter before I get through with it. I shall read the provision with respect to the President's veto so that everyone in the Chamber can understand it. I do not want anyone to have a right to feel offended when I am trying to read the law.

May I ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] where the particular provision with regard to the veto message, which he read this morning, appears in the Constitution? What article is it?

Mr. STEIWER. It appears on page 375.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I suggest that the Senator from Oregon come over on this side and find the provision for the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. STEIWER. If the Senator will look at page 375 of the Rules and Manual of the United States Senate, he will find it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have already made my suggestion. I was going to suggest that the Senator from Oregon come over and find the provision of the Constitution for the Senator from Louisiana. Perhaps it is not now necessary.

Mr. LONG. I think I have found it without the Senator's aid, but I hope the Senator from Oregon will yield to that suggestion in case I have not located the point. I am now going to read from the Constitution. It provides:

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve, he shall sign it—

I desire to have Senators notice this:

If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated.

In other words, if he approves he shall sign it, but if not—and I desire to have my friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] listen to me—

If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it.

Mr. President, there is no combined journal for the House and the Senate. There is not a joint journal for the two Houses. The law, according to the provision of the Constitution I have read, is that the President shall return the bill, with his objections, to the particular House in which the bill originated, and that the House in which the bill originated shall proceed to enter his objections on the Journal of that particular House, and that that particular House shall proceed to vote on it at that time.

There is a pretty good constitutional argument here. Have Senators ever thought of what would be the consequence if the President returned this bill illegally? If he keeps the bill out 10 days without acting on it at all, that is a pocket veto. If he keeps it out without returning it at all, that is the same as a veto. If he does not return the bill legally, he never really returns the bill. If he returns a bill to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], or to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], he has not returned the bill to the United States Congress. That is the same as a pocket veto. Delivering the message to a joint House of Congress, the Senate and the House, is the same as a pocket veto in itself, unless there is other action taken on it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator has the Constitution right in his hand, for the first time in his life, probably. Is there not in it a provision that when a bill is not returned within 10 days—

Mr. LONG. Let me read that.

Mr. CLARK. Let me finish my question. The Senator referred to a bill being vetoed when it was kept for 10 days without action. Does not that apply only in the case where Congress shall adjourn in the meantime? Does not that negative the argument which the Senator has been making?

Mr. LONG. Let me read that.

Mr. CLARK. I shall be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Let me read it:

If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent—

Mr. CLARK. I am not speaking of that section. I am speaking of the provision referring to 10 days.

Mr. LONG. What section is that? I will read it if I can find it.

Mr. CLARK. I will have to find it.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator finds it, I will read it. I have not read it for a good while.

If after such reconsideration—

I want Senators to listen to this—

If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law.

We not only have no joint session provided for, but if the other House were not to override the veto the bill never would come to the Senate. The Senate would not even have a right to see the bill unless the House of Representatives should override the veto.

But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within 10 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress, by their adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. That is precisely the language to which I invited the Senator's attention.

Mr. LONG. That is correct. The Senator from Missouri is right about that. Of course, if the Congress should adjourn that would apply, and if it did not adjourn it would be a law anyway. Of course, I do not know whether Congress is going to adjourn or not, and therefore I make no speculation as to what would be the situation with regard to that particular matter. It might adjourn and it might not. I take it if the administration wants it to adjourn it will adjourn, and if the administration does not want it to adjourn it will not adjourn. That is strictly in the lap of the administration.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator's contention on which this matter arose was that the veto of the President on this matter would be equivalent to a pocket veto. I called attention to the fact that the provision for failure to return it in 10 days applied only in case Congress should adjourn in the meantime.

Mr. LONG. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. It is the contention of the Senator from Louisiana and of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], and apparently they are the only two Senators who agree to that view, that if it be illegal to hold a joint session of the Congress to hear a veto message, then it would be equivalent to a pocket veto. I invite the Senator's attention that to have a pocket veto it is necessary for the Congress to adjourn in the meantime.

Mr. LONG. That is right. If Congress adjourns before the 10 days is up then of course it would be a pocket veto, and if they did not adjourn it would not be a pocket veto.

As I said, I do not know whether we are going to adjourn or not. It is strictly in the hands of the administration. I make that statement based on precedent. If the administration wants us to stay we will stay, and if they want us to adjourn we will adjourn. They control that matter as they see fit. I am not arguing about that, but I am arguing the law.

There is no way of making two things out of the law because the law is too clear. The law says the only procedure the President can follow is to send his message. It says "send his message." I am going to read that again. I think it will be found to be in the words I have stated.

Mr. CLARK. Where does the Senator find the words "send his message"?

Mr. LONG. It says he shall return it.

Mr. CLARK. Does it say how he shall return it?

Mr. LONG. No; it does not say.

Mr. CLARK. Does it say anything about sending a message?

Mr. LONG. It says he "shall return it with his objections to the House in which it shall have originated." In other words, he has to return the bill with a message. What does the word "return" mean? Will one of the page boys get me a dictionary and let me look it up? He shall return the measure. I do not know whether "return" means to bring it back or send it back or both. I am going to look that up in a minute as soon as I get a dictionary. I do not remember the Latin word from which the word "return" comes, but I will look it up in a moment.

Regardless of what the word "return" means, it is provided that he shall, through himself or others, deliver the measure to the House in which the bill originated. It does not say to the two Houses. "He shall return it to the particular House in which the bill originated." If it originated in the House of Representatives then he has to return the bill to the House of Representatives. There is no joint House. He has to return it to one House or the other.

It is a queer thing. This country has been in existence ever since 1776. We have had a country here for 159 years and we have had some pretty fine men who have been President of the United States during those 159 years. There never has been one of them whoever thought he had the right, or if he had the right, felt that he ought to deliver a veto message to Congress in person. It is a queer thing that in the 159 years we have had a United States of America, this is the only man who ever took it upon himself to get both Houses together and read them a veto message, telling them why they were wrong in what they had done.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. We have also had some very able men in the United States and in the House of Representatives during that period of time. Was there ever anybody before this time who took it upon himself to advise the President of the United States that he should not deliver a veto message if he wanted to do so?

Mr. LONG. I do not know that there has been anybody before, but we have one now who is advising him. [Laughter.] I am advising the Senate and he might hear of it. I doubt if he will ever hear of me saying it, however. I do not think he is interested in what I say. I think he is too big a man. He has found out what I have said already, and that is enough for him, and so I do not get any jobs and I do not think he cares what I shall say from now on.

We have had Presidents from Washington up until Hoover, and there was not one who ever took it upon himself to call the two Houses of Congress together to deliver a radio address telling them why they did not have any business passing a bill.

I have a dictionary here now, and I am looking up the word "return" to see what it means. The word "return" means "to go or come back again; return to your home; to go or come back again." That does not mean he can come back again, because he has never been there. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. The temporary occupant of the chair feels that it is his duty to the Senate to maintain order. The occupants of the galleries will please refrain from audible laughter. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I believe the word "return" is broad enough, however, because I see that it means "To bring, carry, put, or send, back."

So, I take it that the word "return" is broad enough to include both; but the Constitution says that the President shall return the bill with his objections, and that the objections shall be entered on the Journal. The objections are supposed to be written out in full, and after the House has written them out in full it is supposed to act on them.

Let us see, now, what this instrument says. I am going to read it again, at the risk of being a little bit tedious:

If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal—

They have to enter the objections on the Journal—and proceed to reconsider it.

Mr. President, it is not possible for the House of Representatives to vote on the matter with the Senate present. There is a joint session when we are present. The facts are these: It would be just as much the business of Congress to call the President up to watch them vote him down as it is his business to call Congress up to watch him vote them down.

In the one instance he calls the Congress up to tell them, "I am going to cut the throat of this bill." In the other instance Congress would be going down and trying to deliver its unction to him. He has no business up here for that purpose. It is his business to veto the bill if he does not like it. That is all right. Nobody has any right to quarrel about that; but here it is proposed that he shall come up and make a display. The radio has been put in. The moving-picture equipment, I take it, will be put in. There is to be a great, big celebration. The President is coming up. The movie cameras are there, ready to be trained on him. The radio is there at his disposal. If it is right for the President of the United States to have the use of the radio to deliver his reasons to Congress, why not put the radio in the United States Senate, and let every Senator make his speech in favor of the bonus bill over the radio? What is the difference?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I suggest, as an objection to that, that it would not be very fair to put the radio in the Senate. Only one Senator of the 96 would have a chance to use it oftener than once a month.

Mr. LONG. Well, there might be something to that. There might be a further reason. A great many persons might not want to listen to all the 96 Members, and I might be one of them. Of course, that is bad business.

Mr. President, I am willing to put the President up on any pedestal that is going to do any good; but I am not willing to have him brought over here to deliver a message to us, and have all the moving pictures taken, and all the radio available, because of what? Because he is dashing to the demnition bowwows and into smithereens what little hope the soldier boys had that they are going to be paid something that we have owed them for 17 years.

Let him make that great splurge on one of the days when he is signing one of these banking bills, closing all the little banks and keeping open the big banks. That would be a day when it would not be quite so bad. We had a day like that here once. Or, better still, let him have made it when we finally managed to bring the thing around to where he wanted to sign the guarantee-of-bank-deposits law. The President has as much right to come up here and read a message approving a bill, I take it, as he has to come up here and read a message vetoing a bill. I take it that he would have as much right to come for one purpose as for the other. That is my way of looking at the matter.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SCHALL. Does not the Senator from Louisiana think that this particular part of the Constitution still being virtuous, and the administration having violated almost every other part of the Constitution, it now becomes imperative that the administration shall see that this particular part is swept on with the rest of the business?

Mr. LONG. I must say to the Senator from Minnesota that I disagree. I think it is time to stop a dog from sucking eggs whenever you can. While I do not use that as a parallel, I think, however big a man may be, it is time to call him back. Because we have allowed the Constitution to be ignored in a hundred other respects, I do not think we ought to allow it to be ignored in a hundred and one respects. That is my view.

Mr. SCHALL. Every bill that has been sent over here by the White House has been in violation of the oath the President took.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from Louisiana cannot yield except for a question. He cannot yield for a speech.

Mr. LONG. I refuse to yield except for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SCHALL. What was the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is that under the rules of the Senate a Senator may not speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day. The Senator has yielded many times, and if he yields for a speech, that is not permitted under the rule. He may yield for a question only.

Mr. LONG. That is all. For that reason I must refuse to yield. I should be glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota if I could; but I am not allowed to yield under the rule which the Chair has correctly interpreted.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The reason why the Senator from Texas made the point of order was that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] was standing on the floor traducing and abusing and impugning the motives of the President of the United States. He said the President had violated his oath of office every time he sent a bill here. If I can prevent it, I am not going to permit any Senator to violate the rules of the Senate by making statements of that kind.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota for a question only.

Mr. SCHALL. I wished to answer the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I make the point that the Senator from Louisiana cannot yield for a speech.

Mr. LONG. That is true with regard to both my colleagues, but I do not want to get caught in a fire between them.

I have no desire, Mr. President, to lambast or traduce the President or his motives in the way he has acted on the bills he has passed here. I do not think the President is a very good lawyer, and he probably does not think I am any better. I do not think he has had very much time to study law, and I do not think he has tried many lawsuits.

That is nothing against the President. There are a whole lot of men who are good at many other things who are not good at law. There may be many of my colleagues, and the President himself, who do not think much more of my legal ability than I do of his, and probably not as much; so, of course, all of us, even though we think we are good lawyers, may be excused for our mistakes on the law.

I never did think the President was right on the N. R. A. bill, but some of my colleagues who are as good lawyers as I am do think so. Maybe they are better lawyers than I am—probably much better. I do not think many of these other things are right; but I do say there is the prerogative left to the Senate and to the House that has been here for 159 years, that we have never yet had a Sir Galahad appearance of the President before four-hundred-and-some-odd legislators of this country when the President has come up to render a veto. This is the first time he has ever called us up to take a licking. This is the first time it ever has been attempted. There must be some reason why, for 159 years, no such thing as that has ever before been attempted. There must be some reason why for 159 years they have never done anything like this.

I take it that it is because of the fact that other Presidents of the United States have not thought it proper and have not thought it the right thing to do. I take it that other Presidents have not thought it the right thing for a President to do to come up here and call in Senators as though they were school children, and call in Members of the House of Representatives as though they were less than that, in order to read them his declaratory judgment against the propriety of a bill that they have enacted by a large majority in both Houses. I do not care to have him call me. I have just as much right to send word to the President to come and listen to me as he has to send word to me to come and listen to him, according to this book right here. I have just as much right, according to the Constitution of the United States, to send for him as he has a right to send for me. If I want to make a speech condemning a veto message that he has rendered, I have just as much right to ask him to come here and sit here and order him to listen to me, as he has to order me to listen to him. There is no difference between the three branches of the Government in that respect if the Constitution is carried out.

Why do not the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States send for the Members of the two Houses of Congress to come and listen to them when they declare unconstitutional one of the bills we have passed?

Members of the Senate, have we ever yet passed a resolution providing that the Members of the United States Senate and of the House of Representatives should go and listen to the United States Supreme Court read its opinion on the constitutionality of any bill we have passed?

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. Has the Senator considered what caused the President, on coming into office, or a little before, to state that in all probability he would be the last President of the United States? Does not this more or less have some relation to that?

Mr. LONG. It has been published on good authority and not denied that he said that either things would be all right or that he would be the last President. That has been published a good many times and not disputed. I do not know whether he said it or not, because, of course, I was not present to hear it.

I take it that we ought to try to call a halt to this business. If there is anyone who ought to have what little rights they are entitled to under the Constitution, I think it is the soldiers who served in the war. One of the few things that has been left to us is the little dignity of this body—a little dignity and a little pride that has been left to this body—and our right to be at least considered as one of the three departments of the Government. Now, we have the President sending a message: "Come in here; come into school, you young men and children of the empire. Come in. I have something to tell you about what you have been doing here, and I am going to have a hook-up and tell the people about what you have been doing."

So, we would sit there, 530 school children, while the President reads a lecture to HUEY LONG and to the balance of the Senators and Representatives, and sends word out to the people to take notice, to "Listen to what I am saying to these mugwumps over what they have been doing."

Mr. President, that is what this thing means. Let him go out on the back doorstep of the White House and read that lecture into a megaphone or a microphone if he wants the people of the United States to know anything about it. I will not object to him doing that. Let him get some farmers. They can send and get another crowd. They may not make the railroads fare as cheap, but let them dig up another crowd.

When our friend Donald Richberg wanted to make his speech denouncing the Senate for what they have been doing, he did not call the Senate and the House; he called a bunch of his employees to listen to him. That is how he got his crowd up. Let this man do the same thing. Let him hunt up another crowd, as he did the last time. Let him get the crowd up in a legitimate way, and not come here and have us pass a resolution, so that I would vote to put my head in a halter and go over there on a leash to hear the President castigate the judgment I had rendered on this subject.

I am willing to take my chances in this. I will be the first candidate up before the American people. I have to go before the American people before any other man in this body to see how they like what I have been doing. I have to go before the good people of Louisiana in the month of January next. I am standing here with a responsibility which is solely mine, 100 percent my own responsibility, and I want to go before the people of Louisiana directly on this question, a matter between me and the great, grandiloquent Chief Executive.

If he wants to read me any lecture, let him get out on the back porch and do it. I am not going over to another body and have him read his lecture to me under the flares and with the sound of cymbals and with the trappings set up to spread his remarks to the four corners of the world. It is an absolute farce on the prerogatives of legislative government to have the President read a message out to Senators and Representatives with a big radio fixed up there so that his voice can be carried.

Why is that? Has he not been giving his fireside chats? He has been delivering the fireside chats to everybody who wanted to turn on the radio and listen. He does not have to ask, as I do, to get radio time. They let me talk about once every 60 days, and they hold a watch, and if I take 1 second over 29 minutes they cut me off two-thirds of the stations of the United States, but he gets whatever he wants from the broadcasting systems. He can talk all day or all night, and notwithstanding that fact I have the record to show that even when he has had every radio station in the United States the people of the country have written 5 times as many letters complimenting the talks of Members of the Senate or the House as have written about the President, sometimes 10 times as many, and sometimes 50 times as many.

If this thing is to be all fixed up so that there must be some scenery, let us divide the time over the radio. Let us arrange for a division of time. If we are to have a great, big session of Congress over in the Capitol, the two Houses called together, so that there will be set up the right kind of display to carry the words of this great and grandiloquent victor, who is going to smash the life out of 3,000,000 soldiers and the families of 3,000,000 soldiers, if we have to have this great display made to show off his heroism and what a big and grandiloquent man he is, then divide the time. That is what I would do. That is how I would do it, instead of going over there to listen to him.

We have had Presidents ever since George Washington took the oath of office in 1789 in the city of New York. For 146 years we have had Presidents of the United States, and never has one of them sent this kind of a message to Congress that the two Houses should come together to hear him read a veto message.

There once was a great example in France. Napoleon's name was very popular. When Napoleon III returned to take over the French Government by a coup d'état that he managed to effect in that empire he signed all his pronouncements "Napoleon", as Napoleon Bonaparte had signed his.

He made himself popular over the country by calling himself "Napoleon", signing all his decrees "Napoleon." He did not even sign them "Napoleon the Third."

There finally came a time in that country when the people called him "Napoleon the Little." The name "Napoleon" was magic, but it finally came to the point where he abused his power so much that Victor Hugo, a great French novelist, wrote a book in which he described the emperor as "Napoleon the Little."

Mr. President, any man with great authority is likely to abuse that authority. No man living is so susceptible to abuse of authority as the man who is given unlimited power. I have seen men who told me that they did not themselves want to be vested with some authority because they were fearful that, even as good as they would like to try to be, they would not be able to handle as much authority as might be vested in them by some legislative body or by the people.

I think our President might well take a leaf out of Napoleon's book. The name of Theodore Roosevelt was very popular in the United States. He was a great leader. He was a friend of the soldiers. He was a friend of the veterans. Theodore Roosevelt was never known to do a thing except for the liberal cause and the purposes of good government. Therefore Theodore Roosevelt was quite an idol of the people of this country for many years after he was dead.

I might state and I might prove that in 1920 when we nominated Mr. Cox, the Governor of Ohio, and his running mate, Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the people in the Democratic Party hoped that by nominating Mr. Roosevelt the ticket would carry with it some of the magic which came from the name and from the record of the elder Theodore Roosevelt. It did not work out that way, however. It seemed to work out rather differently. Nonetheless, however, we kept sending out the charm and to some extent capitalized on the reputation and fortunes of the elder Roosevelt, long since dead.

I think, Mr. President, it was naturally expected that we would follow along the lines of Mr. Theodore Roosevelt's policies under our own Democratic administration, even though he happened to be a Republican. However, we come into this Congress today looking at the example of Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, and we find, with all the appeals that he ever made to the Congress of the United States—and he issued some condemnatory messages against action taken by the Congress and even action taken by the Supreme Court—that never once did Mr. Theodore Roosevelt call the Congress into a session at which he proposed to deliver a veto message or go beyond the proper functions of the President as the head of the executive department.

I know that many Senators will say that the President's action will not change any votes. The Senator from Missouri asked me a minute ago if I thought it would change any votes. I said, "No", in my own mind at any rate, and I doubted at the particular time if it would change any votes. It might. But I do not want the precedent established when the sole remaining thing here is the right and propriety of the Senate to function as the Senate, and the House to function as the House. I do not want the prestige of the Congress of the United States to be in any respect affected. I do not think it is the right thing to do, and I do not want it done at this particular time.

I am surprised that Senators persist. It is not a big matter. Why have Senators to sit here until 6 or 7 or 8 o'clock at night over the proposition of whether the President is going to have the blare of trumpets? He can go on and veto the bill. The soldier cannot help himself. I can imagine, as I said a moment ago, the kind of disappointment it is going to be to the soldier. Every soldier, and the wife of every soldier, and every son and daughter of every soldier, has figured out exactly what he was going to get. They have figured out that the soldier was going to have so many dollars and then he would do this and that with the money; he would buy food and he would buy clothes. They have figured what he would buy. Every soldier, as he sat in front of the fireplace with his family, or as the family gathered around the table, has discussed the matter with his wife and his children.

Every one of the veterans has spent this money in his mind, or planned what he was going to do with it when he got it. Every one of them knows what he is going to do with his money when he gets it. Every one of them feels that the Congress of the United States has the power to give them the money.

There has been a big majority of Congress which has been delivered. So why should it be necessary to have a public veto out of its regular order? For no other purpose that can be alleged under the sun except it is decided there has got to be a precedent broken, and a veto message delivered such as has never been delivered before. Congress has never had such a veto message delivered to it in such a manner.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator had concluded his remarks.

Mr. LONG. No; I have not concluded my remarks. Does the Senator wish me to yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. I shall wait until the Senator shall have concluded his remarks.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

Mr. President, I am of the opinion that Mr. Roosevelt can get someone to listen to him without having to call Congress. The prestige of the President's office will always get him attention. From the mere fact alone that he is President he gets a great deal more attention than Members of Congress could get. So far as I am able to see, I believe that if I were in the President's shoes tonight I would gladly welcome being told by the Congress, "Inasmuch as you have decided to present to us a veto, send it up through the regular channels. Do not use the soldier as the means of breaking the precedent. Do not use the soldier for that purpose."

My contention is that the President of the United States had no business doing it. We have shown a rather great liberality toward the President here. I say that because I include myself with the body corporate of the 95 Members of the Senate and while I have not voted with all 95 Members, or with the majority, nonetheless the action of the Senate is the action of the Senate, and I therefore say "we."

We have shown an unusual liberality toward the President. We have most scrupulously guarded him from disclosures and investigations from which others have not been guarded. There is an old, old saying that he who lives by the sword shall die by the sword. The President has been zealous to take action against those who have been his political enemies. He has gone into every one of them personally and privately, and into their personal matters, and whoever has disagreed with the President politically has had everything done that could be done to give him whatever personal discomfort that could be brought about. It has been done, Mr. President, probably we would say properly, but none the less he has done it. The President of the United States has hounded every political enemy that he has with every process of the Government that he has seen fit to exercise or deal with. That has been the policy. But when we have undertaken to inquire into the simple acts of a member of the Cabinet, of such men as Mr. James A. Farley, what do we find?

While we voted to explore into the caverns and into the recesses to see what might have been done by Mr. Harry M. Daugherty, nonetheless when there are allegations and affidavits here as to the misconduct on the part of Mr. Farley we reverse the procedure of this body and decline to inquire into the conduct of Mr. Farley.

I think everyone knows that there is a prohibition of law against mishandling the stamps of the Government. Everyone knows that. Everyone knows, because I have had cases where the question has come up, that if a postmaster or a man working in a post office or the Post Office Department makes away with 55 cents' or 60 cents' worth of stamps, it is a violation of law and that he can be sent to the penitentiary for it. That is the law. Whether it is right or not, it is the law.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. Does the Senator think that the Postmaster General violated the income-tax law in the case of the perforated stamps which he gave away to his numerous friends amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars?

Mr. LONG. I did not get the Senator's question.

Mr. SCHALL. Does not the Senator think the Postmaster General violated the income-tax law when he gave perforated stamps to his numerous friends all over the country, amounting in value to hundreds of thousands of dollars?

Mr. LONG. There is not any question that he violated the law.

Mr. SCHALL. I wonder if he made a report to the Income Tax Unit on that matter? I understand the law says he cannot give away valuable things without reporting them and paying a tax on them.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make a point of order again that that is not a question.

Mr. LONG. Answering the Senator's question, it is not only my understanding but it is my knowledge of the law that I read and produced in the Senate, that one cannot give such things away without violating the law, and it is further within my personal knowledge, and I make that statement, ready and willing and able to produce the proof, that the value of these stamps amounted to many thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars, and in some cases many people got that money. That was a violation of law in the case of every living one of them who misused those stamps, and Farley was the original one of them.

Now, I say we have been very, very liberal about the matter. When I asked for an investigation of Mr. Farley, the Senate did not make the investigation. I asked for it, and my colleagues saw fit not to order it. I do not quarrel with my colleagues about it, and neither in public or private have I talked to them about it, nor shall I. But it goes to show the liberality with which we have acted. There has been no investigation or prosecution on account of income tax or for the mishandling of those stamps. On the contrary, those stamps were given to whoever wished them.

I never did say it, Mr. President, but I am prepared with a great deal more proof than I alleged. I had alleged enough that if it were going to do a bit of good in the world I would have had the investigation, and I knew it, and there was not any use to allege any more; but if the Senate should ever see it proper to reverse its attitude which it has taken, I am prepared with abundant truth to substantiate those charges, which are as serious as the offenses of which Harry M. Daugherty was ever accused at any time, but the Senate sees fit not to inquire into it. It has that right. It has the right conscientiously and from good motives not to inquire into it. It sees fit not to have the investigation. It sees fit not to do as to Mr. Farley what it saw fit to do as to Mr. Harry M. Daugherty when he was driven from the Cabinet.

There has to be some day of reckoning. We are citizens of the United States. We came here as citizens of the United States. We have certain inalienable rights which cannot be taken from us.

All men are citizens. There is a rank of equality. But when we single out in the United States and say to every man, "You are going to be prosecuted for some kind of violation of the Federal law if you are not a friend of this national administration; we are going to prosecute every man in the United States who has committed the slightest political offense against the cause or purposes of this national administration; but if you will come with the boys, you can do whatever you want to do", we are beginning to undermine everything on which our Government has ever stood. That is what we say. We say as to Farley and as to Farley's pals, "No prosecution, no investigation, nothing else." But as to the man out of politics, if there be a suspicion, we are going to spend millions of dollars exploring into him to find out if there is not some kind of pernicious punishment which can be inflicted on that kind of man. That is where the Government begins to decay.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. It is now a little after 6 o'clock, and I observe there are only eight Senators present. May I ask the Senator how long he will probably continue to talk?

Mr. LONG. I think I shall continue for some time.

Mr. COUZENS. We may have other things to do.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator from Michigan has anything to do and will be back here in 3 hours, that will be very satisfactory. There will not be any vote in the Senate within the next 3 hours. [Laughter.]

We begin to undermine government whenever we start out to prefer men. Up to this time I believe I have never heard the charge in my State that the courts of the State had been used for politics in the prosecution or defense of crime. I do not believe that has ever been done. I do not believe it has ever been charged. The only man I ever knew of who was directly affected by legislation was several days ago when there was a bill in our State that provided some prescriptive period in a matter of forgery, making it the same as it would be in the matter of many other crimes. That happened to be a gentleman we were affecting who was no particular friend of ours.

However, when we came to the case of Farley it is a different matter. Farley's department has today 100 or 1,000 men, if it has 1, in the penitentiaries of the United States who have been sent there for violation of very simple postal laws. Those men are there now. They will serve out their terms. Yet there is not one of them who did what Farley did or half what Farley did, or who in name or number or amount of dollars did what Farley did. What is the difference? A little man in a post office slips $500 out of the cash drawer and puts it in his pocket and tries to hide it until he can make it up and put it back. Then he never gets the money to pay it back and is finally sent to the penitentiary for taking that money out of the cash drawer. What is the difference between that man and another man, like Farley, who does not sneak around to get money out of the cash drawer, but who goes into the Government Printing Office, calls in the foreman, calls in the printer, and has printed for himself several hundred thousand dollars in value of stamps and hands them out to his friends wherever he wants to give them away, and who has thus violated every law there is on the books and yet is not even called to account for a single dime?
